ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1920.

HOURS OF LABOR AT SEA

A cable message has been received by Andrew Furuseth from Havelock Wilson, President of the International Seafarers' Federation, announcing the date and place for the international conference to discuss and, if possible, settle the cotroversy over hours of labor at sea. The meeting is scheduled to be held on January 23 next, at Brussels, Belgium. Representatives of shipowners and seamen from at least ten of the principal maritime nations will be present and the International Seamen's Union of America is strongly urged to take part in the conference. According to the cable message, representation of seafarers will be three delegates from each country—one from the sailors, one from the firemen and one from the officers.

Last week's Journal dealt with the forthcoming conference in some detail and there is no need for repeating. The question of the American seamen's participation in the conference will probably not be settled until the annual convention of the International Seamen's Union of America, which will commence on January 10 at Philadelphia, Pa. If the matter is disposed of during the first few days of the convention there will still be sufficient time for the delegates to get across the Atlantic.

The Brussels conference, it should be remembered, will be held by authority of the International Labor Office, functioning under the League of Nations. It will be the first real international convention at which representation is limited to delegates from the organized shipowners and the organized seamen.

Many Americans living East of the Rocky Mountains cannot understand California's attitude toward the Japanese. Recent census reports show that the Territory of Hawaii already is Japanized as to population having 110,000 Japanese out of a total population of 256,000. Californians do not wish to be rude, but they firmly object to a similar Japanizing process of the Golden State.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Under the National health insurance laws of Great Britain the Sailors and Firemen's Union acts as an "Approved Society" fully authorized to carry on an insurance business and to pay sickness, disablement and maternity benefits. From the commencement of the Act, January 13, 1913, to December 31, 1919, the Union has paid in benefits to members the sum of £83,188 8s. 11d. During the last year the benefits paid were £13,143 15s. 7d.

According to the annual report of Treasurer Chambers, just received, we learn that a new scale of contributions and benefits came into operation in July this year. The normal rate of contributions for Class A contributors now being tenpence per week, equally divided between employer and workman; the rate in Ireland being eightpence per week, equally divided between employer and workman. The normal rate for seamen on foreign-going vessels is now eightpence per week, of which the employer pays threepence and the seaman fivepence, reduced to sevenpence per week in the case of men resident in Ireland, the employer paying threepence and the seaman fourpence.

The ordinary sickness benefit is now fifteen shillings, and disablement benefit seven shillings and sixpence per week, as against ten shillings and five shillings, respectively. The maternity benefit has been increased to forty shillings as against thirty shillings.

The recorded fact that the British Seamen's Approved Society paid £3,500 3s. 4d. in maternity benefits during the past year is highly significant. There was a time, and it was quite a long time too, when sailors and firemen simply could not think of matrimony. The sailor was "supposed to have" a wife in every port. Well, the truth was he could not afford to maintain a wife in any one port. But due to "poor Jack's" organized self-help things have changed a little for the better. And the British Seamen's Approved Society with its record of maternity benefits paid during the past year should furnish another answer to every "doubting Thomas."

All things come to those who wait—and work while they wait!

THE TIPPING EVIL.

Something entirely new in the field of American journalism is a monthly periodical "opposed to all forms of tipping."

Happily, so far as America is concerned, Happily, so far as America is concerned, the tipping evil is in its infancy—at least it becomes non-consequential when compared with prevailing methods in Europe. In many of the countries on the continent of Europe restaurants have reduced the tipping system to a fine science. Tips based upon a standard rate, ranging all the way from 10 to 25 per cent. of the bill, are simply added to the customer's account. Every foreigner is, of course, expected to do some direct tipping on the side. Refusal to do so will promptly take the joy out of life and no experienced traveler would dare to adopt such drastic means.

President Gompers is quoted in the anti-tipping publication and his views are very much to the point. Speaking of personal experience in Europe President Gompers says:

> The tipping evil, bad as it is becoming in America, is in Europe universal, and accepted by all classes of travelers as an inevitable nuisance. It often borders on blackmail. Tippers go raving mad in recounting their wrongs under the tryannies of the system, the newspapers by turn rail or make merry over it, the hotel keepers and other employers of the class have their excuse that they pay wages to their servants—but the tipping goes on forever. Why is it? Who is to blame?
> These questions I asked representative waiters—for representatives these men have, many of them being organized in benefit societies and a small proportion in a sort of trade union. But one answer was given. The system is detestable to every man or woman of the serving class possessing the least degree of self-respect. It is demoralizing to all who either receive or give tips. The real beneficiaries of the system are the employers. An end to it, with a fair standard of wages, would be a boon of the first order to the employes, a means of compelling hotel proprietors to put their businesses on a basis of fair dealing, and an incalculable aid to the tranquillity and pleasure of the general public.

But who is to take the initiative in abolishing an evil so ancient and yet abhorrent to self-respecting men and women?

Individuals can not do it, but organizations of workers can. And they are doing it whenever legitimate wages are raised to a point where gratuities will no longer be necessary. Under existing conditions it is only too true that tips often make up the difference between a starvation wage and a living wage.

GOOD FOR NORTH DAKOTA!

The recent nation-wide political cyclone left behind a number of wrecks, but it had its compensating features.

Just, "for instance," every true lover of political progress will rejoice in the fact that the organized farmers and the organized laborers of North Dakota have again demonstrated the power of a united front against a common enemy, rallied their heroic forces against a mighty onslaught of the big interests and won.

It is almost a necessity to record this fact, because the kept press have (as usual) allowed the impression to get out that the Nonpartisan League was beaten in North Dakota this fall. So let us take note of the victory:

Governor Lynn J. Frazier was re-elected for the third time.

Dr. E. F. Ladd, president of the North Dakota Agricultural College and for twenty years a champion of the people's rights in the agricultural sections of America, was elected to the United States Senate—the first victory of its kind the League has won.

William Lemke, one of the founders and always the head and front of the League movement in North Dakota, is elected Attorney-General and replaces the present incumbent, William Langer, who turned traitor to the League and for two years has been doing his utmost to destroy the movement.

Frank Millhollan, vice-president of the State Federation of Labor and member of the Railroad Commission, has been re-elected and the League will henceforth control that body.

Members of the Industrial Commission and practically all the candidates on the Republican ticket with Governor Frazier were elected. Congressman Baer was defeated, but Sinclair is re-elected.

The State Senate has a safe League majority, but the control of the lower house is still in doubt. The outcome on certain initiated measures is also still in doubt, but whatever the final results they cannot change the fact that the Nonpartisan League has won a decisive victory once more and will maintain its control of North Dakota and go forward more effectively than ever with its splendid program of humanitarian and progressive measures.

THE UNORGANIZED WORKERS.

An Oakland, Cal., labor exchange thinks there is a valuable lesson for working people generally in the recently announced cut of ten per cent. in the wages at the California Cotton Mills in Oakland.

There is no union at the cotton mills. Many women and children are employed. In the cotton mills wages were among the lowest paid in this district during and before the war. Now that the war is over the management is taking a lead in the move to cut wages, giving for an excuse the slump in the cotton textile market. The management states that prices have fallen 65 per cent. and that unless wages are reduced the mill must be closed. Being without organization, the workers are helpless. The best they could do was to hold an indignation meeting and prevent the cut from being more than 10 per cent. One is reminded of the words of Clarence Darrow when before the Industrial Relations Commission and asked what would have been the effect had there been no labor organizations during the past twenty-five or thirty years. He said:

"Unless it had taken some other form, they would have been like the wageworkers of China or any other country where there is no organization; they would simply have gradually reduced the standards of living. Competition of workmen would have prevented better working conditions and lowered the standard of living."

The Shipping Board is in the headlines of the news nearly every day of the year. The very latest news from Washington is to the effect that deficiency appropriations aggregating $100,000,000 will be asked by the Shipping Board before the end of the fiscal year. The additional money will be necessary, officials of the board say, because of the action of Congress in limiting expenditures to revenues obtained by the board from the operation of ships, the sale of ships and the settlement of claims. Expenditures for the fiscal year are expected to total about $325,000,000. Revenues will total not more than $225,000,000. If the War Department had settled all the claims which are pending the board probably would have sufficient money to go through the year without asking a deficiency appropriation. So far, however, the War Department has paid the Shipping Board only $40,000,000 out of a total of $200,000,000 which is in dispute. The poor old Shipping Board seems to be loaded down to the gunwales—not with money—but with disputes.

The instincts of woman and the interests of labor are conjoined in the union label. Both stand for cleanliness, morality, the care of the young, the sanctity of the home; both stand against strife and force.

ECONOMIC FACTORS ANALYZED

Charles M. Kelley of the Plumb Plan League Reviews the Present Industrial Depression and the Causes Back of it.

It is undeniably true that changing economic factors have temporarily disrupted industry and in a measure at least are responsible for decreased employment. Inability to market goods in Europe, because of the unsettled and impossible exchange situation, is a considerable element in the situation. Disinclination of the public to buy at exorbitant prices has lessened demand and decreased production. A critical financial situation, due to the efforts of frightened bankers to check speculation and liquidate questionable loans, plays its part. The nation is passing through a period of readjustment that inevitably must be attended with unsatisfactory incident.

But more than natural economic forces are at work. It must not be forgotten that for months large business interests have been getting ready for a down-the-line assault upon labor, and that the opening gun of this struggle was primed for firing immediately after the national election. Vast sums of money have been gathered for a conflict that in all likelihood will be the most important and the most decisive in the industrial relations of master and men.

Taking advantage of conditions that are favorable to their campaign, professional haters of labor are systematically increasing unemployment, and the situation is already so serious that charitable organizations in large centers of population are getting ready to meet an extraordinary demand for relief during the winter. Appeals now made upon them tax their resources. Predictions that bread lines will be everywhere established probably will soon be realized.

There is no such thing as overproduction in the sense that human wants are measurably supplied. Millions of men, women and children are underfed and underclothed, in America as well as in Europe, where the conditions are pitiably abject and distressing. The United States is short more than a million homes. Coal bins are empty. Everywhere there is a demand for materials greatly in excess of the supply. It may be said, then, that overproduction in any real sense is a minus quantity.

That the unemployment crisis is very largely artificial is susceptible to easy proof. In a statement recently issued by an organization that is backing the open shop agitation is given a list of more than a thousand large employers of labor who are pledged to lend their material and moral support to the campaign to curb the workers—"to put them back in their places" and keep them there.

The railroads are laying off thousands of men. The Pennsylvania system since October first has discharged more than ten thousand, and those affected have been told that their services are permanently ended and they may seek elsewhere for work. By following the policy of suspending men continuously the railway managers expect, no doubt, to break the morale of the men and make the disruption of their organizations a comparatively easy matter.

The textile manufacturers very frankly announce that they accept the situation as affording them an opportunity to get rid of "agitators" and perhaps destroy their organizations. In Philadelphia, it is announced, more than 150,000 textile workers are to be discharged, not because there is no need of their services, but because the manufacturers desire to free themselves of men who have during the past few years built up an organization that has revolutionized conditions of employment in the textile industry.

There are, when this article is written, more than 2,500,000 idle men in this country. The list is being increased at the rate of thousands daily. No one can calculate what proportions the movement will attain before it is definitely checked. If it is to be the fight to the finish predicted by the agencies that are actively supporting the open shop campaign, it is certain that to the rigors of winter will be added misery such as we have not seen in many years.

The workers, by accepting longer hours and less pay, may regain their positions, but they are not inclined to do so. They know that living costs have not materially decreased. While the price of a number of commodities has dropped during the past two months, there has been no reduction of rents, and the workers are paying more than ever for coal and other essential commodities. To accept, under the circumstances, lower wages means that they must also accept lowered living standards.

The manufacturers believe that the growing army of the unemployed, augmented by the incoming hordes from Europe, will soon start a competition for jobs that will bring about the result for which they are striving—the destruction of labor groups and the breaking down of wage standards that have been built up, not because labor was greedy and arrogant, but because, for the first time in several decades, labor was in position to say something about what it should receive for its services.

Manufacturers say that the workers are "not now so cocky." There has been no break in their ranks, but they rely upon starvation to

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

GATLING GUN GOVERNMENT

The old Lone Star State of Texas has evidently reverted back to the ancient stage of military despotism which was the bulwark of the old feudal system of the dark ages.

At the present rate of political retrogression Texas seems destined soon to become the Lost Star State with a dictator firmly established upon a throne.

To Comrade H. Londema, agent at Port Arthur, Texas, of the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union, we are indebted for the possession of two historical documents which have recently reached our table.

One of these is a complete copy of the Hobby Open Port, Anti-Strike, Anti-Union, un-American and Anti-Free Speech bill, as enacted by an overwhelming Democratic majority of the fourth called session of the Thirty-sixth Texas Legislature.

The other document is a formal and authoritative protest solemnly declared by the Executive Board of the Texas State Federation of Labor against the Act, and an official denunciation of the Democratic party in exclusive control of the Texas Legislature and State Administration held responsible for its passage and approval.

Judging from the tenor of this protest it seems an obvious conclusion that organized labor in Texas had first been shrewdly beguiled, then basely betrayed by the Democratic party in regard to the Open Port bill.

In the preamble to its formal declaration, issued at the city of Temple, October 13, 1920, the Executive Board of the Texas Federation of Labor openly and unreservedly accuses the Democratic party in the saddle of gross infidelity to its pre-election pledges regarding the Open Port bill, and at the same time denounces the Republican party for its indorsement of the same measure, and calls upon all wage earners within the State to support the American party, and Hon. T. H. McGregor for governor.

Since we have not yet been favored with the returns of the recent election in Texas, we can only guess the direful result. Our guess would be, however, founded upon other similar contests that the Democratic party in Texas has been temporarily dethroned, leaving the Open Port Law as a legacy to its apt and willing temporary successor, the Republican party to hand out to the Texas toilers as a New Year's gift from the preceding administration, while the faithful American party proceeds to reorganize and realign its scattered forces for the next campaign.

Meanwhile what will be the condition and prospects of Labor in the big Southern State under the new regime effective January 2, 1921?

The Hobby law was the logical and final point of a special session of the Texas Legislature, ostensibly called by the Governor for an entirely different purpose.

The Hobby bill was a prearranged and privily planned measure.

Governor Hobby's real motive in calling the extra session of the Legislature, it is said, became obvious to all interested observers from the first, and there never was the slightest doubt as to his sinister purpose from the time the call was issued. "It at once became apparent," says the report before us, "that back of it all was a sinister motive on the part of the Governor of Texas, and that motive was the passage of a statute which would make peons of the wage workers of Texas."

"The legislature had not yet convened," continues the report, "when the Texas press announced that the Governor intended to submit his Open Port bill. . . . And a copy of said bill had been previously mailed to every member of the legislature with a letter requesting an expression from the legislators as to whether or not they would support the measure."

It is further declared in the Labor report referred to, that in its anxiety to force this bill through, the House of Representatives by motion referred the draft of the measure to the Committee on State Affairs, even before the Governor had submitted his message on the subject. After a brief season of backing and filling over the proposed law, a substitute measure introduced by Mr. Newt Williams was finally adopted by the House, 77 yeas to 27 nays, and was so ratified by the Senate, and immediately approved by the Executive. Such will be the military law, superseding the civil law in case of a strike in the State of Texas from and after January 2, 1921. Any detailed discussion of the pernicious, reactionary and despotic features of this mediaeval act on our part would be entirely superfluous. Only the barest reference to its predominating features will suffice to inform our readers of its portent and purpose.

The Texas Strike Suppression Act is, in effect, a military mandate to be enforced by fixed bayonets and field artillery in the hands of Texas rangers, tin sojers and such other irresponsibles as the Governor may see fit to scrape together to wage guerilla warfare against honest toilers.

In all parts of Texas there are hordes of idle, irrepressible gunmen who will always be willing to do some private shooting for State pay. In all probability it was precisely this lawless state of affairs that in the first instance suggested the Hobby Act.

This Act comprises eighteen sections, all aimed directly at the subjugation of Labor, the suppression of free speech and print, and the total disintegration of Labor Unions within the State. Any who doubt the bluntness of this assertion have only to consider the following excerpts from the statute itself, or go to Texas and find out at first hand.

According to sections 1 and 2 of this lawless act the words "Common carriers" and "Commerce," while presumably relating to transportation or the handling of commodities in transit, are so broadly construed and specifically defined as to cover practically every occupation in the State. Section 3 is an apology for the public infliction of an unconstitutional and reactionary law.

Section 5 of the Act prohibits the use of any abusive language spoken or written to any person engaged in loading or unloading or transporting any commerce within the State.

But section 6 is more explicit on this point, and its language is so impressive and imperialistic that we feel privileged to quote it in full.

"Sec. 6. Every person who shall through any act or written communication or conversation with any person or persons engaged in loading, or unloading, or transporting any commerce by any common carrier in Texas, or with the father, mother, wife, sister, brother or child or children of such person or persons while so engaged, or during the hours of day or night while not engaged in such work, and when employed for such work which is reasonably calculated, intended or designed to cause such person or persons so engaged to desist from performing such work through fear of physical violence or destruction of his property shall be deemed to have intimidated, molested or harassed such person or persons engaged in the work of loading or unloading or transporting commerce within this State."

This is putting on the muzzle with a force bridle, and we leave our readers to supply their own italics.

Section 7 defines the meaning of the terms "person or persons" as used in this Act, and concludes thusly: "This section by naming certain occupations and work shall not be construed to exclude any other occupation or work not named, but reasonably incident to and necessary for the transportation of commerce in this State by common carriers."

Section 8 briefly provides that: "The provisions of this Act shall not apply to peace officers in the discharge of their lawful duties."

The meaning and intent of the foregoing sections are as plain as the ears on a jackass. All the labor of Texas has been harnessed to the iron-clad chariots of the transportation monopolies by sea or land, and the police power of the State has been appointed public slave driver.

Section 9 of the Hobby Act provides that any person offending against its provisions without threat or violence "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1000, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not less than thirty days, nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

But by a proviso to the same section, any violation of the law attended by a threat or act of violence is declared to be a felony, punishable by imprisonment in the State penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years.

The Texas State Federation of Labor in discussing this particular section quaintly asks to be informed what it is a man can do and live without breaking the law.

Mr. Newt Williams, the father of this pernicious act as amended and passed, responds in a speech on the floor of the Texas House of Representatives: "He can quit his job and leave town!"

Sections 10 and 11 empower the Governor of the State to declare martial law by proclamation in case of a strike, and to assume complete police and military jurisdiction over the parts or areas affected.

Section 12 prohibits civil officers from making arrests within the zones covered at any time by the Governor's proclamation.

Sections 13, 14 and 15 of the Act provide for its enforcement and for changes of venue, etc., under existing State laws.

Section 16 provides for the enforcement of this act without a formal declaration of martial law. The Governor is authorized to call upon the State rangers to assist in its enforcement, "and if a sufficient number of rangers are not available, the Governor is authorized to employ any number of men to be designated as 'special rangers,' and such men shall have all the power and authority of the regular rangers, and shall be paid the same salary as the rangers are paid, and such salaries shall be paid out of the appropriation made to the executive office for the payment of rewards and enforcement of the law."

Section 17 clothes the Governor with unlimited authority to declare martial law and call forth the militia to do his bidding upon his own initiative.

By a rider to this section: "This Act shall be construed as cumulative of existing laws in this State (Texas), and shall not be held to repeal any of the same except where in direct conflict therewith."

The 18th and final section of the Order of Subjection justifies its hasty enactment under suspension of the "constitutional rule," etc., etc., as an emergency measure, and an act of "great importance to the expeditious transportation of commerce in the State and the unrestricted movement of commerce by common carriers."

Such, in brief, are the principal features of the malign and despotic Open Port Law of the Sovereign State of Texas. It applies primarly to shipping, but extends, according to construction and interpretation, to all other co-ordinate crafts.

By the specific language of section 7, the law applies to cotton presses and pipelines; then why not to cotton gins, oil wells, harvesters or any other industry allied to, or dependent upon transportation or commerce as a marketing outlet, as all occupations are, more or less, or directly or indirectly so dependent or allied?

In our humble judgment, the enactment of this drastic law in the State of Texas is a defiant challenge by both wings of the great political octopus, sprawling over the State and representing organized monopoly in both houses of the legislature, to a fight to the finish against organized labor on the great open shop issue now engaging the attention of the country.

Organized Labor will neither dodge the issue nor decline the gage of battle.

Organized Labor has been buffaloed by both the dominant political parties just long enough to become cognizant of its own inherit power. And the next four years will witness a mighty change and transformation in its policies and tactics; a mighty impetus in its activities and methods, and still mightier accessions to its membership and ranks.

The European war is over, and the League of Nations is buried beyond hope of resurrection in so far as Organized Labor is concerned. Let us, then, while an opportunity offers, turn our attention to other dominant and prevailing issues far more pertinent to the prosperity of Labor in general and posterity in particular. Aristotle said that without slavery there could be no civilization. That was an ancient truism, and capital believes it yet. Therefore they still inspire their legislative engineers to erect new battlements upon the moldering ruins of ancient despotisms. They are striving to compress the irresistible torrents of human advancement within a barrier of sand.

But woe betide their castle when the deluge bursts forth. J. H. W.

LEGAL NOTES AND NOTICES.

All seamen who were members of the crew of the S. S. "Eastern Glade," when she picked up the S. S. "Cansumset" on May 5, 1920, while on a voyage from Portland, Ore., to Baltimore, Md., and towed her into Bilboa, Spain, are hereby advised to communicate at once with George T. Mister, Esq., Attorney at Law, 814 Law Building, 225 Courtland Street, Baltimore, Md.

All claims for salvage in this case have been settled, and the sums awarded are now payable on demand.

This week's reports bring the usual toll of "Red Record" cases to the Courts.

Among numerous sanguinary incidents listed for trial by Attorney Silas B. Axtell, we mention a few:

Gustaf Rested, a seaman on the "Royal Arrow," was gassed while asleep in his bunk at Beaumont, Texas, by fumigation of the ship with cyanide of potassium. Rested was not awakened nor notified that fumigation was about to begin. He was unconscious when discovered and only revived after thirty-five minutes of incessant and vigorous treatment by his shipmates. Rested is still suffering from congestion of the lungs and throat and it was only by an inch that his life was saved. Rested is an American, an oiler by occupation and was gassed Nov. 11, 1920, at 3 p. m. Members of the crew of the "Royal Arrow" who may be cognizant of the facts in this case are requested to communicate with Rested's attorney.

A young American boy, 17 years of age, has lost a thumb and all the fingers of one hand except the index finger by having his hand caught in the turns on a gasoline winch head, while serving as an ordinary seaman on the schooner "Friendship." The accident is reported to have resulted from lack of a fair lead to the winch head and no means of stopping the engine from the deck.

A similar accident occurred to a colored seaman, John Ford, recently, in the schooner "Billy Martin." Ford is now in the U. S. Marine Hospital at New York and is crippled for life. His right leg is twisted and deformed out of all intent of usefulness and is eight inches shorter than God made it.

We have been more or less familiar with these stinkoline contrivances ever since the first one was installed in a three topsail schooner. They are mean shipmates. Their principal value to the shipowner lies in saving the engineer's wages. When a buzz winch has been installed the donkeyman can go shack. But that leaves no one in the house to control the blamed devil device. Whenever it is necessary to hoist, or heave, or haul, the mate or somebody goes in and starts the machine and leaves it running until the work is done, or the crippling is done, whichever first happens. As a rule no means of controlling the power from the deck are provided. Unless the men at the winch heads, or in the windlass room are able to shut off or reverse the power instantly accidents are bound to occur when these labor-saving, death-dealing contrivances are used. Those who disregard safety values should be liable for damages incurred by their own parsimony.

The case of Pedro Del Rio vs. the Standard Oil Co. presents an unusual instance of terrible injuries, brutal neglect, legal quibbling and Court prejudice unfathomable.

Del Rio, when suddenly called from the deck while employed on a steamer lying at Tuxpam, Mexico, unknowingly stepped into an unguarded grating hatch left open by the engineer. He fell twenty-seven feet to the bottom of the compartment, sustaining a multiple fracture of his right arm, which was broken in five places, a simple fracture of the left arm and an injury to his spine which paralyzed one leg.

Del Rio begged to be sent to the hospital at Tampico, but this request was refused by the master on the ground that it would involve too much expense. The ship called at New Orleans and Key West on the passage North, but the master likewise refused to send the crippled oiler to hospital in either of those places,—probably because it would have been too much trouble.

Even after arriving at New York, the captain delayed as long as possible before sending the injured man to the Marine Hospital.

All these events happened in January, 1918.

Del Rio at once began suit for damages, through his attorney, Mr. Axtell, and was eventually discharged from the hospital crippled for life.

Suit was commenced in the State Supreme Court in Brooklyn, and when the case was reached about a year and three months afterward, counsel for the defense secured a postponement to enable them to take testimony of their witnesses. They must have been on a vacation in the interval.

When the case finally did come to trial a week ago the Court arbitrarily ruled out all evidence pertaining to the acccident, or the nature and extent of the seaman's injuries, basing the action solely on the ground of neglect to treat.

The attitude assumed by his honor was so manifestly prejudiced and unfair that counsel for the plaintiff was compelled to

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(By Laurence Todd)

Herbert Hoover was called in, the other day, to talk to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor on the industrial and financial outlook, and on possible lines of agreement between the organized workers and the technical men—especially the engineers—which would lead toward a reduction of the dangers of unemployment.

Mr. Gompers and his associates have been opposed to unemployment insurance. They were also opposed, on the best of grounds, to the make-up of the Hoover commission on industrial relations, appointed by President Wilson a year ago. They were opposed to the vague declarations made by that commission in its report. They have always opposed "scientific management" as it was applied in private and public employment in speeding up the workers.

Why, then, the consultation with Hoover?

I am informed by Mr. Gompers' office that political motives had nothing to do with it. The officers of the A. F. of L. were not trying to "lay a pipe line" into the Harding administration or into the Republican party. They were merely advising with a neutral engineer.

In all the circumstances there is a hint of the early announcement by the A. F. of L. executives of a positive program of some sort, which will be meant to compete with the program of industrial democracy embodied in the Plumb Plan for railroads and other basic industries. As day by day thousands of active trade unionists are laid off by the employers in every State, and the banks and great corporations report their own conditions growing worse, while the farmers are unable to pay their debts to the grocer and doctor and coal man, the full scope of the crime embodied in the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act becomes more clear. Organized labor is awakening to the fact that the bosses have made a terrible blunder, and that the whole fabric of industrial and financial security is breaking down. They dread the situation which may face the nation by New Year's Day. They are looking around for a way out. Industrial democracy—the running of the world's work by the workers—appeals to their judgment as a sound plan. The executives of the A. F. of L. are not sure of it; they have tried to stem the tide. Now they may be framing a compromise or substitute program.

Herbert Hoover has never been a fanatical and noisy enemy of organized labor, as has Secretary of State Colby, for example. Hoover's engineering work in China gave him direction of large numbers of coolies, and his work in Australia gave him authority over white miners. In his food distribution work he has dealt with subordinates and with big corporations and diplomats. In the field of national politics he divided the 1920 honors with Governor Cox as a conspicuous loser. He has never been placed in a position where his real sentiments toward industrial democracy were disclosed by struggle. Hence his advice as an engineer at this time is probably as disinterested as could be obtained from any big engineer whose income is drawn from powerful corporations.

In the background is the fact of unemployment and industrial unrest, and the machinery for a general agitation for industrial democracy. If Hoover has no plan that is workable, and if the executive council of the A. F. of L. fails to bring out a workable substitute, then it is reasonable to assume that the railroad workers, the mine workers, the timber workers, the iron and steel workers and possibly the textile and clothing workers will find some means of developing a program covering those basic industries. They must propose to the public a means of keeping those essential industries in operation, so that disaster may not overwhelm all the industries of the country. They must meet the issues of economy, regular volume of output, and sound marketing.

But Hoover and the executive council are apparently going to make the first move.

All week the executive council has met in secret session, and at intervals has emerged to deny what the newspapers have printed as to its work. It denied with considerable warmth, for instance, the Associated Press article of November 17, declaring that the council and "capital" were likely to get together on a plan of eliminating "radicals" from the labor movement. This was the first time since the Cabin Creek coal strike in West Virginia or the Calumet & Hecla copper strike in upper Michigan that the Associated Press had ventured to come into the open with a big attack on the whole spirit of the labor movement. By impugning to the executive officers of the A. F. of L. a willingness to go into a deal with the bosses to defeat the "radicals"—by whom presumably it meant the Plum Plan League and other Government-ownership advocates—the A. P. may have displeased some of its members who consider Messrs. Gompers, Tobin and Woll to be Bolshevists, but it surely did not please Messrs. Gompers, Tobin and Woll, either. There was emphatic denial that any plan or idea of trying to drive "radicals" from the A. F. of L. had been discussed.

Flynn of the Boston News Writers' local has been here, trying to get recognition of the claims of the News Writers for an international charter separate from that of the International Typographical Union. He argues that the Typos have never carried out in good faith their obligation to organize the news writers, over whom they hold jurisdiction, and that if this jurisdiction is surrendered the news writers will organize themselves. One powerful argument against Flynn's proposal, which is seldom voiced but is fully understood in high circles, is that news writers have often a considerable advantage in forming opinion among the workers in a locality as to the right and wrong in a given situation. Hence, unions of other crafts are possibly fearful of the power which unionized news writers might develop. They might be too active in behalf of certain ideas in the labor movement, or in behalf of certain men.

On the whole, the chances are that the Typos will hold their jurisdiction, and that news writers will remain largely unorganized.

Mexican affairs have probably been talked over by the council also, since announcement was made that Messrs. Gompers, Woll, Tobin, Rickert and John Frey would go to Mexico City on January 10 as the delegation from the A. F. of L. to the Pan-American Federation of Labor's third annual meeting. This delegation represents the conservative element of the council, and one least in sympathy with the recent trend of the Mexican labor movement toward socialism—perhaps even communism. It indicates that there will be a lively debate in Mexico City, and that the same principles which were challenged in the recent denunciation by Mr. Gompers of the International Federation of Trade Unions will be brought up in the southern capital for animated discussion. The recent performance of Secretary Colby, in announcing that recognition of Mexico was about to be realized, and then cutting off all communication with the Mexican government representative here, in most discourteous fashion, has not improved the temper of the leaders of labor below the Rio Grande who are backing the Obregon regime.

The A. F. of L. deplores, as much as anyone could, the action of Colby; but the Mexicans will be less than human if they forget that Colby is an appointee and agent of President Wilson, whom the A. F. of L. has twice helped to elect. Backed by delegations from South America, the Mexicans may find words to express their faith in a program which the leaders of the A. F. of L. will utterly reject.

There is a change in the presonnel of the legislative committtee of the A. F. of L. Henry Sterling of Massachusetts, the chairman for the past two years, has been removed by the executive council. The reason assigned was "lack of activity," if report be true. Sterling is a veteran student of labor legislation and industrial betterment, and for many years was a power in defending labor interests before the Massachusetts legislature. He favored co-operation with the Non-partisan League and other progressive forces, and favored scientific taxation of land values. His health has not been good during the past year—a piece of ill fortune which has been shared by President Gompers and others.

His successor is former President McGrady of the Boston central labor body.

Legislative Agent Sexton, a member of the Cigarmakers, gives way to Edgar Wallace, former editor of the United Mine Workers' Journal, and more recently connected with the A. F. of L. non-partisan political committee here.

W. F. Roberts, the third member of the committee, who is also the press agent of the executive council, remains undisturbed. Roberts was formerly connected with the Hearst papers in Chicago.

Three elementary rights of the worker, based on the fact that he is a social being, were stated to the National Consumers' League convention in Philadelphia last night by W. Jett Lauck, economist for many labor organizations. These three fundamental rights are: A living wage, a basic day as short as is commensurate with the highest efficiency and maximum production, and finally a voice in the control of industry and its operation. This includes the right to bargain collectively with the employer through representatives of labor's own choosing.

Reviewing the anthracite wage award, and the fact that the operators and dealers have raised prices until they are $3.25 a ton higher than a fair price in view of the actual wage advance, Lauck said that this is "a representative example as to how the failure to secure a living wage is productive of discontent, reduced output, and serious loss to the public through recurrent dislocation of industry." He asserted that there can be no real industrial peace until there has been established and defined by law a Magna Charta of industrial rights, which would govern the deliberation of wage boards. So long as wage tribunals satisfy only capital, and are imposed upon a discontented body of workers against their protest, there can be no industrial security in America.

at the point of rifles, will not be punished by the law. Indictments against 206 of the mobbers have been dismissed upon the motion of County Attorney French. The first of the defendants, a hardware merchant, was acquitted last April after a trial that lasted three months.

The County Attorney said it was impossible to go on with the trials because of the inability to get witnesses and the strong sentiment against a continuance of the cases.

Trade unionists are not surprised at the quashing of these indictments. Special interests in this State, headed by copper barons, have maintained a continuous opposition to the prosecution. The plea was made that court costs would increase taxation. Many important witnesses for the State disappeared and demands for vindication of the law were answered by the charge "disloyalty."

The mobbing grew out of a miners' strike called the previous June. The mobbers rounded up their victims, and loaded them into cattle cars and freight cars. They were taken to the desert, 12 miles from Columbus, New Mexico, where the men were unloaded. The United States army went to the relief of the men and removed them to the military camp at Columbus until they dispersed.

The sheriff of the county boldly declared in court that he was responsible for the thuggery. He said he was actuated by patriotic motives.

The mob included business men, bankers and officials of copper mine companies.

Anthracite Owners Evade Publicity.

Anthracite coal owners fear the truth, is the claim of W. Jett Lauck, economist for anthracite miners in their recent arbitration proceedings.

Mr. Lauck declared that only a sweeping investigation of the entire industry could bring about the constructive reforms in the hard coal industry that are necessary to guarantee fair prices.

"The attitude of the anthracite industry," he said, "is strictly negative and devoid of any sense of public responsibility. As a matter of fact, at the recent hearing of the anthracite commission they even claimed that the public was not interested in the proceedings. A further illustration of that attitude is furnished by their refusal at the present time to make any reports to the Federal Trade Commission showing their cost of production.

"The public should demand and secure an investigation which would break down and effectively turn to public benefit the present monopolistic and exploiting alliance between the anthracite-carrying railroads, the coal-producing companies and the coal-sales companies."

Mr. Lauck called attention to the elaborate data and exhibits on anthracite prices and producing costs that were prepared by the miners for submission to the recent anthracite wage commission, appointed by the President. These exhibits were excluded from the records on the plea of the coal owners that it was not the business of the commission, which had been created to settle a wage dispute, to pry into the cost of anthracite production and its relation to wages and the cost of living.

"The coal owners," said Mr. Lauck, "are afraid of publicity. They strenuously opposed the submission of our evidence, and finally, on purely technical grounds, prevailed upon the chairman to exclude these fundamental figures."

protest on behalf of his client, and therefore moved for a non-suit. The motion was granted by the Court after fining the attorney $25 for contempt.

Why can we not punish a Judge for contempt of Justice?

The Standard Oil Company now intimates, through its attorneys, that an offer of settlement might be satisfactory. Whether this will be accepted or a new trial ensue will depend, we presume, on the size and substance of the offer.

Meanwhile, Del Rio remains crippled and destitute, and about 60 per cent. physically incompetent, according to the testimony of the sawbones.

Five members of the Marine Engineers' Benevolent Association, Locals Nos. 33, 35 and 80, of New York, have volunteered to come forward and submit expert practical testimony before the Court in Del Rio's behalf. It is, therefore, believed that a new trial on appeal, or in the Federal Court would be advisable. Because if Del Rio's contentions can be fairly presented and judicially established he should be entitled to substantial damages under existing law.

The foregoing are only a few painful incidents culled at random from our usual red ink calender this week. Lack of space precludes the publication of other sanguinary items in this issue.

We hate to dwell so often on this distressing subject, but hope of final relief through much telling is our only excuse. Like the Irish member who made the same speech four hundred times to convince Parliament, we hope, if we cannot convince the Courts, to secure attention by tiring them out.

ECONOMIC FACTORS ANALYZED

bring that about. By recruiting the ranks of unemployed, they foresee the day when workers will be as abject and submissive as the most autocratic employer could demand. Starvation is autocracy's weapon, and it is using it in a manner that gives all thoughtful citizens cause for pause. The situation is electric with potentialities, but the manufacturers are indifferent to them. They have set out to rule and ruin, and labor faces the most desperate struggle.

Labor News

The current issue of American Pressmen, official magazine of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, prints a large list of localities where wages in this calling have been advanced and working conditions improved. The wage gains are substantial, $10 a week being common. In several instances the figures ar higher than $10.

Officers of the National Federation of Federal Employes are conducting a nation-wide organizing campaign in preparation for demands for improved conditions that will be presented to the coming session of Congress. These officials declare that 250 local affiliates is possible. "The stronger our federation when we go before Congress this winter," they say, "the more progress we will make in legislation in which we are interested."

Contract breaking among business men in the textile industry is so widespread that a national conference has been suggested to evolve a stricter code of ethics among these business men, who refer to broken agreements as "cancellations." These business men vigorously denounce—and rightfully so—groups of workers when they break a contract, but these employers themselves do business in an atmosphere of contract breaking, which has now reached the point where their industry is jeopardized.

Publication of huge profits by the American Can Company has been made by the International Association of Machinists, whose members are attempting to enforce a living wage in the numerous plants of this trust. The figures were compiled by W. Jett Lauck. The company virtually controls the can-making industry in this country. "In 1917," says the report, "the company had net profits of $22,000,000, or about five times as much as the average for the ten previous years, and twice as much as it made in the most prosperous year before the war."

Government statistics do not sustain the claim of non-union employers, who call for "greater production" and who insist that organized labor is a barrier to production, says Con F. Foley, second vice president of the Journeymen Barbers' International Union. "The American people comprise but 5 per cent of the world's population," said the trade unionist, "yet the Government's statistics show that this 5 per cent produce 26 per cent of the agricultural products of the world, 40 per cent of the mineral products and 34 per cent of the manufactured goods."

D. B. Hanna, president of the Canadian National Railways, takes the position that when a worker is employed by the government he shall surrender his citizen rights. Acting on this theory, Mr. Hanna gives notice that employes of the national railways must decline political office, and if they accept they automatically cease to be employed by the road. The order has raised a storm and the official now explains that that is nothing new, but was the rule under private management. The workers reply that this is no defense, and ask if the road would be justified in following other examples of railroads for instance, discharg[illegible] employes because of trade union affiliation?

TERMS ARE REASONABLE

THE MOST PLEASING AND SENSIBLE GIFT THAT MONEY CAN BUY

A difficult task it is to satisfy every whim and caprice when buying gifts at Christmas time. Just the right color, the right material, the right design, the right brand—how can you know just what will please?

An easier and more practical way is to decide right now to give a savings account in the ANGLO-CALIFORNIA TRUST COMPANY—you're at least sure that it will please.

We're very ready to help you make up a savings account gift just the way you want it. If it's for a child, we'll add a handsome nickel-plated bank for home saving. If it's a near and dear relative we'll gladly write a personal letter to the recipient telling about the gift, and from whom it comes.

You also can open a Christmas account for any of your friends. If you wish, you can do it entirely by mail. Simply send check or money order for the amount of the account giving us the full name and address of the person for whom it is opened.

Wouldn't you appreciate such a gift? Certainly your relatives and friends will, too. It's sure to please them—and this year it's decidedly in good taste.

Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,
> FRANK MANNING,
> Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Philadelphia city officials say citizens are robbed of from $2500 to $5000 a day by the short weighing of meats. The most common method is the slapping of a piece of meat on the scales and then grabbing it off the scales before the weight can be registered. Investigations show that butchers do not depend on dishonest scales, but "robbed their patrons while they were looking on."

Evidence of big profits made last year by sugar companies is found in the report of the Cuba Cane Sugar Corporation for the year ending September 2. The net profits were $12,-344,134, or $17.69 a share on the common stock, after dividends on preferred stock were paid and all other charges were met. In the preceding year net profits were $7,384.-580, or the equal of $7.77 on common stock.

Strict Federal control to stop coal profiteering is favored by the District Attorneys of Bronx and Kings counties, New York. The Bronx county official said: "The coal situation today is so bad that I do not know what the people are going to do. I consider stringent Government control a last remedy, but it seems to be the only one. Some means should be found of spreading the delivery of coal equally from early spring until late in the fall. Incentives should be offered to induce the consumers to buy early."

American farmers broke production records of five crops this year, according to preliminary estimates announced by the Department of Agriculture. The report shows that the corn, tobacco, rice, sweet potatoes and pear crops surpassed in size those of any previous year in the country's history. In addition, very large crops were grown—in some instances closely approaching records—of oats, barley, rye, potatoes, apples and hay. The corn yield totaled 3,199,126,000 bushels, or 75,000,-000 bushels more than ever before grown in any one year.

American manufacturers are now doing about twelve times as much export business in a single month as they did in a year a century ago, reports the Department of Commerce. "During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1821," it is stated, "the total value of all export shipments from the United Staates aggregated $51,683,640. Today American manufacturers transact about twelve times that much export business in a single month—the exports for September, 1920, amounting to $606,000,000. During the fiscal year 1920 America's export trade has grown to the remarkable figure of $7,950,000,000."

If the coal owners of this country do not stop gouging the public, the Government will have to take control, declared United States Senators Calder and Edge in a statement just issued. The lawmakers are members of the Senate Committee on Reconstruction. They give notice that "unless the coal industry reforms itself and cuts prices to a reasonable figure by December 6" a bill will be introduced in the Senate which will provide for the "most stringent regulation of every branch of the business." The Senators make the sweeping charge that "the coal industry as a whole stands self-convicted of practicing gross extortion on the whole public of the United States."

Germany must deliver 275,000 tons of shipping to the allies as compensation for the sinking of the German fleet in Scapa Flow, the reparations commission has decided.

The Canada-West Indies trade agreement has been referred by the Bermuda Legislature to a committee for report. The local chamber of Commerce is opposed to ratification.

The Reparations Commission has decided that Germany must deliver 275,000 tons of shipping to the Allies as compensation for the sinking of the German fleet in Scapa Flow.

The Shipping Board has given orders to lie up at Norfolk 24 Lake type steel steamers aggregating about 84,000 tons d.w., on account of the slump in freights and lack of cargo.

Admiral Benson has issued orders to close January 1 the training school for seamen maintained at Camp Stuart, near Newport News, Va. It is now intended to train men afloat.

Admiral Benson has declined to consider the proposition made by the American Steamship Owners' Association that the Shipping Board place its whole fleet on bare-boat charter basis.

The steamer "Leviathan," which is lying at the Hoboken piers, is overrun with rats, and in order to get rid of them it has been decided by the Quarantine authorities to remove all food from the vessel.

The American Line steamers "St. Paul," "Philadelphia" and "New York" have been withdrawn from the trans-Atlantic service for the winter and will be employed on West India cruises until next spring.

The British Admiralty announces that navigation in the North Sea is unrestricted respecting moored mines, except in the districts of Heligoland Bight, Borkum Reef, and North Shipway, Jutland coastal route.

The Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, reports 119 sailing, steam, gas and unrigged vessels of 226,603 gross tons built in the United States and officially numbered during the month of October, 1920.

The Savannah Coal & Dock Company of New York will establish a coaling plant at Savannah on the site formerly occupied by the shipyard of the Foundation Company. The loading capacity will be 12,000 tons.

The world's largest whale oil ship, the steamship "Roald," built in Scotland for the A/S Hector & Hvalen, will soon start for the South Shetlands. The oil ship has tanks for 42,000 barrels of oil, and a deadweight of 12,000 tons.

The motor ship "La Paz," which arrived at New York recently from Glasgow to complete loading for the West Coast of South America, is the first motor vessel built for the Pacific Steam Navigation Co. She is a product of the Govan (Clyde) shipyard of Harlan & Wolff.

Lord Inchcape is reported to have disposed, on behalf of the British Government, of forty-eight ex-German steamers aggregating 237,409 tons for £4,786,975, or an average of £19 per ton gross. According to the latest advices, only four ex-German steamers exceeding 10,000 tons have been up to the present disposed of. They are the "Berlin" (17,324), "Mobile" (16,960), "Zeppelin" (14,167), and "Konigin Louise" (10,783).

Norway's import of coal from the Spitzbergen coalfields this year is estimated at 80,000 tons. The requirements of Norway in coal amount to 2,000,000 tons annually.

The British Government has revoked the rule under the Defense of the Realm Act, which prohibited aliens purchasing shares in any British mine or oil field.

The total production of the 1919-20 Cuban sugar crop amounts to 3,728,975 tons, according to final figures published by the Weekly Review of the Cuban sugar crop.

The Canada-West Indies trade agreement has been ratified by the Jamaica Legislature. The Bahamas and British Honduras Legislatures had previously agreed to ratification.

Canadian railway freight rates were recently increased from 35 to 40 per cent. The immediate effect has been to practically stop lumber shipments from British Columbia to the United States.

Plans and appliances for installing storage and supply facilities at both the ports of Teneriffe and Las Palmas are well advanced, but concessions have not yet been definitely granted. A British tank vessel is moored to the breakwater at Las Palmas and holds 8,000 tons of oil when full. Steamers go alongside to take supplies. The price is £12 10s. per ton.

The Journal of the British Chamber of Commerce of Turkey and the Balkan States, in a recent issue, gives numerous instances of pilferage on a large scale of goods from the custom-house and from lighters at Constantinople. In one case a lighter with 17 bales disappeared and the goods were recovered at Derindje, in the Gulf of Ismidt. Another lighter with 73 barrels of oil disappeared altogether and was never recovered, although the empty barrels were found. At times goods have been changed in transit and some withdrawn from the custom-house by false pretenses.

Contracts have been placed by the New York & Cuba Mail S. S. Co. (Ward Line) for the construction of a modern terminal at the port of Havana. Work upon the development has been begun and it is estimated that $3,000,000 will be spent upon the project, which will require about two years for completion. The new freight terminal which is largely a bulkhead proposition, will be located on the site of the present terminal, which is now being abolished. The work does not involve building new piers, but will give the Ward Line the benefits of a modern terminal equipped with the most improved freight-handling machinery.

Progress is being made in Australia toward a solution of the question of bulk handling of wheat. For years Australian wheat was handled in bags. But when it accumulated on account of the war and mice wrought havoc upon the huge stacks of bagged wheat, the subject of making provision for country storage and mechanical handling at the ports became of prime importance. At Glebe Island, Sydney harbor, there is now being constructed a reinforced concrete elevator with a capacity of 6,382,000 bushels, fitted with driers and all necessary machinery for bulk handling and reconditioning. In Victoria, specifications have been prepared for terminal elevators at Williamstown and Geelong.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

STATUS OF MARITIME WORKERS

The Seaman's Right to Redress for Accidental Injuries

The Journal of October 6 contained a treatise by Mr. Warren H. Pillsbury, compensation expert for the Industrial Accident Commission of California, giving a general review of the difficulties confronting seamen who seek to recover damages for accidental injuries sustained while at work.

Upon request, Mr. Pillsbury has now prepared the article published on this page setting forth especially the change in the seaman's legal status under the Jones Act. By virtue of Section 20 of said law, injured seamen have been placed in the same position as railroad employes injured while working in interstate commerce.

The history of local workmen's compensation legislation for seamen and stevedores in California is as follows:

In 1913 the California Legislature passed the Workmen's Compensation Act, which included maritime workers within its protection, both stevedores and sailors. In May, 1917, the United States Supreme Court, by a five-to-four vote, held that State laws could not be made to apply to maritime injuries, because of supposed interference by them with the Federal Admiralty Law. In October, 1917, the Federal Congress enacted what is known as the "Johnson Amendment," specifically authorizing the application of state workmen's compensation acts to maritime injuries. In May, 1920, by the same five-to-four vote, the United States Supreme Court held this Act of Congress to be unconstitutional and again stopped the State legislatures from endeavoring to give workmen's compensation protection to maritime workers.

The present situation of maritime workers with respect to protection against injury may, therefore, be summed up as follows:

Under the Admiralty Law

Admiralty Law has changed little in the last one hundred years in respect to injuries to sailors and longshoremen, and gives inadequate protection to them. In cases of sickness on board ship and of accidents not caused by the fault of the employer, the employee is entitled to medical care and maintenance, under what is known as the "rule of the Osceola." This gives him his wages until the end of the voyage and treatment at the Marine Hospital, also medical treatment while on the ship. This protection extends only to sailors and does not include stevedores or longshoremen.

If the maritime worker be injured by the fault of the employer, he may bring a suit in admiralty for damages. This applies both to seamen and longshoremen. Such suit is like the old style damage suit used in California until the Compensation Act was passed. In this damage suit the injured worker can get damages only if he can prove that his injury was caused by the fault of his employer, such as by furnishing an unseaworthy vessel or defective tackle or equipment. The case is usually tried before a jury, and the delay, court costs, and attorney's fees cut down the occasional large recovery to a considerable extent. In most cases the injured employee is unable to make out a case and gets nothing.

In death cases, there was, until this year, no provision in the admiralty law giving an action for damages, even where the death was caused by the fault of the employer. For many years, to overcome this defect, admiralty courts have been allowing a suit in admiralty for damages, based upon State laws, where the States had laws giving a right of action for wrongful death. A queer result is that a State compensation act cannot be applied to a maritime injury, but a State statute giving a damage suit for negligence can.

In March of this year, Congress passed an act giving a right of action in the admiralty court in death cases wherever the accident happened outside the three-mile limit only. Suit can be brought, however, only where the accident is caused by the fault of the employer. This law is not a compensation act in any respect. It merely takes the place of the State damage suit laws which had previously been applied. But since admiralty law is not limited to injuries occurring outside the three-mile limit, but extends to all vessels afloat upon navigable waters, in rivers, harbors, and bays, as well as upon the high seas, where a seaman is killed inside the three-mile limit in California, the suit must still be brought in the admiralty court under the California damage suit laws.

Cases Still Under the California Workmen's Compensation Act

There are still a few cases of injuries to maritime workers which remain under the California Compensation Act. Admiralty does not allow a suit for damages where a seaman or stevedore is injured upon the land, wharf, or dock. The law of admiralty applies only where the accident happens upon the ship. Therefore, the State Workmen's Compensation Act probably still applies to injuries sustained by sailors, stevedores, or longshoremen occurring upon the wharf, dock or land. This is not entirely certain as yet, as there are rumors of lawsuits about to test this question in the courts. However, the California Industrial Accident Commission is proceeding upon this theory until reversed, and as yet its decision has not been attacked.

Under the Jones Act

This act, known as the Merchant Marine Act, was passed June 5, 1920, and changes the situation considerably. Section 33 of the Jones Bill amends section 20 of the earlier La Follette Act to read as follows:

"Sec. 20. That any seaman who shall suffer personal injury in the course of his employment may, at his election, maintain an action for damages at law, with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States modifying or extending the common-law right or remedy in cases of personal injury to railway employees shall apply; and in case of the death of any seaman as a result of any such personal injury the personal representative of such seaman may maintain an action for damages at law with the right of trial by jury, and in such action all statutes of the United States conferring or regulating the right of action for death in the case of railway employees shall be applicable. Jurisdiction in such actions shall be under the court of the district in which the defendant employer resides or in which his principal office is located."

The result of this change is that seamen are now put in the same position as railroad employees injured while working in interstate commerce. It is therefore, advisable to briefly consider the rights of railroad employees in interstate commerce.

Rights of Railroad Employees

Originally all injuries to railroad employees were governed by the State laws only. The State damage suit laws being inadequate, and very different in the several States, Congress in 1906 passed a Federal damage suit law to give railroad employees better protection. This law was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court. In 1908 Congress passed a new statute which met the objections raised by the court, which is the law now in force, except for certain amendments made in 1910. The name of this statute is the "Federal Employers Liability Act." The Act applies only to railroad employees injured in the course of the interstate commerce business of the railroad. And by section 33 of the Jones bill, just quoted, it now applies to all seamen as well as railroad employees.

The Federal Employers' Liability Act is not a workmen's compensation law. It instead gives an action for damages where an employee is injured through the negligence or fault of his employer. As a damage suit statute, it was at the time of its passage, an improvement on the State laws of that time. It is now hopelessly antiquated. This act makes the employer liable in damages to the employee, or in case of his death, to his administrator for the benefit of a surviving widow or husband and children, and if none, for surviving parents or next of kin of the employee, for injuries resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of the railroad, or from any defect due to its negligence of its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment. If the employee is also guilty of negligence, damages are diminished in proportion to the extent of his negligence, instead of being cut off entirely as is the case under State damage suit laws. The railroad is not permitted to reduce damages for the negligence of the employee where the railroad has violated any statute enacted for the safety of employees. The obnoxious rule in force in the different States that an employee cannot sue for damages where he has impliedly assumed the risk of the injury is also abolished in the Federal Act. Any contract, rule, regulation, or device, by which the employer attempts to exempt itself from any liability created by the Federal Act is made void.

Suits must be commenced under the Jones Act within two years from the time of injury and can be brought only in the United States courts or in the superior court of the State.

This is a very brief description of the Federal Employers' Liability Act which now applies to seamen, but probably not to stevedores or longshoremen.

Federal Workmen's Compensation Act

It is hoped that Congress at its next session will pass a uniform Federal Workmen's Compensation Act for all maritime workers, and possibly all railroad employees in interstate commerce as well. The Republican platform of 1920 declares for a Federal compensation act for maritime workers. The Democratic National platform of 1920 declares for such Federal compensation act, but for stevedores and longshoremen only, not including seamen. Why the Democrats were unwilling to put seamen under a Federal workmen's compensation act is difficult to understand. National workmen's compensation acts have been advocated by various agencies, such as the International Seamen's Union of America, The American Association for Labor Legislation, and others. The International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions has also voted in favor of such bill and offered its services to assist in the work.

BRITISH SEAMEN IN THE WAR

"'National Service' of British Merchant Seamen, 1914-1919," is the unassuming but descriptive title of a recently published volume furnishing an important contribution to the written history of the world war. The author, Father Hopkins, C. B. E., O. S. P., has in the course of a long and useful life been intimately associated with the rise and development of British seamen's organizations, and is therefore eminently qualified to present to the public the part which British merchant seamen had in shaping the events of the period of which he writes. A scholar of high attainments he yet brings to his work a degree of sympathetic understanding of the burdens borne by merchant seamen, both in peace and in war, which makes the book peculiarly interesting to those whose cause he has so long and ably championed.

In the introductory chapter the author leads off with the following tribute to the patriotism of the owners and men of the British Merchant Marine:

> The contribution made by Merchant Seamen of all ratings towards the winning of the War, their courage and devotion to duty is, as time passes, being more and more recognized. But what is perhaps less readily recognized, at all events by those who were not privileged to be behind the scenes at that time, is how, when the existence of the British Empire was threatened from without, owners and men of the British Mercantile Marine sank their differences (and very considerable differences) and agreed to co-operate in their Country's service. It was the ultimate manifestation of this spirit of conciliation on both sides which made the devotion and courage with which British seamen faced their hazardous and exacting responsibilities effective. Furthermore, this spirit of conciliation, which was called into being in a time of common danger, bids fair to continue; and, if this is the case, a change for the better in the relationship between "masters and men," as it existed prior to August, 1914, will undoubtedly make for the ever-increasing prosperity of the British Mercantile Marine, and the welfare and uplift of the men who go down to the sea in ships.

The book is divided into four parts, headed, respectively:

"Immediately Prior to the War," "From the Outbreak of War to the Establishment of the Ministry of Shipping," "From the Establishment of the Ministry of Shipping to the Signing of the Armistice" and "Since the Armistice, November, 1918."

To these are added a number of appendices and a "Diary of Principal Events," designed to amplify such portions of the main discourse as may invite more extended research by the reader.

In looking over the volume one cannot fail to be impressed with the wealth of detailed information which it contains. No subject or incident in any way related to or bearing upon the fortunes of British merchant seamen during the great war has, seemingly, been overlooked by the author. Graphic pen pictures of leading events, statistical figures, technical details, glimpses behind the scenes of British officialdom, strivings of the seamen's unions, all are marshaled in orderly review before the absorbed reader. The whole chain of doings by British merchant seamen in the eventful period dating from just before the catastrophic world conflict up to the present day have been recorded with a faithful precision that leaves little or nothing to the imagination.

Of especial interest to American readers are various references to the La Follette Seamen's Act. Its effects on British shipping conditions, particularly in relation to British Seamen's wages, are clearly shown by the author. Sundry extracts from literature issued by the International Seamen's Union of America are also found in the book, and the JOURNAL is approvingly quoted on the subject of "Desertions By British Seamen In American Ports."

Future historians digging for facts bearing on the activities of the British Mercantile Marine in the late war will find "'National Service' of British Merchant Seamen, 1914-1919," an invaluable aid in their work. As for the British merchant seamen, they are fortunate indeed to have had so able and conscientious a chronicler as Father Hopkins to record the proud part that was theirs in that never-to-be-forgotten struggle.

"'National Service' of British Merchant Seamen, 1914-1919," is published by George Routledge & Sons, Ltd., Broadway House, 68-74 Carter Lane, London, E. C. Price, 6 shillings net.

THE CONTROLLER.

The signs on all interurban electric cars say "Don't talk to the motorman," but you can watch him. If you do, you will notice that when he "gives her the juice" he has to keep his hand on the controller. The moment he lifts his hand, the controller automatically flies back, shuts off the power and the car stops. That arrangement is a safety device which has saved hundreds of lives.

If anything happens to the motorman the safety of the passengers, who must rely on him, is protected. If he drops dead of heart disease the car automatically is stopped even though it may be running fifty miles an hour. If he goes to sleep at his post, he and his passengers are not endangered seriously by his negligence.

You can install a similar safety device on your individual or family financial car. The equipment is provided by the Savings Division of the Treasury Department and consists of War Savings Stamps and Treasury Savings Certificates. If you save and invest in those securities, you may face the future without fear. If you are taken sick they are an automatic protection for you and your passengers dependent on you. If you drop dead those dependent on you are not endangered.

THE COAL MINERS' ATTITUDE.

John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers of America, has placed that organization on record against any reduction in wages for the mine workers.

"Under no circumstances will we permit any reduction in the wages of the mine workers of the country," he said. "There is not going to be any return to pre-war wages or conditions. Any reduction in wages is an economic mistake. It never produces any good result. What the mine workers have to-day we are going to hold, and we propose to continue to make progress instead of going backward."

There is the policy of the United Mine Workers. It is stated in plain words, so that it may be understood by anyone. It is a platform upon which every member of the union will stand. In making that statement, President Lewis told the world what the United Mine Workers of America stand for. It is the unqualified duty of every member of the union to stand firmly behind the international officials. They must present a solid front, to sustain the international officials in that policy. To stand back, to hesitate or to fail to give the international officials full support and co-operation would be an indication of division. Such action would give encouragement to the opposition which is attempting so vigorously to break down the present wage levels in industry in the United States. The mine workers must stand together and let the United Mine Workers of America shine forth as an example to the labor movement in general of solidarity and devotion to sound principle. While the assault on wages and working conditions is being made by the opposition, the mine workers must let them know that the union stands squarely upon the platform announced by President Lewis and that they propose to support the international officials in every honorable way in carrying out that policy. That's what trade unionism means. All over the country the leaders of the labor movement recognize the fact that labor must face serious conditions in the next two years, and they are giving the most profound thought and consideration to the coming struggle.

It is fortunate, indeed, that the position of the United Mine Workers of America is now well known. It is fortunate, too, that the membership of this great union is made up of that kind of manhood that will stand firmly and resolutely by the policy enunciated by President Lewis.

MILLIONS FOR WAR, BUT—

To provide work, and thereby make its citizens self-supporting, should be one of the functions of Government. In this particular our own Government is lame. We find a way to loan Europe millions of dollars without interest, which may be all right as a measure of world reconstruction, but we are slow to finance any plan that will provide work for our own citizens. There apparently is approaching a period of slack times and even now thousands of men are idle through a slump in their own particular line. Especially is this true in the automobile industry.—Cigarmakers' Journal.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Contributed by American Federation of Labor

"Trade Unions Are Bulwarks of Modern Democracies."

The trade union movement means more than high wages, short hours and improved working conditions. It means intellectual development of the mass. It means independent wage earners, who carry this independence from the shop, mill and mine into the affairs of everyday life.

And herein lies a major reason for the opposition to organized labor.

The trade unionist is interested in other things than shop conditions. Every economic, political and social question attracts him.

His collective voice is heard on education, finance, industry, agriculture and transportation. He fights for free press, speech and assemblage, and will go to prison that this heritage is assured.

He creates new public opinion by his constructive statesmanship, his insistence on just relations between men, and his vigor in exposing wrong.

He demands that democracy function.

This type of a worker is not favored by anti-union employers, anti-union newspapers, anti-union business men, anti-union bankers and their political agents.

These elements want "contented" workers. They want men who are thankful for their jobs, who will permit the boss to do their thinking, form their opinions and tell them how to vote.

This is why these elements believe in organization for their kind, but deny it to wage earners. They look upon organization as a protection to their power over the unorganized, while a trade union is a challenge to their power.

The stand-patism of these elements is historic. They never move until they are compelled to.

These elements want a slave class—not in name, but in fact.

Trade unionism is the monkey-wrench thrown into the machinery of autocracy and sham.

Trade unionism has established the first element of democracy in industry.

In the non-union shop the employer is absolute. In the union shop the worker has a voice in working conditions. As a citizen he is likewise independent. Collectively, he is the greatest factor in freedom's cause.

The British statesman correctly declared: "Trade unions are the bulwarks of modern democracies."

Agitate! Educate! Organize!

Ancient Union Foe Getting Very Polite.

James A. Emery, general counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, is getting very polite in his war against organized labor.

Mr. Emery is one of the little Jack Horners of anti-union employers. For years he has been raging up and down the country with his fire alarm message against trade unionism, and now he tells business men in this city to "study the demands of labor instead of hurling epithets at workers with new ideas." The speaker, in a talk at Seattle, did not seem like the Emery of old whose pleas for "the right to work" have thrilled cheap labor employers.

Some trade unionists whisper that Emery adjusted himself to environment. Business men in this city, through their associated industries, have failed to destroy organized labor. Their rough stuff has only strengthened the workers' lines and given Seattle an unenviable reputation.

Another organization has been formed by these business men, and the workers believe that the new federated industries of Washington will adopt smoother methods. The strikebreaker and thug will be replaced by "can't-strike" laws, which will be urged at the coming session of the Legislature.

Under these conditions, Emery put his war whoops in cold storage and affected a broad, liberal, patronizing attitude toward the workers, while criticising employers for "using shopworn sayings in condemning others."

The business men cheered this eastern wonder and the word was quietly passed among those present that Washington must have an anti-strike law similar to Kansas.

Labor's High Ideals Can Block Traitors.

Labor is partly responsible for traitors within its ranks, says the Australian Worker, which declares that when the workers awake to their mission, the possibilities of their cause and are unrelenting and unforgiving to traitors, the efforts of this brood will be minimized.

"The workers have not yet learned to be earnest in their own cause. They don't take their historic mission seriously," says this labor paper.

"They can't believe that they are destined to change the face of civilization and bring into being a new world.

"It is this want of faith in themselves that encourages unfaithfulness in others.

"When labor realizes its stupendous importance in the drama of history, when it perceives the unforgivable nature of treachery to its ideals, Judas will not manifest himself to anything like the same extent, and the traditional pieces of silver will lose their fatal power to lure.

"Too often it pays to 'rat' on the working class. When it ceases to be a profitable proposition, when it becomes instead a highly dangerous occupation, there'll be a rapid and permanent slump in the renegading business.

"It is not always for sordid gain that Judas acts. Sometimes his object is the favor of the great, or the society of the well-to-do, or the gratification of ambition. Sometimes he is even able to persuade himself that he is obeying the dictates of a superconscience or following some newly-discovered 'light.'

"But whatever the motives animating him, whether he betrays us in the old crude fashion, or deceives himself into the bargain, he is Judas nevertheless, and so long as there is room for him in our midst the old tragedy will be a continuous performance."

World's Workers

A recent Government decree fixes the hours of labor in Portuguese merchant vessels as follows: Seamen, 64 hours per week; firemen, 56 hours; stewards, 77 hours. In case of need the schedule of working hours may be raised to 70, 78 and 91 hours a week, respectively, with overtime pay of time and a half, or two hours' rest in port for each additional hour at sea. Overtime does not apply to work performed while entering or leaving port, or caused by stress of weather or accident.

With the formal organization at a convention held in Luzerne, Switzerland, of the "International Labor Association for Sports and Physical Culture," another international labor body takes its place in the ranks of the protagonists of international peace and fraternity. The meeting was attended by a score of delegates from labor sport societies in Germany, England, France, Belgium, Finland, Czecho-Slovakia and Switzerland, who are said to have represented about 1,000,000 workers organized in various athletic societies. In their speeches they told of the progress being made in their respective countries toward building up workers' sport societies, as distinct from those under the control of the bosses.

The handful of men in the labor movement who talk of "revolution" were jeered and ridiculed by Tom Shaw, trade unionist and Member of Parliament, in a speech at London, in which he discussed the recent miners' strike. The unionist declared that the miners were justified in their wage demand and asked if the men who talk of revolution really understand what they say. "If a revolution did come," said the speaker, "the men who would be responsible for that situation would discover that they are conscientious objectors and would let others do the fighting when the bullets began to fly." The speaker classed certain government officials with the advocates of revolution in the unions. "There is a better way than revolution," said Shaw. "There is the way of common sense, enlightenment and education, of teaching the people that it is better to put a cross on a ballot paper than to stop a bullet."

The Supreme Economic Soviet of Russia, says a Moscow wireless, has issued a decree pointing out the general principles on which foreign capitalists will be permitted to exploit the natural riches of Russia. The soviet government has received requests from foreign capitalists to afford such rights, the message states, and soviet Russia requires offers of experienced forces and large material means in order to create within the boundaries of Russia an inexhaustible source of raw materials for manufacture on the spot and abroad. A new law permits foreign capitalists to work the natural riches of Russia, the message declares, receiving in return the right to export abroad a portion of their product. The Soviet government promises foreign capitalists that nothing they invest in undertakings in Russia shall be nationalized, confiscated or requisitioned. The capitalists shall have the right to engage workers and other employes in accordance with the existing laws on labor in Russia.

Painless Parker

Dentistry for Sailors

WHENEVER a sailor wants his teeth fixed up, the best place to go is a Parker Dental Office. There are 28 of these offices, as shown below. A sailor can, for instance, have work started on his teeth in San Francisco, and finished in any other port along the coast where he may go. No matter what city he may be in where there is a Parker Office, he can go there and have his teeth looked after under the Parker System. If anything additional is needed, or if he has something about his teeth he wants changed, he can be taken care of right where he is.

Dr. Parker is the man who is famous everywhere for dentistry without pain. He is also famous for his fine work at moderate prices. The Doctor used to sail the seas himself, and has a warm spot in his heart for the men who go down to the sea in ships.

Sailors are entitled to come to any Parker Office and have their teeth examined free.

Pacific Coast Marine

The Vancouver Island Whaling Company, Vancouver, B. C., has purchased four boats from the British Admiralty for whaling in the North Pacific.

Four more Shipping Board steamers have been ordered moored in Elliott Bay (Puget Sound), added to the five previously tied up there, owing to lack of demand for cargo carriers. The four are the "Iconium," "Nile," "Yosemite" and "West Norratus."

After being aground in Oriental waters, word was received here by the marine department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce that the Pacific Mail feeder ships "Lake Faulk" and the "Caddopeak," had been floated. The vessels are said to have arrived at Hongkong in tow and will be placed in the dry dock for surveys and repairs.

A contract has been let to Barney Lanteri, the Pittsburg shipbuilder, for the construction of a new water barge for the California-Hawaiian Sugar Company. The vessel, which will operate in carrying water between the river above Antioch and the refinery at Crockett, will be 206 feet long, 52 feet beam and 14 feet deep.

Opium valued at approximately $77,000 was recovered from Honolulu harbor during the week by naval divers co-operating with customs officials. From the same location 100 tins had been previously recovered this week. The opium recovered during the week is valued at $90,000. Customs officials announced a revenue cutter is en route here for patrol duty in the islands. The opium is believed to have been thrown overboard from a vessel recently in port.

Reports received from Honolulu state that eight Gilbert islanders have arrived at Honolulu on the cable schooner "Tangora" from Fanning Island in charge of Captain C. Mill Menmuir, who will place them on the next Matson liner sailing for this port. The eight men were supposed to arrive here on the "Matsonia" last Tuesday, but due to the long passage of the "Tangora" they missed the "Matsonia." The eight Gilbert islanders will be assigned as seamen on board the "Doris Crane" when she sails from here for the mid-Pacific islands.

Carl J. Peterson, a seaman, had a narrow escape from death when a plank used to hold the canvas on the vessel's hatch was torn loose by heavy seas. He was struck by the floating timber, suffering an injured foot. During the whole period of the gale the "Georgiana's" decks were under water, and members of the crew stated that it was a miracle that none was drowned by being swept into the sea by the waves which engulfed the craft. Hatch covers were torn off and hurled into the sea by the water, and the vessel was driven far off her course. The "Georgiana" lost both masts on November 15, when the wind attained a velocity of seventy miles. It is believed that the craft was caught in the tailend of a typhoon which swept the coast of Japan.

The rapid elimination of sailing ships as carriers of commerce on the trade routes of the world since the end of the war is shown by comparative figures compiled by Artie Byers, statistician of the Marine Department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce for the month of November of this year and the same period of 1919. During November, 1919, there was a total of 69,528 tons in the sailing vessel class arriving at San Francisco, against 45,292 tons for the same months this year. The departures from this port also showed a sharp decline in the movement of windjammers. In November, 1919, sailing tonnage amounting to 69,253 cleared from here, while last month showed a falling off to 49,528 tons. There was a marked gain, however, in the amount of steam tonnage arriving and departing from San Francisco last month over the same period last year.

Construction of a new deep water harbor at either Ahukini and Nawiliwili, on the island of Kauai, is being agitated by prominent steamship men in the Territory of Hawaii, according to reports from the Islands. Completion of the project will mean much to steamship companies operating out of San Francisco as well as island interests, as the island of Kauai will then be able to afford splendid harbor and loading facilities for the island. Kauai during the last few years has developed into one of the foremost islands of Hawaii for the production of pineapples. Recently a corps of United States engineers, after making a survey of the two sites, recommended that Nawiliwili was the most suitable site for the proposed development. The proposed harbor, which will represent an expenditure of more than $1,000,000, when completed will be able to accommodate the largest freighters plying in the Hawaiian trade.

A campaign to secure control of the waterfront of San Francisco for the municipality, that the city may own its own shore line the same as does Oakland, Alameda and San Pedro as a part of Los Angeles, will be inaugurated next month by city officials and a score of civic organizations, with Supervisor Ralph McLeran as chairman. "San Francisco voted for control of the waterfront by an enormous majority, and we are going to put up the greatest fight in the Legislature this winter to obtain that control that California has ever known," McLeran said at a meeting of the Finance Committee of the Board of Supervisors. McLeran referred to the vote cast on Amendment No. 32 on the ballot November 2, that carried by a large majority, and that was placed before the people by Supervisor Richard J. Welch, chairman of the Commercial Development Committee, outlining a Municipal Board of Harbor Commissioners, in the event that the Legislature enact a measure giving San Francisco control of the city waterfront.

The Shipping Board spent over $1,720,000 altering the 25 steamers built on its own account in Japan and which were converted in Seattle to burn oil, besides other changes. The last ship to be delivered, the "Eastern Sword," is still undergoing alterations. The amounts spent on the other ships are given as follows: Todd Dry Docks, Inc.—"Eastern Guide," $71,000; "Eastern Gale," $65,866; "Eastern Victor," $67,000; "Eastern Admiral," $51,500; "Eastern Tempest," $48,605; "Eastern Importer," $110,381. Pacific Coast Engineering Co.—"Eastern Moon," $34,134; "Eastern Mariner," $61,950. "Eastern Pilot," $45,000; "Eastern Glade," $72,500; "Eastern Cloud," $67,225; "Eastern Maid," $47,500; "Eastern Sailor," $138,220; "Eastern Soldier," $82,500; "Eastern Temple," $62,100; "Eastern Leader," $85,500. Experienced surveyors are being dispatched to all foreign ports, where conditions warrant, to become representatives for the American Bureau of Shipping, which is now recognized as the official classification society for the United States Government. At present there is a representative in Europe making recommendations based on conditions found at each seaport. Already there has been a surveyor appointed at the port of Hamburg, Germany, to handle the bureau's business there and other ports in the vicinity. Ports at Havana, Rio de Janeiro, San Juan, the Dutch West Indies and South and Central America are being surveyed by the bureau's representatives. The policy of the bureau is that none but American citizens may act as its exclusive representatives. Prior to the inception of the American Bureau of Shipping, it was shown that oftentimes the business handled at a foreign port for an American ship was carried out in a haphazard manner by foreign representatives with the resulting loss of thousands of dollars to the vessel's owner. The United States Shipping Board has undertaken to place Americans as its representatives at foreign ports to act as its agents, on the showing that the employment of a foreign agent resulted in the latter often shirking the handling of the Shipping Board's interests with the consequent loss of thousands of tons of freight that might have been secured for an American vessel.

Passenger and freight service from the Pacific Coast to the Mediterranean—the first direct line of steamers from San Francisco to Europe —is to be undertaken next year by Swayne & Hoyt. The advent of the service will mark an epoch in Pacific Coast shipping, as nothing in the way of a passenger line to Europe has ever before been attempted. Swayne & Hoyt have made application to the United States Shipping Board to have assigned to this service three of the new 535-type of passenger boats. The firm has thoroughly canvassed the situation and has been assured of an ample movement of freight and more than enough passengers to fill the steamers. Persons traveling between the Pacific Coast and Southern Europe could save almost 50 per cent. in transportation charges by journeying direct by boat instead of making half the journey by rail across the United States. And it would take only about five days more for the all-water trip, according to Lloyd Swayne, junior member of the firm. The ports of call would be Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, San Pedro, Cadiz, Barcelona, Marseilles, Genoa and Piraeus, via the Panama canal. From the northwest would be shipped lumber and grain, from California, canned goods. A goodly number of Italian immigrants come to California, and if they could journey direct from their homes to San Francisco without change, and cheaply, even though the trip should be a few days longer, they will travel by steamer, according to Swayne.

THE SEAFARERS' COUNCIL

The Seafarers' Council of the Pacific Coast met at San Francisco during the past week and elected the following officers: President, Ernest F. Pegg of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association; vice-president, William A. Wescott of the Masters, Mates and Pilots of the Pacific; secretary-treasurer, Ed Rosenberg of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific; sergeant-at-arms, Eugene Burke of the Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association of the Pacific; executive committee, Wescott, Pegg, Rosenberg, Patrick Flynn of the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Pacific, and Eugene Steidle of the Marine Cooks' and Stewards' Association of the Pacific Coast.

The Council, organized February 11, 1920, states its purposes in this paragraph:

Recognizing that "organization" is the only means by which the various departments of the ship's crew may hope for amelioration of and final emancipation from the many evils attending their calling, and for the purpose of furthering organization, strengthening it where it already exists, and bringing into closer fraternal relations the various bodies of organized seafarers, these bodies have organized the Seafarers' Council of the Pacific.

It is no secret that similar organization has proven of great benefit during the last two years to the seafarers of Great Britain and to British mercantile marine commerce generally.

On the Pacific Coast, where organizations of the various departments of the ship's crew have as a rule co-operated for the advancement of common interests, even without a formal federation of the departments, the time was found opportune last spring to institute this Seafarers' Council.

In the adjustment of the many problems ever confronting our steadily growing merchant marine, the Council is bound to prove an important factor. In fact, the very existence of the Council has already promoted closer fraternal relations between all the men who earn their livelihood upon the waters.

Having taken an active part in the formation of the Seafarers' Council, the Journal takes a pardonable pride in the progress made to date and wishes to assure its readers that this movement for the greater solidarity of labor is taking place in practically every industry. It is being discussed in every old line trade-union.

The American Federation of Labor has no impediments in the way of the industrial evolution of the trade-unions. For as a matter of fact, the A. F. of L. is the least centralized, the least dictatorial of any of the great labor bodies of the world, with the possible exception of the Syndicalist Organization of France.

The workers in every industry in America are free to adopt such form of organization as they desire.

The union men are wiser than the philosophers. They know their own business better than the butters-in, who are long on theory, but who ignore the simple facts of practical working class mental evolution.

Unionism is growing in the place where it should grow—in the ranks of organized labor. It can't be manufactured in the mental laboratories of the "intellectuals." Nor can it be steered, led or directed by a few self-styled radicals who talk glibly about "one big union," but who have not the faintest knowledge of the growth and internal development of the "pure and simple" American trade-union. The O. B. U.'s and the I. W. W.'s can destroy, but their constructive ability cannot stand the acid test.

The Seafarers' Council of the Pacific Coast is composed of the following marine organizations: Masters, Mates and Pilots of the Pacific; Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association No. 35; Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Pacific; Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Pacific Coast; Sailors' Union of the Pacific.

THE STEEL TRUST'S WEAK SPOT

Mr. Gary, official spokesman for the steel trust, America's most powerful anti-union industry, has more than once received attention in these columns.

Mr. Gary's mental attitude toward the workers has been strikingly compared with that of Louis the Fourteenth of France, who thought "he was the state"; just as Gary now seems to think that "he is the industry." The king was in error and so is Gary. The king lost his head as well as his kingdom. And Gary may lose that absolute control over the workers in the steel industry, even before he suspects it.

Quite recently the American Economic League called attention to the fact that there are ways in which Labor can help itself, regardless of what Mr. Gary's attitude toward unionization may be, and regardless of his ability to prevent his employes from organizing.

Mr. Gary's real source of power is not in his ownership of big plants. It lies in possession of privileges conferred upon him by law. If the workers use their political power to deprive him and his corporation of these privileges, they will emancipate themselves. If they show the slightest disposition to use their power seriously they will probably have occasion to observe a change for the better in the corporation's labor policy, even before anything has actually been done.

What privileges does the steel corporation hold? As far back as the year 1901, Charles Schwab disclosed one of these in testifying before a congressional committee. He said that the corporation owned 60,000 acres of coking coal lands in the Connellsville district. These lands contained practically all the coking coal available for use in steel manufacturing. While the corporation controlled the use of these lands no competitor or possible competitor could engage in steel manufacturing without its consent. The monopoly of these lands Mr. Schwab estimated to be worth billions to the trust. The value he put on these lands was $60,000 an acre.

Now, if the workers were to insist that the authorities assess these lands, which the trust still owns, at the price put upon them by Mr. Schwab or at the increased value which they must be worth to the trust today, they could force Mr. Gary to sit up and take notice. Not even the steel trust could afford to hold these lands, if taxed at such a figure, without putting them all to their most productive use, and that would require so much labor that the laborers would soon become masters of the situation.

UNIONISM "THE" REMEDY.

That well edited publication, the Survey, of New York, calls attention to the status of the farm laborers in England.

The case of the farm laborer has been one of the most tragic in the history of Great Britain. For a hundred years after the Enclosure acts of the Eighteenth Century, English farm laborers had no opportunity to earn a living wage. The social status of the agricultural workers seems definitely to have sunk and then when the country folk were hungriest and most hopeless, the game laws were applied with terrible stringency. Men were deported, as the Hammonds, of the London School of Economics, have shown, for killing a rabbit or fowl to meet the needs of a literally starving family. For years agricultural laborers were paid as little as six shillings a week.

The war, however, caused a great change for them. A trade union was re-established, but more important still, an agricultural wage board was set up by the Government. The last wage rate fixed for England and Ireland offered an interesting contrast to the old times. For ordinary laborers the new rates ranged from 46 to 52 shillings a week. The hours of labor remained unchanged at 50 hours a week in summer and 48 hours in winter, except in Cheshire, where they are 54 hours all the year round. Overtime rates are from 1 shilling and 2 pence to 1 shilling and 3½ pence an hour on week days and from 1 shilling and 5 pence to 1 shilling and 6½ pence an hour on Sundays.

The strike, so far from proving a backward state of civilization, is indeed the final test of a people's progress toward true liberty. The extent of a nation's advancement may be judged exactly by the extent to which its people are guaranteed the right to strike and to which that right is exercised.

TEACHING SEAMANSHIP

A great deal of favorable comment has appeared in the daily press of San Francisco upon the decision of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific to establish a school for seamanship.

Alan McEwen, one of the "stars" on the San Francisco Call, features the story in this fashion:

"American sailors for American ships" is the slogan of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, one of the Pacific District organizations of the International Seamen's Union of America.

To help carry this objective into effect the union, it was announced, is going to establish at its own expense a school of seamanship in San Francisco. Its purpose will be to train men in all of the arts of the sea that may be taught on land and that come under the general head of "marlinspike seamanship."

It is the desire of the union to maintain a high standard of craftsmanship and to compensate for the dilution of the merchant marine personnel during the war with untrained seamen.

In announcing the training school plan of the union, Secretary Edward Rosenberg said:

"Before the war it was not necessary to train young Americans as apprentice seamen. There was always a continuous supply of able seamen from European countries. The war brought this to a stop. The La Follette Seamen's Act also had its effect. The moment seamen were set free by the adoption of the Seamen's Act, wages for sailors on European as well as American vessels were raised. The law made it possible for seamen coming to American ports on foreign ships to quit and sign up on American vessels with American wages. This made it necessary for foreign shipowners to raise wages and has tended to keep sailors on vessels of their own nationality.

"If we are to have a real American merchant marine it must be manned by Americans. No nation has ever been great on the sea unless its own people were proficient in seamanship. During the war many young Americans took to the sea, but the training provided was not sufficient. It is to make up for this lack of training that the sailors' union is going to establish its school. Training is to be provided only for members of the union, however."

The school is to be opened as soon as a suitable building is located. The instructors will be selected from among the older members of the union.

A DISAPPEARING RACE

Side by side with the record-breaking fecundity of the Japanese in California there is another picture—portraying the rapid decrease in the original native population of the Golden State.

The Indian Board of Co-operation, in a recently published pamphlet, gives some startling facts regarding the Indians in California.

Seventy years ago there were 210,000 Indians in the State. Today there are 20,000.

About 5000 are living on reservations. About 11,000 are living in severalty holdings, called rancherias. About 4000 are declared to be "absolute floaters, practically paupers, with no title to an acre."

There are about 4000 Indian children. About 2500 are not provided for educationally, either by government or State schools.

What a tragic tale! The rapid decline and virtual disappearance of a race—right in the land of their fathers!

As a tree is strengthened by pruning, so the labor movement may be improved by cutting out those elements that properly belong in some other movement.

The union label enlists and arms in labor's cause those elements which determine the issue of every cause in civilized society—namely, the women and children.

FIVE WEEKS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

President Schlesinger of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union Relates Personal Experiences.

Before I left New York to attend the Congress of the International Clothing Workers' Federation at Copenhagen, the Executive Board of my International Union requested me to visit Soviet Russia, if possible. The big progressive membership of our International Union was always very eager to obtain first-hand information about the Socialist Republic of Russia; not from newspaper correspondents or relief workers, but from one of their own fellow trade-unionists.

I am glad to say that I was successful in carrying out their wishes. I spent almost five weeks in Soviet Russia and made use of every hour of my stay there. I was in Moscow, Petrograd, Minsk, making close observations of whatever came within my range of vision. I had long talks with Lenine, Tomsky (the president of the Russian Trade Union Federation), and with many others occupying important and responsible posts in the present Russian Government. I visited garment shops, and I took particular interest in their management and methods of production—a subject which to me, a representative of a garment makers' organization, was of special importance. I visited small meetings, mass meetings, listened to speeches and paid attention to the reception of the speeches by the audiences. I visited the offices of the most important Government departments and paid close attention to the administrative machinery which the Bolshevist regime is using for the running of the country.

I spent a good deal of time with Messrs. Boris Reinstein, Max Goldfarb, S. Epstein, S. Ogursky, Dr. Mislig, John Reed, Louis Fraina and many others whom I have known in New York. I even encountered there some former members of our Waistmakers' Union in New York, girls who left America when the Revolution broke out in Russia in 1917. Some of them, I learned, were deported from America together with Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, and I listened with interest to all they had to tell me about Russia and themselves since they left America. I met the members of the "Central Commissariate for Jewish Affairs," and attended one of their executive meetings at which the subject of relief by the Joint Distribution Committee of New York for the Ukrainian Jews ruined in recent pogroms was discussed. I visited the great Moscow Synagogue and had the opportunity to listen to the opinions of old conservative Jews about the Bolsheviki. I spoke to Zionists, Labor Zionists, Jewish writers, artists, former merchants and heard their opinions about the new regime.

While in Moscow and Petrograd I made it my business to pay close attention to the appearance of the people on the streets, their faces, their clothes and the inside of their homes. I am satisfied that my stay in Russia gave me a clear conception of what is transpiring today under the Soviet regime, how the great masses of the people fare under the new conditions, and particularly how the Jewish masses live in Russia today. I will attempt to give my impressions to the reader in as brief a manner as possible.

For the people who are accustomed to eat three square meals a day, to put on a new suit of clothes every year, or at least once in two years, and to live in coal-heated or steam-heated rooms, Soviet Russia is no place at present. No matter how hard they try, they cannot get more than a slice of black bread, a small piece of cheese or a few sardines and a glass of tea or two for breakfast; a piece of black bread, a plate of vegetable soup, some lentil pudding, half an apple and a glass of tea or two for dinner; and, again, a piece of black bread and some cheese and a glass of tea for supper. This ration is, of course, allowed only to those who are actually engaged in working, unless one is under 16 or above 50 years.

Such persons who are used to the ordinary comforts of life should not make a journey to Soviet Russia today. Before they will have been there two days life will appear to them so miserable that they will spend the rest of their time in heaping curses upon the Bolsheviki and the day they themselves were born. Even money will not help them to obtain more or better food or a more comfortable room fit to withstand the rigors of winter or clothes deserving of that name.

At least they could not obtain these things in a legitimate way. And I would sincerely advise nobody to attempt to get these things in an illegal way; that is, to buy these from "speculators" (clandestine traders). To purchase anything from these "speculators" is a crime for which the Extraordinary Commission (Tchrezvychaika) punishes very heavily both the "speculators" and those who trade with them.

The reason why the Bolsheviki do not permit anyone to obtain better and more food is not because they are such horrible men, as some newspaper correspondents would picture them to be, but because Russia, in its present condition, with the blockade on one side and a war on the other, is not in a position to give its population more than a minimum of sub-

SAILORS' UNION OF THE PACIFIC

Headquarters, San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 6, 1920.

Regular weekly meeting came to order at 7 p. m. J. V. Thompson presiding. Secretary reported shipping slack; members ashore plentiful. The full Shipwreck Benefit was awarded to the members of the crew of the S. S. "Joan of Arc." Donated $100 to the Ferryboatmen's Union of California. Balloting for officers for the ensuing year was proceeded with. The Seafarers' Council of the Pacific Coast was reported to be in a state of proper functional activity.

The Committee elected to devise ways and means on the proposed training school for marlin-spike seamanship reported that a suitable quarters had been located at number 9 Mission Street, Room 4, and that the school will be open for business on morning of Wednesday, the 8th of December. Johan B. Johansen was recommended by the Committee, and appointed by the meeting, to perform the duties of an instructor at the above school. Members were cordially invited to attend and perfect their technical training under the Union's auspices.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

THE COAST INSTRUCTOR'S REPORT

As was reported in the SEAMEN'S JOURNAL of September 15, Treasurer G. H. Brown of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association was chosen and directed by the regular meeting of that body on August 30, to make a tour of all branches along the coast explaining and expounding to the membership in general the economic and industrial situation of the merchant marine as it exists to-day.

Before beginning his tour of instruction and inspection it was necessary for Comrade Brown to go to Boston and formally take over the duties of the treasurer's office from his predecessor, and superintend the official transfer and redeposit of a portion of the Association's funds from Boston to New York banking institutions.

This business trip likewise afforded an opportunity to Comrade Brown to open his lecturing tour at ports East of New York, and meetings were addressed at Boston and Providence while on the way; thereby killing two birds with one stone, as the saying is. In a recent number of the JOURNAL was printed a tentative report from Mr. Brown relating chiefly to the organization of Port Tampa, Florida.

Comrade Brown began his Southern tour October 6, visiting all branch ports South as far as Pensacola, Fla., and Port Arthur, Texas, returning to New York Nov. 13. Comrade Brown has now submitted a final report to the regular meeting on Nov. 15, 1920. This is a most interesting and gratifying report for many reasons:

To begin with, it is the first report of its kind ever presented to a meeting on this coast, and therefore represents progress and reflection, as well as economic enterprise on the part of the Union.

A mere massing of men without instruction, training or orderly assembly creates a mob; properly aligned, drilled, trained and instructed the same heterogeneous mob becomes an organized and formidable army corps.

The same rule holds good in labor organizations. The growth of the Seamen's Unions on the Atlantic seaboard within the last seven years have been both phenomenal and astonishing, and now reaches a mighty aggregate. But in the same period a complete change and material reconstruction has likewise occurred in the merchant marine. Care should, therefore, be exercised lest we become the victims of over conceit. Enthused by the power of visible numbers, men are apt to disregard the weakness of incoherent massing. Great numbers in themselves, unless properly trained and directed, often encompass their own destruction with no enemy in sight. To quote Dr. Franklin's solemn admonition to his fellow rebels when the Declaration of Independence had been signed: "Now, gentlemen, we must all hang together or we'll all hang separately!"

The main purpose of Comrade Brown's tour, and the hope of his labor has been to direct and concentrate the aggregate ideas and tendencies of our membership along the prevailing lines of industrial conditions and economic truth.

It is obviously impossible for seamen constantly going and coming in the course of successive voyages which constitute the source of their occupation and livelihood, to keep themselves posted and informed as to the complex and ever changing conditions gradually occurring at all times in the business or commercial world.

How to secure and maintain our rightful share in maritime industry, and then keep pace with economic progress, is the one big idea of the Seamen's Unions, and the gospel preached by Comrade Brown.

Upon the individual and collective grasp and appreciation of that gospel, and its intelligent application by our membership to current affairs the perpetuation and success of our movement will ever depend.

The immense number of new membership, the large and constantly increasing probationary membership, the constant accession of young and inexperienced seamen, and foreign-born members to the ranks of the Sea-Service and the Seamen's Unions, and the kaleidoscopic changes constantly taking place in industrial and commercial relations the world over, all combine to render instructive speaking tours such as that just concluded by Mr. Brown highly necessary and essential to the continued growth and solidarity of the Seamen's Unions. It is therefore desirable that such courses of personal instruction and encouragement as that just closed by Mr. Brown, may be continued and repeated at suitable intervals as long as the necessity exists.

It is only by bringing the incoherent factors of the Seamen's Unions together in orderly and intelligent council, and coordination of purpose, that their aggregate power can be made effective, and command public and corporate attention and enduring respect.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Adverse criticism and inverse reasoning now characterize the editorial attitude of the Plute Press toward Labor.

The New York Herald, basking in the Sun of Organized Capital continues to hurl its envenomed editorial javelins at the uncrowned head and valiant heart of Organized Labor.

The actual target is, of course, the closed shop.

In column after column of lengthy, statistical editorials, the Herald is persistently trying to convince Labor that high wages and American inefficiency are the underlying causes of the prevailing business stagnation, and that the only way to secure a permanent living in this country is to forsake the A. F. of L. and reduce wage scales and living standards to European and Asiatic levels.

"If our labor cost of anything," says the Herald, "whether it is steel or shoes, textiles or toys, is higher than Germany's or England's, or Holland's, or Japan's, or anybody's, either we must haul down our excessive labor cost or surrender our export business."

Yes?

And might we not at the same time haul down the corporation dividends, double dealing devices and financial excesses, corporation editor's salaries, advertising, press agents' and propagandists' charges, to European and Asiatic levels, and so effect a fairer and more equable adjustment of the prevailing increment between the mass that creates wealth and the cliques that don't?

If we reduce wage standards to foreign levels what guaranty have we that foreign competitors will not reduce them still lower?

That foreigners can beat us in the game of reduction decending has always been obvious, but that they cannot compete with us in the ascending scale is equally true.

The advancing scale of American wages and the efficiency of American enterprise has increased our population by a hundred millions in a hundred years. Why is it the population of Australia, Argentina, Canada or any other new country has not increased in proportionate ratio in the same period? Simply because people too poor to trade with themselves, lack the enterprise to develop their own natural resources sufficiently to attract immigration. Those who work for nothing can buy nothing and will have nothing to sell or exchange.

The Herald further insists that unless Labor gives Business a chance, Business must shut up shop. Which means, we presume, that Business would declare a closed shop and leave Labor to starve. Business must therefore believe in its own right to enforce closed shop conditions against labor and the public both.

In a fallacious attempt to sum up the inefficiency case for big business, the Herald cites the claim of "a publication put out by the Associated Employers of Indiana, . . . covering the work and the pay of bricklayers which goes right to the heart of the trouble."

Ahem!

The "heart of the trouble" seems to be, that, according to the veracious publication referred to, the wages of bricklayers, somewhere in Indiana, increased one and a quarter times since 1909, and, for lack of industrial efficiency the cost of bricklaying in the same locality has increased more than four and a half times in the same period.

Of course the increased cost of living or change of hands is not considered in the tabulated statistics reprinted in the Herald, it never is in such cases, neither are the gougings of profiteer building sharks, or any other factors except lazy labor. But the report of I. David Cohen, an investigator for the New York Globe, published the same date as the Herald editorial just quoted, may throw an illuminating sidelight on the question of inefficiency in American industry.

"During the War," said one large employer interviewed by Mr. Cohen, "we took on any one who applied—it mattered not what education he had nor what he could do or not do, so long as he could turn a wheel or push a barrow. To-day there is no dearth of applicants. We list all who want to work here, and rate them according to their education, training and ability."

Here is the substance of the inefficiency problem compressed in a single sentence. The requirements of war depleted the country of its skilled labor or diverted it to other channels. Unskilled, and ineffective labor of all kinds had to be impressed to take its place.

Abnormal conditions and unprecedented graft created unheard of and artificially exalted prices. Such prices had to be met by increasing wages to an enabling point equal to daily subsistance. The tyros could not lay as many bricks per day or lay them as well as the skilled veterans, but the employers have persisted in retaining them as a slap at Organized Labor.

In varying ratios the same conditions obtain in all industries, but that is no reason for America to go scabbing on China, or Japan, or India. The best way to revive industry and increase production is to encourage skill and enterprise among the workers.

A mechanical inspector testifying in the Shipping Board fraud investigation a few days ago, said: "It took me five years to learn to be a master riveter; now they turn 'em out in three weeks!"

And they are turning out sailors, and saddlers, bricklayers and bunkomen of all sorts at the same rate and then chattering about efficiency.

The laborer who works for an honest living is entitled to a decent living, and is going to have it. If there is to be any reduction begin at the top where there is the most to spare. Prune the deadwood from the branches and spare the vigorous roots, and the Tree of Industry will thrive and flourish and "bring forth fruit in his season." J. H. W.

LABOR UNIONS OR WHAT?

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce with its various State, city and local branches has declared war on organized labor by issuing a decree intended to destroy the union shop.

Entrenched at present in temporary quarters in Washington, D. C., they are spending some two or three millions of dollars in the erection of a permanent home there and it will be from our National seat of Government that the coming war will be directed. The Wall Street Journal in a recent editorial said: "No law can prevent strikes. But law firmly enforced can prevent unions," so the selection of Washington, D. C., as their citadel no doubt has a motive behind it.

While we recognize the harm this organization is capable of doing Labor, organized and unorganized, in their attempt to consummate their unholy desires, we are in no way presuming that success will crown their efforts. However, let us visualize for a moment what might happen should such a reactionary step be taken by Capital.

First, let it be understood by this Autocracy of Greed that the Labor Movement as we know it was born of necessity and has been nourished on injustice and tyranny. We have been starved, beaten, shot and jailed by the same forces that now demand our annihilation and we have thrived on the diet. We have suffered and marched on smiling but we have not forgotten a single abuse heaped upon us. Our treasuries have been depleted and our individual membership dented but our spirit has ever remained above par. The inherent justice of collective bargaining is too plain a principle of right to succumb to any attempt on the part of self-appointed Czars and Kaisers who may hope to strangle it.

Organized labor, after all, is the ruler of our destinies. Shall that ruler be swayed by emotion or shall it be controlled by calm judgment? Shall it blindly follow passion's dictates or shall it with seeing eyes and measured tread follow a course mapped out by careful judgment?

The spirit and the voice of Labor is now expressed through the orderly, constructive channels of the A. F. of L. Destroy the A. F. of L. by destroying the union shop and you have destroyed the safety-valve on the seething caldron of men's hopes, aims and ambitions.

Europe, especially Italy, should afford a picture well worth the scrutiny of Organized Capital and we trust enough sanity remains among our captains of industry to counsel against a plan that if carried out as announced means, Labor Unions or What? with Hades to pay in the attempted transition.—Cigarmakers' Journal.

IS TOBACCO NEXT?

Self-appointed "Saviors" (usually under the leadership and guidance of well paid professional reformers) are persistent in their attempts to separate mankind from its recognized solace, tobacco.

Any movement of this kind is for the most part only an opportunity for restive men and women who have too much unoccupied time on their hands to indulge in some imaginary uplift work.

It is passing strange that we find many of those who during the war were actively engaged in backing "tobacco for the boys over there" funds now bewailing the injury tobacco is doing the human race. Just what reason they have for declaring a thing that was recognized as a benefit in war time now a menace is beyond the analysis of the average mind, but they are doing it.

If these people are really sincere in their desire to "Reform" why do they not exercise their energies toward accomplishing something that will really benefit mankind?

There are surely more fertile fields to till, if they are out for the purpose of doing good, than to spend their days and nights in decrying the use of tobacco which has never broken a home or cracked an ambition.

We opine that the same energy directed toward an effort to improve the housing situation of our workers, the child labor laws, sanitary workshops or a thousand and one other recognized defects of our present-day civilization would in its general effect for the common good be worth far more than the banishment of tobacco from the face of the earth.—Cigarmakers' Journal.

LIVING COST HITS SEA GULLS.

The almost total disappearance from local rivers of the sea gulls, which a few months ago in countless numbers circled around the ships and ferry-boats, brings to light a new angle of the high cost of living in Manhattan.

On high authority comes the word that the H. C. L. has driven them away. New Yorkers are so ecnomical at present that the sea gulls cannot find enough to live on hereabouts.

"Where have they gone?" replied an ornithologist to an inquiry. "There is no mystery about it. They have gone where they find it easier to live. Those beautiful birds which we used to see on the Hudson and around the bay are now doubtless living at considerable distance out at sea."

He explained that the sea gull lives principally on food stuff retrieved from the water.

"When New Yorkers were forced to guard the market basket so rigorously and eliminate waste in every way, the sea gulls found their food supply curtailed to the vanishing point. They accordingly went where they could get it. You will find them to-day in the track of the coastwise steamships or farther out at sea, in the lanes of the Atlantic liners, where there is not so much economy in the ship's galley."—New York Sun.

THE USE OF WATER POWER.

The recent convention in Washington of the Water Power League of America emphasized a number of thoughts which have already taken a firm place in the minds of men who read and think on what they read. Transforming water power into commercial energy goes on, perhaps not so fast as water power prophets and enthusiasts would like, yet with great strides. Greater strides are in near prospect. As black coal resources are impaired white coal resources will be drawn on. Greatest and earliest progress will be made in the development of water power into electric energy in those parts of the country where it can be applied to machinery cheaper than steam energy. The future of water power is secure. Every river above the fall line and every river and creek at the fall line has the power of driving wheels and shafting. Rivers in their tidal parts have this power, and as the demand arises for its employment, that demand will be met. Perhaps the tides of the sea, the ocean currents that sweep up the Atlantic and down the Pacific coasts and the waves that beat on the shore of the continent may be called on to drive machinery to produce the things that men need and want.—Washington Star.

There is no "easy way" in labor's struggle for better conditions. Freedom's rights come only as a result of organized effort directed through a centralized plan of procedure. Theories and short cuts while appealing in form have proven barren of results. Our full force and strength must be thrown behind our present organization. Improvement is always possible and he who helps to improve serves the workers, while he who decries and destroys helps the employer.

(By Laurence Todd)

Senator Harding's paper, the Marion Star, has published an editorial since election day, demanding the passage by Congress of a sedition bill "with teeth." The Poindexter bill seems to be particularly favored by the newspaper owned by the President-elect of the United States. If such a bill became law, and were enforced, the freedom of American wage workers to organize and strike, or even to hold meetings or print newspapers or leaflets discussing the need for strikes, would be put in continual peril, if not immediately destroyed.

Around the capitol, as the members of the Senate and House drift back from home to begin the winter's work, one hears continual discussion of the question —Is labor going to behave when "business" cuts wages? Are we in for a period of social unrest, and what will come of it, when "business" gives organized labor the knockout blow?

Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union of America, and Paul M. Warburg, partner in the Wall Street banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., have recently offered suggestions, in press interviews, which indicate that they do not believe that "business will celebrate a victory over the labor movement." Both men have been in Europe in 1920, and have studied the new position of both capital and labor there. They agree that it is the workers who are today the constructive force in Europe and the one element who may possibly save European civilization from collapse. They find the old order in Europe dying, and the Europe of organized labor taking control.

Furuseth says that sedition legislation and attempts by the old ruling power to suppress free speech, free press, the right of free assembly and organization and the right of political asylum, are as evident in all parts of Europe as in America. He finds the working class as determined to remain free and extend its own economic and political power, there as here. While American labor is called conservative, and the organized labor movement in many parts of Europe is aggressively radical, the measures employed against organized labor on both sides of the Atlantic are much the same, because the object sought by the men who rule the world through money are the same. Money power has displaced the power of hereditary monarchs and nobles as the actual ruler in civilized nations. Now the wage-workers' movement threatens to replace the power of money by the power of industrial democracy. Naturally, the money power fights back. It wants to survive. All earlier forms of human authority have grown, flourished and died. The money power is now past its prime—due to its failure in the Great War—and it refuses to step aside. It is trying to destroy the very ladder by which it ascended to authority—the ladder of civil liberties. It replaced the hereditary monarchs and nobles by the use of free speech, free press, free assembly and the right of political asylum.

In Furuseth's opinion, Russia has made forever impossible the suppression of the working class movement. He does not believe that the Russian Soviet system will be adopted as the method of applying the power which the workers will win for themselves throughout the world, but he thinks that as a result of Russia's example the workers of Italy, Germany, France and other countries will go steadily forward to the trying out of their own plans. It is because the money power knows their determination and their program, which does away with the money power, that the desperate game of suppressing civil liberties is played by money-power politicians around the world.

Paul Warburg, banker and student, comes back from Germany with an equally clear notion that there is to be no truce by organized labor in Europe with organized money power.

"Capitalistic society," he says in a New York Times interview, "as represented by the various governments, has not been able to shake off its extremists as rapidly and energetically as has conservative labor. It is largely because of this and because these governments are too slow in retracing certain steps that labor has lost confidence in their efficiency and moral strength. Labor, therefore, defies their authority by taking recourse to so-called 'direct action.' . . . No government can rest its success and authority upon the mere exploitation of wrongs done by its opponents. If it wishes to survive, it is most essential that it clear its own skirts from mistaken acts or policies. At present the Bolsheviki and radical labor find their strongest support in the mistaken deeds, past and present, of governments directed or controlled by the will or fear of the bitter-enders and militarists."

Warburg said that the "present process of disintegration" of Europe must be arrested by constructive statesmanship or Europe will follow Babylon and Egypt and Athens and Rome into the gallery of past civilizations. He found that the new German republic had made a start at reconstruction by enacting a law requiring that industrial councils be created in every shop, every industry, every district, leading up to a national economic council, which acts as an advisory body to the national parliament. Professional as well as industrial workers are covered by this organization, which in time may become the real legislative body where questions involving the economic life of the nation are involved.

President Millerand of France, Warburg believes, is planning similar steps in the hope of saving something from the present desperate condition of French industrial affairs. The British Trade Union Congress has gone far toward educating the British nation in the work it must do to prevent a collapse of British industry and finance. In all of these countries, Warburg found that organized labor, through its leaders, was showing the way, while the business spokesmen were without a plan or the hope of agreement.

In view of this testimony, there is something humorous in the eager press statements of the anti-labor politicians and employers in the United States, and notably the statement of Senator Cummins, that anti strike legislation will have the support of the workers themselves.

Along the line of constructive information is a study which the International Labor Office at Geneva has begun. This is an inquiry into industrial production in all parts of the world, in its relations to conditions of labor, and the cost of living. In order to get the facts promptly, governmental statistics will be taken wherever these seem to be reliable. Main points to be covered are coal and raw materials, transport conditions, supplies of machinery and tools, exchange, credits, factors connected with labor, and psychological and moral factors.

One of the four chief demands of the Amsterdam international — the International Federation of Trade Unions—is that, along with socialization of the industries there shall be a fair distribution of the raw materials which the world offers to industry. Russia has been able to survive against a world of enemies because she used her raw materials, her coal, her transport and all the rest of her industrial resources as the property of the nation. There has been no waste by the cost-plus and graft route, no billions stolen by thieving contractors, no giving away of other billions of public property during her revolutionary war to political leaders as the price of their political activity. Hence Russia's people are less starved than the Austrians, Poles or Hungarians. Russian children are healthy, instead of dwarfed and diseased by starvation. The resources of the country have been used to save the Russians and Russia. Now the British and French governments are getting ready to open trade with the one big European nation that has had sense enough to conserve and develop its resources. Central Europe is largely bankrupt and living on alms.

News of the raids of the British government forces upon trade union headquarters in Dublin caused no surprise here. From the time of Jim Larkin's leadership of the great Dublin transport workers' strike, the heart of the Irish independence movement has been the struggle of the Irish wage-workers for a decent standard of living. British rule of Ireland has been maintained by the impoverishment of the Irish. That has meant the constant hammering down of the Irish working class into industrial subjection and economic misery. Nowhere in the world can be found more terribly criminal conditions of tenement housing than in Dublin. The British military government, now terrorizing and burning and killing throughout the island, is only displaying ordinary intelligence when it seizes the meeting places of the Irish trade unionists.

In this connection the State Department will be forced to show its hand once more, since the American Commission on Conditions in Ireland has asked for passports for five delegates who are to proceed to Ireland and England to take testimony on the atrocities committed in the Irish war. James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, and Dean Robert Morss Lovett of Chicago University, are two of the delegation. There is a very close sympathy between our State Department and the British government, and it is probable that the British government has suggested that the passports be refused. If the refusal is decided upon, the American people will be given a new light on the outcome of the American Revolution.

It may have been while thinking of some of these evidences of the relative authority of governments in London and elsewhere that the editor of the Machinists' Journal recently printed the American Declaration of Independence, in full, in his news columns. He thought it time that the membership refresh their memory of the seditious character of that document.

sistence—a minimum which is barely sufficient to ward off famine and cold.

For such, however, who are accustomed to go hungry occasionally (and when I say "go hungry" I mean it in the literal sense of the word, and not as a bit of rhetoric); for such who have always worn rags instead of stockings, and footwear made out of tree bark, and in whose huts Jack Frost always occupied a prominent place; in other words, for the unskilled laborers and peasants of Russia, who never had enough to eat, to say nothing of the comforts of life to which the workmen and the farmers of America are accustomed to a certain extent, to these Russia, even of today, is a paradise. No matter how little these have now, they still have more than what they had under the Czar. No matter how poorly they live today, they still live better than under the regime of the knout. In addition to that, while under the old regime they were kept in ignorance and were never given to understand that they can hope and aspire for something better, they are now being educated constantly to the fact that the reason for the present bitter conditions in Russia is because the country is engaged in carrying out a social revolution while the entire world is combating them. They are told that not only the capitalists of the entire world, but even the workers in other countries are opposing them. They are being informed that their tribulations will not last long, and assurances to that are given them by quotations from Karl Marx and other great men, the names of whom they never heard heretofore. They must win before the general situation in the country can improve. And they fervently believe that as soon as the general state of affairs in the land will improve, their lot will improve too, until the promises of their leaders, the Bolsheviki, will have become realized in full and they will get their full measure of returns from the wealth of Mother Earth and the endeavor of human labor.

And that is precisely the cause why the workers and the peasants of Russia, particularly those who were even more impoverished than what they are at present, are so inspired with the ideas of Bolshevism and so enthusiastic for its leaders. That is the reason why they join voluntarily in tens of thousands the ranks of the Red Army. That is precisely the reason why it was possible for them to destroy the armies of Denikin and Kolchak and to score great victories from time to time over the Polish Army, a better clad and fed army and much better armed than theirs. Today, Wrangel's army is meeting the same fate as the armies of Denikin and Kolchak, and there is little doubt that Soviet Russia will be able to make short shrift of any other counter revolutionary army that might arise in Southern Russia, or anywhere else.

I shall never forget my trip from Smolensk to Minsk. Our car was hitched to a train which led 72 other cars packed with Red Army soldiers. They were being conductd to the Minsk front, where fighting with the Poles was going on. The soldiers looked miserable in their dirty, ragged uniforms and shirts, and many of them were completely shoeless. Nevertheless, they appeared a happy-looking lot. And how inspiringly they sang—not the songs of the old Russian Army, but the "Internationale" and other revolutionary songs that I have heard so frequently before. Only those who fight for a great cause and who feel that in their hands lies the success or the failure of this fight can make merry and sing at a time when their stomachs are empty and their bodies filthy and rarely covered.

The train was moving along very slowly, about 10 or 12 versts an hour. The locomotive was old and dilapidated, and no sooner would it begin to go than it would commence snorting and creaking with age until we would get to the nearest station for a long-needed rest. In America, or in any other land, such a dragged-out journey would have made me impatient and nervous. There in Soviet Russia I enjoyed this ride immensely. The slower the train moved the more distinctly I could hear the songs that rose from the freight cars, and the creaking of the locomotive sounded like a bass accompaniment to the strong tenor voices from the Red Army men.

The weather was beautiful and mild, and as the train would stop at every station for 15 or 20 minutes, I would go down to observe the train depots and the great crowds always on the platform. All the waiting rooms, I noticed, were decorated inside and outside with red flags and the pictures of Karl Marx, Lenine and Trotsky. At each railroad station there are reading rooms, where persons of all ages sit at long tables and read newspapers. In bygone days, so I was told, this space was occupied by buffets, where vodka and other intoxicants were sold. At the present time the room makes the appearance of a neat little library in which quiet and sobriety prevail.

I never regretted so much my scant knowledge of Russian as on that trip from Smolensk to Minsk. I was eager to speak with some of these soldiers and hear from their own tongues what they have to say about the present conditions in Russia, to find out from them personally as to whether they know that their fight is not an ordinary one, and to learn how far they are ready to sacrifice themselves for the principles of Marx, Lenine, Trotsky and the others, whose names they worship. With one of them, who appeared to be a German, as I heard him speak a few words in German, I attempted to start a conversation. I soon learned, however, that I made a mistake. His German vocabulary consisted of six German words which he had learned during three months of captivity in an Austrian camp. He immediately began talking Russian to me, and from his lengthy reply I understood only one word, and that is "tovarisch" (comrade).

"Tovarisch, tovarisch!" Wherever two or more congregate, you hear constantly that word. Whether you address Lenine or you speak to a plain mouzhik, whether in reply to a question or in asking a question, one begins and ends talking with "tovarisch." In the Red Army one addresses the other with the same word: it is "tovarisch soldat," "tovarisch colonel," "tovarisch officer," etc., etc. As far as I could observe, this word is used not only as a matter of courtesy, such as the word "mister" in America, but because in Soviet Russia they faithfully believe that all men are comrades and should address each other that way. During all the four days that I spent on that journey with the soldiers, I only once heard a soldier swear at a comrade of his, and even that began with "tovarisch."

At every station I found Jewish families, refugees from the little towns of White Russia occupied by the Poles. The poverty and the destitution of these wanderers is beyond description. The nearer our train approached Minsk, the more of these unfortunates I noticed along the tracks, most of them going by foot for dozens of miles from their former homes to the stations.

Where are they going? Whither are they running? They do not know themselves. Anywhere, to escape from the Poles. They would be happy if they would be admitted into Soviet Russia. Unfortunately, Soviet Russia is in such a condition today that it cannot feed its own population, and these unforunate wanderers are compelled to seek refuge under the open skies at the stations in wait for the Red Army to recapture from the Poles their little settlements so that they might return home in safety.

These wanderers are convinced that the Red Army will conquer the Poles. They would have to lose their faith in God if the outcome were different. But who knows how long that may take? Winter is coming and they are half-famished and scantily dressed.

ELECTRICITY IN NAVIGATION

While the French Minister of Marine was on his way to Camaret-sur-Mer (Brittany) he witnessed experiments on board the gunboat "Belliquese" in the use of an apparatus for navigating the ship in foggy weather by means of submerged cables. The inventors, Captain Andouard and Captain Floch, were warmly congratulated by the Minister. The plan necessitates the laying of a strongly electrified cable along the ocean bed, the position to be charted and known to the master of every vessel crossing the Atlantic. A finely adjusted instrument, to be located in the hold of the ship, picks up the vibrations emanating from this cable, even should the vessel go several miles out of its course in stormy weather, and by rapidly consulting his chart the navigator will be able to find himself in a few hours directly above the guiding cable.

One-half of the world's supply of white paper is used in this country.

Labor News

The Fleischmann Malting Company at Louisville, Ky., has signed a union shop agreement with the Brewery Workers' Union. Wages are increased $5 a week.

The Trenton (New Jersey) Raincoat Company has locked out its employes because they refuse to accept piecework. The management also refuses to sign an agreement with the union, affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Nine members of Machinists' Union No. 351 of Hoboken, N. J., are serving three months in jail for violating a labor injunction issued at the request of the Bijor Motor Company. The union is fighting the jailing of these workers, who insisted on their right to tell of conditions at the motor plant.

Organized workers in Tennessee are jubilant over the defeat of Governor Roberts by Colonel Alf A. Taylor, Republican. Governor Roberts has been running amuck on a hysterical campaign of "law and order" and union baiting. The workers lined up 100 per cent. against him through non-partisan committees and accomplished what many people declared to be "impossible."

The Federal Board for Vocational Education Press Bureau states that most of the ex-service men's opportunities for training on the job have been made possible by labor unions waiving their apprentice regulations that these world war veterans may have special privileges. "Train a man into employment" is the slogan of the Federal Board. In other words, train a man till he is so efficient that he naturally steps into a paying job.

The Great Southern Lumber Company, which operates the largest mill in the world at Bogalusa, near New Orleans, has laid off large numbers of workers and cut wages 7 cents an hour. The old scale was 40 cents and the new rate is 33 cents for a ten-hour day. The Great Southern Lumber Company recently locked out several hundred employes who were organizing at the time. Company thugs fired on the headquarters of the union and killed several workers.

The Labor Bulletin of Kansas City asks Governor Allen what he intends doing in the case of farmers who are holding their wheat because of prices that they declare are below production costs. It is stated that at Salina and other points in Kansas wheat growers are picketing elevators and mills, "and refuse to allow any 'scab' grower to market his wheat at the price now paid." Under the Allen "can't-strike" law these farmers are retarding the sale of foodstuffs and are liable to a penitentiary sentence and fine.

Small town and country newspapers in Ohio are being furnished well written and illustrated stories on the efficient manner in which a State constabulary protects sheep from the ravages of dogs. Farmers are assured that if Ohio passes a constabulary law chicken thievery and other robbery will be unknown in agricultural sections. Trade unionists show that special interests are playing the familiar game to secure farmer support for their pet cossacks, who will be stationed in industrial centers, as is the case in Pennsylvania.

FRERICHS NAVIGATION SCHOOL

529½ BEACON STREET, SAN PEDRO, CAL.
Seafaring people who desire to take up navigation, San Pedro, situated in the sunny south, is the ideal place. Captain Frerichs has established a Navigation School here and under his undivided personal supervision students will be thoroughly prepared to pass successfully before the United States Steamboat Inspectors.

Seattle, Wash., Letter List.

Under a rule adopted by the Seattle Postoffice, letters addressed in care of the Sailors' Union Agency at Seattle can not be held longer than 30 days from date of delivery. If members are unable to call or have their mail forwarded during that period, they should notify the Agent to hold mail until arrived.

Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,
> FRANK MANNING,
> Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Contract breaking by shoe merchants has become so general that the Boston Boot and Shoe Club adopted resolutions in support of the "inviolability of contracts." Governor Coolidge told the club that contract breaking is a bad practice.

Montgomery Ward & Co., mail order house, report that total sales for the first ten months of this year amounted to $91,386,435, as compared with $79,980,901 during of the company predict that the total sales for 1920 will be more than $100,000,000.

Hundreds of workers in Philadelphia are protesting against taxation on their homes that are assessed from the standpoint of inflated values. During the past year these workers have been coerced to buy homes at exorbitant prices by real estate sharks who conducted a "buy-or-get-out" campaign. The protesters claim that the added taxation makes their burden unbearable.

The United States Supreme Court has ruled that the State of Maryland can not compel drivers of Government automobiles to carry a State license. The Government was upheld in its claim that the license law "was an evasion of the constitutional freedom of Federal operation from State control."

John Hautain, a former resident of Boston, is suing the United States Steel Corporation in the Federal Court for $50,000 damages because of the death of his wife. During the steel strike last fall the couple were living at Newcastle, Pa., where Mrs. Hautain was killed by a steel trust gaurd. She was walking on the street at the time.

The New York Telephone Company wants increased rates. At a hearing before the Public Service Commission city attorneys showed that the company set aside $450,000 this year for advertising "to influence the public and the commission on its application for increased rates." It was also shown that this poverty-stricken concern has a surplus of $45,000,000 and a depreciation reserve of $69,000,000.

Last year 6,978 persons were killed and 149,053 were injured on the railroads of this country, reports the Interstate Commerce Commission. Of the killed 273 were passengers and of the injured 7,456 were passengers. Employes killed during the year number 2138 and 131,018 were injured. Fewer trespassers on railroads were killed in 1919 than during any year of the commission's records, which go back to 1890. Last year 2553 trespassers were killed and 2658 injured.

The corn production of the United States this year, according to a statement by Secretary of Agriculture Meredith, amounts to nearly three and a quarter billion bushels, worth at present prices approximately a billion dollars less than it would have brought a year ago. This year's cotton crop, of about twelve million bales, Secretary Meredith says, falls more than a third of a billion dollars short of the value it would have had last year. The average price of cotton seed has fallen from $60 a ton to $20. Wool clip and other products share the same experience. The total shrinkage of prices to farmers he assesses as two and a half billion dollars, or nearly 17 per cent.

The harbor tug "Ox," 177 tons gross, 450 horsepower, owned by the U. S. Shipping Board, is reported sold to John W. Sullivan, New York, for $78,400.

The schooner "Marion N. Cobb," 360 tons reg., built and owned at Rockland, Me., in 1902, has been sold to the Whitney-Bodden Shipping Co., Mobile, Ala.

The Norwegian S. S. "Mod," 5,135 tons gross, 3,261 net, carries about 8,000 tons deadweight, built at Newcastle in 1920 and owned by I. A. Christensen, Christiania, is reported sold for about £272,500.

The S. S. "Charles H. Cramp," 6,220 tons gross, 3,812 net, carries about 9,400 tons deadweight, built at Philadelphia in 1920, and owned by the U. S. Shipping Board, is reported sold to the Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific S. S. Co., Baltimore, for $1,739,000.

The French S. S. "Hadrumete," ex "Robert C. Sudden," 1,469 tons gross, 853 net, built at Oakland, Cal., in 1917 and "Utique" (Fr. wood s. s.), ex "Lucinda Hanify," 1,509 tons gross, 794 net, built at San Pedro, Cal., in 1917, both owned by the Soc. Gen. de Houilles et Agglomeres, La Rochelle, have been sold to Andrew Mahony and Thomas Crowley, San Francisco, for $250,000 each.

The terms of deferred payment granted by the British Government to purchasers of ex-enemy vessels are ten per cent. on acceptance of offer, forty per cent. on delivery of ship, and balance in five equal six monthly installments under promissory note with interest at bank rate, varying minimum five per cent., the vessels to be insured and mortgaged to the Government except in cases where satisfactory bankers' guarantees are accepted.

Of the 526 steamers and sailers that entered the port of New York during the month of October, nearly one-fourth came in ballast. A new record for the port of New York for 1920 was set by the clearance of 515 ships during the month with a net aggregate tonnage of 1,719,103. A total of 526 ships, aggregating 1,734,286 net tons, entered the port. Of the vessels entered, 154 came in with bulk cargoes, while 251 had general merchandise.

The movement of immigration at Brazilian ports during the first six months of the current year shows a steady increase over the previous four years, aggregating 32,653 immigrants, of whom 20,084 came to Rio de Janeiro, 12,216 to Santos, 202 to Bahia, 131 to Rio Grande do Sul, 7 to Paranagua and 13 to Florianopolis; 16,846 being Portuguese, 3,934 Italians, 2,341 Arabs, 1,597 Germans, 627 Japanese, 283 Poles, 256 British and 5,769 sundry nationalities.

With reference to the S. S. "Krakow," sunk in Havana harbor, local underwriters have been advised that salvors estimate the expense of raising the vessel at $150,000 and ask for a substantial deposit before commencing operations. The repair works at Regla, near Havana, have submitted an estimate of $1,200,000 to recondition the vessel after she is floated. It is estimated that the work would take eleven months to complete, of which three would be spent in the dry dock. Of course, no steps will be taken to raise the vessel unless her sound value after repair would exceed the market value.

News from Abroad

A new port is to be built at Comodoro Rivadavia at a total cost of 1,700,000 paper pesos, as a harbor of refuge for oil tankers and the small coasting boats that are largely contributory to the general trade movement of the Patagonian coast.

As much as possible of the 5,000,000 bushels of wheat, which is the estimated amount available for export from Australia, will be sold in the form of flour, in order to keep the flour mills busy and to retain the by-products in Australia.

Drug addiction is said to have taken a new hold in France since the war; it takes the form of opium smoking among the rich and the use of cocaine among the poor. The government has started an energetic campaign against the illicit importation of these and other drugs.

The Town Line, Ltd., managed by Harrison Sons & Co., London, which owns about sixteen cargo boats of various sizes, paid a dividend of 25 per cent. for the year ending June 30, 1920. The company's fleet of 51,676 tons d.w. is valued at just over £22 per ton d.w. The trading profit for last year was £502,803 and the issued capital of the company is £744,669.

No direct subsidies are paid by the Dutch Government to steamship companies. The Royal Holland Lloyd to South America formerly received a subsidy, but it ceased during the war and only the Royal Packet Co., which runs several lines connecting all the Dutch East Indian ports with each other and with Singapore and Australia, secures an indirect subsidy by its possession of a monopoly of the Dutch East Indian coast traffic. This monopoly was granted because the Goverment requires the company's steamers to call at many ports without commercial importance.

A dispatch from London says that "for brutally hazing three cadets and tearing loose the scalp of the cook aboard the American steamship 'Mulput' while in port here, three members of the crew have been sentenced to jail, two of them for four months and the other for two months. The captain of the vessel, in reporting to the Consul the hazing of the cadets, said they were stripped and lathered with soap and then shaved from head to foot. In the assault on the cook the latter's scalp was torn from his skull." [The list of American vessels does not contain the name of the steamship "Mulput," although there is a "Mulpua," 6,139 tons, owned by the U. S. Shipping Board.]

The Byron S. S. Company of London, will shortly enter the emigrant trade between Greek ports and New York in a joint service with the Embiricos fleet which is run under the Greek flag as the National Steam Navigation Company, Ltd., of Greece. For this purpose the Byron S. S. Company has acquired from the British Government the former Hamburg-American liner "Cleveland," 16,960 tons, 15½ knots, built in 1908, one of the boats surrendered on the Armistice and which has since been operated by the White Star Line in the Liverpool-New York service under the name of "Mobile." In addition, the ex-Norddeutscher Lloyd liner "Roon," 8,174 tons, 14½ knots, built 1902, has been transferred to Greece by the British Government and will be operated in the same service.

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

ATLANTIC FISHERMEN'S AGREEMENT

Terms and Conditions of Employment in Trawlers

Secretary Wm. H. Brown of the Fishermen's Union of the Atlantic, with headquarters at Boston, Mass., has favored the Journal with the article published on this page.

The new agreement in the trawling branch of the North Atlantic fishing industry has many new and progressive features.

There is now no longer any doubt that the fishing industry has made "some" strides since the old days when a man dug his own clams for bait and put out in his own small sloop to his favorite grounds and brought in his own catch to the local market to sell, up to the present time when it is organized and regulated by contracts like the one reviewed on this page.

Recently there has been announced the formation of a Joint Conference Council to handle labor relations of collective interest in the trawling branch of the North Atlantic fishing industry on a basis of peaceful negotiation and cooperative dealing between the workers and employers. The organization of the council is the result of a series of conferences which have been going on for the past six months. These conferences ended in an agreement, covering a period of three years, for the establishment of the council with its necessary accompanying machinery. The agreement has been signed by the Gorton-Pew Fisheries Company of Gloucester, the Bay State Fishing Company of Boston, the Frank C Pearce Company of Gloucester on the employers' side, and on the workers' side by business agents of the Fishermen's Union of the Atlantic—a phrase, by the way, which probably causes the bones of the First Deep-Sea Fisherman to turn restlessly in Davy Jones' Locker.

A similar agreement will be concluded in the near future, the groups which brought about this agreement hope and expect, covering a substantial number of vessels in the schooner branch of the fishing industry in the North Atlantic also.

The Joint Conference Council in the trawling branch has already got down to work on problems relating to processes of production, as well as education and questions of Federal and State co-operation with the industry. Various phases of marketing have been up for discussion, it is stated, with beneficial results in the way of securing the fishermen's co-operation.

The preamble of the agreement recently signed declares:

"We recognize that the interests of workers and employers and of the consuming public are at many points fundamentally identical in the fishing industry. It is our earnest desire at all times to promote this community of interest, and to establish the control of labor relations in our industry on the permanent basis of cooperation and mutual understanding, with peaceful negotiations and sympathetic appeal to mutual adjustment of any difficulties that may arise, as the methods of dealing with each other."

The agreement sets forth these general principles to govern the labor policy for the industry:

"(1) All parties in the industry shall continuously strive to promote and maintain just and harmonious relations between employers and workers, based upon the principles of equity and sympathetic investigation of fact, recognizing that the prime essential in the co-operative control of labor relations by workers and employers is not the particular form of administration that may be set up, but the attitude of all parties concerned toward each other and toward any plan that may be adopted.

"(2) The industry recognizes the propriety and necessity of its workers receiving a reasonable living wage as a minimum, which wage shall be sufficient to provide for the necessities of life as well as for progressive standards of living; and it further recognizes that a proper relation between a guaranteed minimum amount of remuneration and a reasonable opportunity for earnings above that minimum should be maintained.

"(3) It is recognized that in all wage adjustments, after proper provision has been made for the principle of the minimum wage as set forth above, due recognition shall be given to the economic conditions of the industry.

"(4) Barring factors inherent in the nature of the industry and other uncontrollable conditions, continuity of employment and reasonable quality and degree of production consistent with full safeguards for the health and well-being of the workers and the general welfare of the industry, are essential.

"(5) Uniform and comprehensive methods of investigation and record on labor relations and related factors throughout the industry are prerequisite to any sound basis of fact for determining proper conditions throughout the industry.

"(6) All matters requiring adjustment shall he settled through regularly established channels of candid discussion and peaceful negotiation and adjustment, without resort to lockouts, strikes, boycotts, blacklist or other such methods.

"(7) All matters requiring adjustment shall be settled, insofar as possible, at their source, without the exercise of appeal except as a last resort.

"(8) Due recognition shall be given in all questions to the protection of local interests.

"These principles governing our labor policy are frankly predicated upon the right of both employers and workers to organize as they may wish in any lawful associations without discrimination, to bargain collectively when they desire, and to be represented by representatives of their own choosing in negotiations and adjustments with respect to terms and conditions of employment and work in the industry."

Particular questions pertaining to wages, conditions of work and other terms of employment are left for special negotiation from time to time as occasion may warrant.

The chief machinery for administering these matters is composed of a Joint Conference Council, upon which there is equal representation of employers and workers. This council is made the directive agency for dealing with all questions of collective interest between the employers and workers. While it will deal as far as possible only with matters of policy, it is to exercise its best efforts to settle by candid discussion all matters requiring action which cannot be satisfactorily agreed upon by the agencies of lower jurisdiction. It is expressly provided that that Joint Conference Council shall endeavor to reach such settlement by common agreement and without resort to arbitration. The underlying principle of the council, however, is to ascertain conditions and adjust the various questions of interest before disagreements arise.

Action by the council is determined by unanimous vote and all resolutions passed by it are submitted to the constituent bodies of the organizations that are parties to the agreement for ratification before they become effective. Thus it is made possible not only to maintain agreement on all matters on which the council takes action, but at the same time full protection is given to local interests whether represented by employers or workers.

Provision is made, however, for choosing, if occasion arises, a Board of Final Review, whose members in each instance are to be mutually acceptable to all parties concerned. Thus the greatest possible community of interest and confidence are promoted in case arbitration becomes necessary. This Board of Final Review makes possible final adjustment on any arbitrable matter which cannot be settled through mutual discussion, but it is to be employed only as a last resort.

Emphasis in all cases is placed upon the desirability of the plan that the interested parties discuss and reach common understanding without resort to appeal. In other words, the machinery is devised to promote the handling of labor relations by the parties of the first interest at their source and as growth from the bottom up. Thus the entire plan, recognizing and promoting direct dealing between employers and workers in a systematic and orderly way, is operative to develop by mutual agreement a body of industrial law and practice within the industry with a minimum of arbitration and a maximum of preventive and constructive measures.

In addition the employers have established a bureau of labor relations to study conditions and promote the well-being of the workers and employers and of the consuming public, and have retained their executive counsel on labor relations, who negotiated the agreement, to direct these activities, as well as to deal with the unions on a friendly basis.

AMERICAN PROTECTORATES

American rule in some of the "republics" and insular possessions to the South is being gravely challenged. Shocking conditions have been alleged to exist in Haiti, where the former commander-in-chief of the Marine Corps reports that American marines have been guilty of indiscriminate killing of the native population. In Santo Domingo the American occupation has been bitterly arraigned. In both of these theoretically independent countries American naval and military forces have apparently become the real government and at the same time grievous social conditions have been perpetuated.

In two of the insular possessions circumstances appear to be almost as serious. The question of sovereignty is not at issue in Porto Rico and in the Virgin Islands, but other questions have been made the basis of a harsh criticism of American colonial policy. Neglect to meet the responsibility to deal fairly with social and industrial conditions is the burden of these latter charges.

The Nation, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Brigadier General George Barnett, former commandant of the Marine Corps, are jointly responsible for the new consideration which is being given Haiti. James Weldon Johnson, formerly United States consul in Venezuela, Nicaragua and in the Azores, made an investigation of conditions in Haiti on behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which he is field secretary. The Nation published four articles embodying some of Mr. Johnson's observations. He criticized vigorously American policy in Haiti. Among other things he said that American intervention has wantonly destroyed Haitian independence, that American military forces have ruthlessly killed Haitian people, that American bureaucrats have exploited the country, and that the American intervention has served the financial interests of the National City Bank of New York, which, according to Mr. Johnson, is the real power in the republic. Just at the time that the Nation's articles were directing attention to Haiti, Secretary of the Navy Daniels published a report which General Barnett had made to him and in which the former commandant referred to indiscriminate killings by members of the Marine Corps. The Secretary of the Navy stated that the Barnett report had been made public the day after it reached him. Furthermore, immediately a court of inquiry was constituted and to its work high naval and marine officers were assigned. If the court does its work the truth concerning Haitian affairs ought to be ascertained and put into perspective.

Insular officials are in part responsible for knowledge of evil conditions which obtain in Porto Rico.

The Virgin Islands, so-called by Christopher Columbus, were transferred to the United States on March 3, 1917, by Denmark. The islands were purchased because of their strategic value for naval purposes. They are part of a far flung line of defense. With the harbors and potential forts the United States possesses, jurisdiction over equity over some 26,000 people and responsibility for political, social and industrial conditions which are certainly not American. As to the facts in the Virgin Islands there is little dispute. In a book entitled "The Virgin Islands of the United States of America," published in 1918 by G. P. Putnam's Sons, Luther K. Zabriskie, formerly American vice-consul at St. Thomas, relates the facts which are now the substance of the islanders' grievances. The population is composed very largely of colored people, the Bureau of Census having found only 7.4 per cent. whites. The islands seem to be dominated by large plantations. The franchise is restricted to property owners. Wages are extraordinarily low. In a general way the sort of feudalism which so many democratic countries maintain in their colonial possestions is characteristic of the Danish and to a lesser extent of the American rule in the Virgin Islands.

Protest has been made against the perpetuation of these conditions. Among others, Rothschild Francis, a member of the colonial council of St. Thomas, is now in this country seeking to enlist American interest in the affairs of the Virgin Islanders. Mr. Francis says:

"The one good thing that the American Government has done since taking the islands is to establish fairly good schools and hospitals. The naval surgeons have been forces making for better conditions. The chief complaint is that out of a population of 18,000 in St. Thomas only 210 people can vote. The present wages are from 40 cents to a dollar a day for all classes of labor. Since the Danish taxation system has been retained uncultivated land pays no tax and does not produce. The great demand of the natives is for land in small holdings, but the owners, who are chiefly Danes, refuse either to sell or to let small holdings. In order to vote an income of $300 a year is needed. As a consequence of this class franchise the natives can get no favorable legislation. Housing conditions are appalling."

Mr. Francis criticized unfavorably the activities of the Marine Corps in the Virgin Isalnds, but he had only words of praise for the insular governor, J. W. Oman, who, he stated, is endeavoring without the co-operation of the legislature, to remedy conditions.

In general many of the wrongs and hardships which are complained of in the Virgin Islands are those found in Porto Rico and in that entire region of colonies and dependencies. Conditions thoroughly un-American, conditions which do violence to every wholesome tradition of this republic, obtain. These conditions are largely not of American creation, but we are accountable for their perpetuation. There needs of course to be official inquiry into each one of the islands in which grievances exist. But more than that it is necessary for the American people to define policies and principles. The Monroe Doctrine has been at work now for a hundred years. Decade by decade since the eighteen-nineties the Monroe Doctrine has added to our colonies and dependencies. Without intending it we are becoming an imperial nation and we with disquietude are discovering the train of injustice and of brutality which so often follows in the wake of empire. What do we purpose with these islanders? Why are we there? Events which varied only slightly in texture have composed a chain which from Cleveland to Wilson, from McKinley to Roosevelt to Taft, have actually made a policy. But it has been an unconscious and to an extent an unformulated policy. The wrongs which we have inflicted or which we have not prevented are sufficient now to call forth an inventory of conditions, on which with justice to ourself and to the world a reasonable program may be built.—WILLIAM L. CHENERY, in the Survey.

THE SEAL CENSUS.

The United States Bureau of Fisheries is engaged in taking the annual census of the seals which are under Government protection. The returns are expected to show about 600,000 head, or three times as many animals as were in existence when the Government took over their custody ten years ago.

Hugh M. Smith, Commissioner of the bureau, estimates that the seals are increasing at the rate of 10 to 12 per cent. of their number annually. Last year's count showed 550,000, 26,000 of which were killed for their pelts. Commissioner Smith says that a seal census is important to prevent "blind killing."

In the middle of Bering Sea, lying forty miles apart, are two islands—St. George and St. Paul—the only land to which seal ever resort. Every spring they visit the islands to rear their young, leaving in the fall to winter in the north Pacific, and it is during the summer that the census is taken.

The killing of the animals is also done in the summer, this under law being confined to the surplus males. Last year lack of labor resulted in 10,000 fewer animals being killed than Government officials had planned. Japan and Great Britain, along with the United States, share the revenue produced from the seal kill, a treaty giving this country 70 per cent. of the animals, with the other two countries each receiving 15 per cent.

In former times when 100,000 seals were being killed annually, the Government obtained $10 for each skin, while now the Government gets $140, of which $120 is net. Increase in the value of furs and improved methods of conducting the business account for the increase in the Government's revenue.

SALVING GOLD BARS.

The British Admiralty's salvage vessel "Racer" has concluded her operations for this year in connection with the recovery of bullion from the White Star liner "Laurentic," mined at the beginning of 1917 off the Donegal coast, Ireland, on the way to America with gold. Although the salvage work has been going on since June, the results have been very disappointing. The giant liner has so broken up that tons of metal have fallen on the strong room, where the gold was placed, making the work of the divers extremely difficult. The weather, too, has been most unsuitable throughout the summer, and the consequence is that there have been recovered only seven bars, worth between £1,200 and £1,500 each, this year. Last year £500,000 worth of gold was salved. There are still several million sterling worth of ingots awaiting salvage, and the operations will be resumed next spring.

A fifty-five-foot yawl crossed the Atlantic Ocean recently, covering a distance of 2108 miles in fifteen days and nine hours.

One-man Contracts Urged in Australia

The Australian conciliation and arbitration law has been amended by legalizing individual contracts with employers and members of organized labor.

Arbitration in the Australian commonwealth has been based on organization between employers and employes. Trade unionism is recognized that awards may prove effective and many awards provide that preference be given trade unionists by employers.

The workers now ask what will happen to arbitration courts when their awards run counter to agreements made by employers and individual workers.

The amendment is declared to be an attack on the powerful Australian Workers' Union, which recently established a 44-hour week and improved working conditions in the pastoral industry. It is claimed that the amendment was prepared some time ago by Chief Justice Mox, who was then counsel for the Graziers' Association.

Trade unionists say the amendment will weaken the workers' faith in the Federal arbitration court and they connect its passage with the retirement of Justice Higgins as president of the Australian court of conciliation and arbitration. He has been succeeded by an avowed cheap-labor advocate.

In opposing the amendment, Arthur Blakely, member of parliament and president of the Australian Workers' Union, stated that he would not recommend that that union remain registered under the arbitration act.

"We are prepared to get out," he said, "and discard the arbitration court altogether, depending upon conferences or direct action to protect our members."

Immigrants Aided by Ship Officials

Undesirable immigration is being stimulated by steamship officials and officials of European countries, who are shipping their most vicious elements to this country, declared Commissioner of Immigration Wallis in an address before the National Industrial Council. The Council is a federation of manufacturers' associations.

The Federal official's statements were most sensational. He said a world-wide conspiracy exists between officials of foreign countries and certain steamship officials to unload criminals and revolutionists in this port. The public officials want to get rid of these elements and the ship companies are interested in profits. The immigration commissioner said one ship arrived here with 1,100 immigrants listed as the ship's crew. These men quickly abandoned the ship when it was docked. The speaker estimated that in the next six years over 10,000,000 immigrants will come from Germany, Italy and Holland alone.

"We have traced this world-wide conspiracy very near to its point of origin," he said. "We now know that having failed to put through many of their undesirables by the usual immigration routes, the shippers of this human freight of anarchy have turned to the stowaway method. Recently the "Panama," from Mexico, had 16 stowaways; a steamship from Chile, 18; a steamship from Naples, 42, and a vessel from Constantinople, 16.

"Unless we restrict and unless we better the lot of those we accept—for an anarchist can be made in one day at Ellis Island—there will be terror and widespread crime in all our larger cities in the very near future."

Science Is Welcomed By Organized Labor.

Organized labor welcomes whatever assistance research and science can offer to modern industry, said President Gompers in an address to delegates at a preliminary conference on industrial research.

The trade unionist declared labor does not oppose the greatest production that is possible, but it does object to making production the object of life.

"A persistent effort," he said, "has been made to saddle upon labor the odium of opposition to improved methods and machinery in production. What labor has opposed is an effort to exploit them by the use of improvements that are intended as a blessing to mankind. Labor is rightly suspicious of changes that are introduced without explanation and whose effect upon their welfare is not considered.

"Labor is not opposed to increased production or improved methods. Quite the contrary. We reconize there can be no permanent betterment of standards of living for all except by increasing the things that contribute to better and more satisfactory living. But we hold as a fundamental that material products are not the ultimate of production, but service in a better life for humanity.

"Experience has taught organized labor that we can only maintain opportunity for freedom and well being when laws for industry are made for those directly concerned—the management and the workers."

Teachers and Jail Birds

In urging higher wage rates for public school teachers, the Philadelphia North American presents this comparison:

"The people of Tennessee pay their sheriffs 75 cents a day for feeding each inmate of a county jail, a total of $274 a year. Besides this, these prisoners get free lodging, light, heat and water and free medical and religious attention. They are not even asked to contribute to foreign missions. All told, each of them costs far more than the figure quoted for food, but for our present purpose that will suffice.

"The country school teachers in Tennessee, who are chosen to train a majority of the children of that State to be useful, intelligent citizens, receive an average annual salary of $258, according to the latest official figures. In addition to paying for their food, this sum must cover clothing, shelter, light, heat, water and medical attention, and they are expected to contribute their share to church support.

"So the people of Tennessee pay $16 a year more for the food of a prisoner than for the entire support of a rural school teacher."

World's Workers

The strike of coal miners in the State of Coahuila, Mexico, was ended during the week when the strikers returned to work on the Mexican Government terms, according to reports received here. The strikers won a wage increase of 20 per cent. They asked for 100 per cent.

The International Labor Office has been informerd that it may assume that in all probability the whole of the measures to be taken in Czecho-Slovakia in pursuance of the draft conventions adopted at the Washington conference, will be completed before the end of the year.

The Secretariat of the International Socialist Congress, has requested the International Labor Office to intervene in the question of the relations between the Poles and the Jews in Poland, by submitting to the proper authorities and organizations interested, suggestions concerning labor legislation. In a letter addressed to the office by the International Socialist Bureau, attention is called to the report of the Socialist International Committee appointed to study the relations between the Poles and the Polish Jews. This report declares that Anti-Semitism is always present in Poland, and may well lead to new troubles unless the Polish Government take energetic measures to put an end to the daily excesses committed by the soldiery, excesses which constitute a most flagrant violation of individual rights.

Since the recent victory of Polish imperialists and militarists a campaign of reprisals has been conducted by the government against the socialists and labor movement, particularly the Jewish element, because of their alleged sympathy for the Russians. Thousands of Polish and Jewish radicals have been imprisoned and shot for alleged treason to Dictator Pilsudski, who, it is said, is so afraid of his own people that he is constantly surrounded by a large bodyguard of troops under French officers. German, Russian and Czech communists have been sent into Poland to launch a propaganda against the present dictatorship and in favor of a regime which, if once in power, would immediately revise the Russian treaty and enact a new one satisfactory to the workers of both nations.

In spite of repressive measures taken by the Japanese government the past few months against organization of labor, the labor movement has grown apace. Unemployment has added to the suffering of the workers and discontent is growing on all sides. The "Laborers' Friendly Society," as the workers' associations are called (unions being forbidden by law), have secretly organized on national federative lines. Strikes and unemployment disturbances are becoming more frequent and the military despots in control of the government would welcome another international conflict as a means of suppressing their labor activities. The recent passage of the anti-Japanese land law in California has added to the discontent, the labor and liberal groups blaming the government and its imperialistic policy of aggression for much of the ill-feeling existing against the Japanese in America, Russia and China.

SAILORS' TEETH FIXED UP

SAILORS will find the best place to get their teeth fixed up is at a Painless Parker Dental Office. There is one of these offices in every port along the Pacific Coast of this country. A sailor can have the work done wherever it is the most convenient for him. If his work is begun in one Parker Office, he can have it finished in another. No matter which port he may be stopping in, he can go to the Parker Office in that port and be taken care of. See list of offices below.

Dr. Parker knows what the life of a sailor is, for when he was a boy he shipped before the mast, and he always tries to do sailors a favor whenever he can.

Sailors' teeth examined free. All work guaranteed and all prices moderate.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

The average toll charged to ocean-going commercial ships through the Panama Canal averaged $3831 32 last October. During that month these ships averaged 7.7 per day through the canal.

The Johnson Line, operating between the Pacific Coast and Scandinavia, has reduced the minimum requirement of freight from Portland to 500 tons for each sailing. The Pacific Coast agents of the Johnson Line are Messrs. W. R. Grace & Co.

Since the inauguration of the 20 per cent. increase in rail rates, the States of Oregon and Washington report that they have shipped more than a half million feet of lumber to the Atlantic via steamers through the Panama canal.

With the placing of steamers "Arizona" and "Mystic" on the Seattle trade route, the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company now has eight large cargo carriers with which to maintain the regular fourteen-day coast to coast sailing.

Articles of incorporation have been filed by the Six-Minute Ferry Company at San Francisco. With the incorporation of the company, it was announced that efforts were now under way for securing a shipyard site for the construction and repairing of three ferryboats to be used in the automobile-carrying trade between San Francisco and Oakland. W. H. Morrissey, a director of the company, sttaed that it was the company's plan to immediately start construction of the auto ferries as soon as the shipyard site has been located.

Japan will close the year 1920 with a balance of trade against her of approximately 370,000,000 yen, the U. S. Department of Commerce was informed by Commercial Attache Abbott at Tokyo. The department was advised that Japanese exports during November fell off 30,000,000 yen, while gold imports increased about 7,000,000 yen. Imports of merchandise amounted to 106,958,000 yen, an increase of 1 per cent over October. Figures on Japanese trade for the first eleven months of the year, as compiled by the department, place exports at 1,860,378,000 yen and imports at 2,226,985,000 yen.

Provisions of the national prohibition act extend to American ships, whether they be in American waters, on the high seas, or in foreign waters, Commissioner Williams of the Internal Revenue has ruled. Commissioner Williams' ruling, based on an opinion by Acting Attorney-General Frierson, was sent all collectors of internal revenue and Federal prohibition agents for their "information and guidance." The acting Attorney-General also held in the same opinion that the provisions of the revenue act imposing floor taxes on distilled spirits held for sale on American ships applied wherever the ship may be.

Bodies of twenty victims of the wreck of the barge "W. J. Pirrie," which struck on Cake Rock, off the Washington coast, on November 26, have been recovered and buried on the beach near Cape Johnson, according to advices from Neah Bay, Washington. The finding of the twenty bodies, with the rescue of Ernesto Aravena, seaman, and Carlos Peterson, second engineer, accounts for all persons known to have been aboard the vessel when she went down. Aravena and Peterson arrived at Seattle on December 3 from La Push, where they had been cared for since their rescue. Depositions of both survivors will be taken by the local board of United States Steamboat Inspectors at Seattle, but the formal hearing on the wreck will be held at San Francisco, it was announced.

The British light cruiser "Chatham," Commodore Alan Hotham commanding, arrived at San Diego from Chatham, England, on December 8. The cruiser was fifty-one days out via the Azores and Trinidad. Commodore Hotham said that the "Chatham" will sail from San Diego for Auckland, touching at Honolulu, the Fiji Islands and Samoa. A gift of the British Government, the "Chatham" is to be permanently attached to the New Zealand training and patrol squadron, of which the light cruiser "Philomel" is now the only active unit. During the war the "Chatham" was on submarine patrol and convoy duty along the North Scottish coast. The vessel carries a crew of 450 officers and men. Eight hundred tons of bunker coal was taken aboard the warship at San Diego.

The Army Transport Department of the United States Government has offered for sale three troopships, well known in San Francisco Bay for the part they played during the Spanish-American war. The vessels to be disposed of are the transports "Warren," "Kilpatrick" and the "Crook." Bids for the sale of the vessels will be open until January 8 of next year. All three vessels are particularly suited for the Pacific Coast and Alaskan trades, either as freighters or as combination cargo and passenger carriers. The vessels are also reported to be adapted for the South American trade. The vessels will require only minor overhauling to place them in readiness for any service, and the announcement states that they will be disposed of at an attractive figure. All of the transports have full marine equipment with the exception of navigating instruments. The vessels are completely outfitted for passenger service.

McCormick & McPherson, it was learned, have decided to return the 3600-ton freighter "Eastern Ocean" to the United States Shipping Board. The vessel was originally scheduled to proceed to Portland and Seattle to discharge a part cargo loaded in the United Kingdom, but the sailing was countermanded, and the vessel is now discharging her northern consignments at San Francisco. The shipment will be taken north on a vessel of the Admiral Line and the "Eastern Ocean" turned back to the Board. The "Eastern Ocean," unless some charter is secured for the craft, will be taken in tow and placed beside the other freighters laid up at Southampton Bay. Under the managing agency agreement, McCormick & McPherson have been operating the "Eastern Ocean" between United Kingdom ports and the Pacific Coast. Laying up of the craft is attributed to the same reason for tying up the other ten freighters—overberthing of the tonnage market of the world and the general depressed freight situation.

With the exception of approximately 100,000 feet of lumber, all of the timber cargo of the wrecked steamer "Joan of Arc" has been salved from the beach at Port Orford. Captain Cecil Brown, marine surveyor, has returned to San Francisco after spending a week directing operations for saving the vessel's cargo and reported that most of the lumber loaded on the craft had been washed on the beach after the "Joan of Arc" had gone to pieces under the pounding of the seas, releasing her cargo, most of which was stowed beneath her decks. As soon as the winter months are over, efforts will be centered on salving the engines and boiler of the wrecked steamer. For this purpose, according to Captain Brown, a wharf will have to be constructed to permit operations. The "Joan of Arc," which went ashore last month, was loaded with 1,300,000 feet of lumber for the account of the Charles R. McCormick Steamship Company. The Marine Underwriters took over the craft, following the action of the Rolph Navigation and Coal Company in relinquishing all claim to the vessel when it appeared that she would be a total loss.

Development of the Islais Creek-India Basin district of San Francisco's waterfront, rendering 280 acres of submerged land useful to commerce and industry, is urged by the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, who have placed their case before the United States District Engineer preliminary to obtaining an appropriation from Congress for the dredging of this area. In the estimation of the State Board, such a development as this should not be undertaken at once, but should be progressive, proceeding as fast as business conditions of the port justify. Ultimately, the improvement will provide berths for forty-nine steamships, each 500 feet in length, and six berths for vessels 300 feet in length. The solid-fill piers, as proposed, are 1060 feet in width and vary in length from 1600 to 3000 feet. The piers, which extend from these solid-fill structures to the pier head line, are 330 feet in width and 1100 feet in length. The sheds are planned to be of ample width, so that the cargo of the vessel can be accommodated in the space behind its own berth. The area for warehouse and industrial sites will amount to seventy-three acres, all close to deep water and served by railroad tracks.

Damage to the cargo and amidship section of the United American Line freighter "Sudbury," which put into San Diego during the week, was estimated to exceed $200,000. More than a score of grand and player pianos consigned to San Francisco firms and several hundred tons of high-grade cosmetics, chemicals and silks were destroyed. Fumes from burning chemicals in the lower hold were so strong that it took the local harbor fire-fighting force two hours to cut a hole in the steel bulkhead with an oxy-acetylene torch. Time and again the firemen were forced to flee up the steel ladder to the upper deck to escape asphyxiation. Captain Walter O'Brien and the crew of the "Sudbury" were freely praised here by shipping men for sticking by the ship. At one period the lifeboats were swung out and the men had manned the falls when it was decided to make one more effort. At that time the decks were so hot the men could barely walk on them, while the fumes had driven the helmsman from the wheel. To make matters worse, the pumps became clogged when there was seven feet of water in the hold, while the ship had a list to starboard of twenty degrees. The crew's tenacity saved the United American Line and underwriters more than $3,000,000, for the freighter was valued at $1,500,000 and the cargo at $2,225,000.

BLOOD MONEY?

The original champions of the Seamen's bill, which became the La Follette Seamen's Act in 1915, made one very definite claim. They claimed, or rather promised, that the Seamen's Act would have a tendency to equalize the wage cost of operation between American and foreign vessels touching at U. S. ports.

Has the promise been fulfilled?

Well, not one hundred per cent. in all instances but it has certainly been demonstrated that there is an almost irresistible tendency toward wage equalization. And that is the extent of the promise made.

Every now and then first hand and unimpeachable testimony comes to hand showing how this equalizing process is progressing.

Our contemporary, the Shipping Register, of San Francisco, furnishes some strong testimony in its current issue.

According to the Register the difficulties encountered by foreign ship officers in holding their crews together upon reaching the shores of the United States are well nigh insurmountable. At any rate, the point at issue is well brought out by the mate of a British tramp steamer upon his recent return to London from American waters. He is quoted, in part, as follows:

> Nowadays, practically everybody deserts as soon as we get to the States. Take the last voyage before this one—last August. We sailed from the Tyne for Hampton Roads for orders. Almost as soon as we touched Baltimore nearly all hands beat it ashore. Apart from officers and engineers, out of thirty-five hands only one seaman and three firemen were left—and they only stayed on condition they were put on American wages.
> By this United States law a man can demand half the wages due to him as soon as we [illegible]. If the captain refuses the man can compel him to pay him off. But as most of them have had half a month's pay on their advance note on signing on in England there isn't much coming to them after the sixteen or eighteen days across. They either go without worrying about a day or two's pay or put the matter in the hands of a land-shark lawyer. He approaches the captain through the agents, and invariably the agents and British consul advise the captain to pay him off. There's not a chance or chance of getting satisfaction out of the courts.
> When a ship is ready to sail the master has to get a crew from the local shipping and boarding [illegible] master—it's the old crimping business all over again, as bad as 'Frisco used to be. The crimp can't demand so much a man, but he comes to the master and says, "This man owes me $200," and the master has to pay.
> It's the blood money that's at the bottom of all the trouble.
> The substitutes we have to sign on over in the States get American rates of pay and a guarantee that they will either be paid off in America or shipped back as second class passengers, on pay the whole time.

Unintentionally our good friend, the British mate, makes a strong case for the efficacy of the American Seamen's Act. Of course, in order to drive home a single point he feels called upon to bring in the crimping business. But everybody knows that any number of competent and qualified seamen can be had in American ports without expense to the ship and positively without the services of the crimp, provided: (1) the master is willing to pay the going (union) wages of the port, and (2) serves reasonable notice upon the respective union agencies that he wants a given number of men at a given time.

The crimping business and the blood money can flourish only by and with the approval of shipmasters. The blood money never was at the bottom of the trouble. But the foreign shipmaster's cupidity—his anxiety to ship a crew for less than the going wages of the port—that is what creates crimps and resurrects the use of blood money.

To be sure, British shipping interests can scarcely be blamed for desiring to return to the "good old days" when it was the duty of Uncle Sam to catch deserters from foreign ships and force them to return to work under wages and conditions that were a direct menace to competing American ships. Yes, those were "great" times, for the American government in protecting our competitors with their cheap crews was working directly against the interest of American ships and American seamen.

But those good old times have gone—never to return. And shipowners the world over who want to send their vessels to American ports had better become reconciled to the new state of affairs and govern themselves accordingly. By frankly accepting the changed condition they will keep the crimp from their payroll and give some of his usual hire to more deserving men, the seamen who man their ships!

A majority of the U. S. Railroad Labor Board has dismissed the petition for an increase in pay made by the employes of the ferry boats operating on San Francisco bay. The railroad companies operating these ferry boats have recently been authorized to charge a 20% increase in fares, and a 25% increase in freight rates. And now it has been officially decided that none of the ferry boat crews are to receive any benefit whatsoever from these increases. It's a great game this modern shuffling of rates. But the percentage in that sort of play seems to run 99% against the workers.

Whether the immediate object be gained or not, a justifiable strike always succeeds in proportion as it attracts public attention. In this view it sometimes happens that the very failure of the immediate object is an element of success, since thereby the evils complained of are the more clearly demonstrated.

THE LANGUAGE TEST.

Section 13 of the Seamen's Act of March 4, 1915, provides in part as follows:

> No vessel of one hundred tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section one of this Act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than seventy-five per centum of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, . . .
> The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: . . .

A couple of years ago the test was applied to the Chinese crew of the American steamship "China" while in the harbor of San Francisco. As a result of this examination the "China" was compelled to add to her crew twelve seamen (Filipinos) in order to meet the requirements of the law. The same company, however, has continued to employ Chinese in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the beforementioned law.

It should be distinctly understood that the language qualification for seamen was adopted not to prevent the employment of Chinese or other alien seamen but as a measure of protection to the traveling public. The appalling loss of life in the wreck of the steamer "City of Rio de Janeiro" right at the entrance to San Francisco bay, some years ago, was directly due to the fact that the vessel was manned by a crew of Chinese unable to understand and execute the orders given by the officers. This is not merely a claim but a judicially established fact. No less an authority than the United States District Court of Appeals, in a case arising from that wreck, held that a vessel the crew of which was unable to understand the language of the officers "is insufficiently manned."

Since the examination of the "China's" crew the Department of Commerce has issued a new official interpretation of those paragraphs in the Seamen's Act dealing with the language test. The changes made were believed to be in line with the objections made by American seamen to the manner in which the language test was applied under the original regulation. And it was hoped that the new regulations would make the language test a genuinely effective measure for safeguarding life and property at sea.

It is to be regretted that hopes pinned on these new regulations have been severely jolted by current events. The American steamship "Nanking" sailed from San Francisco for Hongkong, China, during the past week, after undergoing an examination as to the compliance on the part of the Chinese crew with the language test in the Seamen's Act.

The examination was in charge of Deputy Collector Stone. Captain Butler and Captain Coffin of the Coast Guard Service were present, the former to supervise the examination of the men in the engineers' department, the latter that of the deck crew. A representative of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, was permitted to be present with the stipulation that he must not interfere during the course of the examination, that if he had any protest to make, to submit such later to the proper authorities.

This examination was held on December 4, 1920. The ship's officers, heads of each department, conducted the questioning in pidgin English, frequently repeating the questions many times before the required answers were given.

By this method, which was in effect a repetition of the examination held on the steamer "China" under the old regulations, a sufficient number of the crew of the "Nanking" passed the language test.

The next move on the checker board will again have to be made by the American seamen through their representative at Washington.

This much is certain: There will be no quiet acquiescence with any rules and regulations which virtually nullify a statute especially designed to protect and safeguard human life afloat.

RATE FIXING

Various State and Federal boards or commissions "fix" the rates which may be charged for service by public utility corporations.

In California river transportation companies are regulated in this manner—i. e., their rates are fixed by the State Railroad Commission. Whenever they want higher rates established a showing must be made that additional legitimate expenses have to be met. Then, if found justifiable, the Commission issues an order boosting the rates. During September of this year a number of these river transportation companies obtained a boost in rates because, so they pleaded, the cost of labor had increased. During the month of November some of these companies arbitrarily reduced wages. But, of course, they kept right on charging the rates based on the alleged higher cost of labor.

The State Commission, it seems, is unable to make a move in the case unless either the companies or the shippers who pay the rates petition for a rehearing of the case. The workers in this instance are functioning merely as useful and convenient rate boosters. Their wages, when raised, are used as an argument to increase rates. But when wages are reduced the same argument cannot be used. In other words, the workers employed on river boats are just plain goats. They have no redress except such as they are able to obtain through their economic organization —their union!

The labor agreement recently concluded for the trawling branch of the fishing industry of the North Atlantic district and reviewed on page 1 of this issue marks a significant advance, opening up a new period in the conduct of this ancient human occupation. It is so comprehensive that it would probably move one of the few remaining survivors of the old generation of hand-liners, who ran their own boats alone and marketed their own catch, to observe that it includes about everything except a clause requiring fish to bite and setting hours to do it.

FIVE WEEKS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Continuation of Personal Narrative by President Schlesinger of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union

It took me five days to make the trip from Kovno to Moscow. We left Kovno on Friday evening, September 24, and reached the Alexandrovsky Depot at Moscow on Tuesday afternoon, September 28. There were four of us in the party.

The entire way from the Russian border to Moscow we traveled in a sleeper. The car bore traces of a luxuriously appointed one—at one time. It had a number of individual compartments, each equipped with electric light, comfortable washing rooms and stands, and plush covered seats. Now only faint traces of its former beauty could be observed; the lights were demolished; the compartment doors opened and closed with difficulty; the plush seats were torn, the broken springs were protruding in an ugly and uncomfortable manner; the toilets were abominable, and, as it seemed, beyond repair. The thin straw mattresses and pillows were so hard that no matter how tired one felt it was almost impossible to rest one's head upon them in the hope of obtaining some sleep.

Nevertheless, when I reached the end of my journey I felt so fresh, prompted by the buoyant spirit of expectations, as if I had only made the trip from New York to Philadelphia. As soon as I got the eye of a porter—who condescended to carry my bag to the droschka for a thousand roubles—and an izvoschik to take me over to the former "Hotel Metropole"—for the paltry sum of six thousand roubles, I made my way to the Commissariate of Foreign Affairs located at that hotel. Santeri Nuorteva, late of New York, who is in charge of one of the most important divisions in the Soviet Foreign Office, gave me certification, countersigned by Chicherine, extending to me the freedom of the City of Moscow, and then I decided to go out in search of some former Americans that I have known.

Nuroteva told me I would get my meals at the Hotel Savoy and that upon my return I shall find a room reserved for me at that hostelry for the period of my entire stay in Moscow. It was 4 o'clock in the afternoon when Nuroteva handed me my "passport," but as the time Soviet Russia had been pushed back fully four hours to save daylight—it was actually only 12 o'clock, and I had practically the entire half-day to look up my acquaintances. "It is 4 o'clock now," Nuorteva remarked to me before I left him. "If you are hungry, I would suggest you come up with me to my hotel and we shall have lunch together. Otherwise, I am afraid, you will go hungry until 9 o'clock in the evening, supper time." I thanked him for his kindness, but refused his invitation. "If I should go hungry," I thought, "I would look into some restaurant for a light repast."

I did not suspect at that moment that for a "greenhorn" like myself it is not such an easy task to find an eating place in Moscow. A few days later, I learned of some places where one is likely to obtain an egg for a thousand roubles, a herring for five hundred roubles, a pound of black bread for four hundred roubles, a glass of tea with two pieces of sugar for two hundred roubles, an apple for one hundred and fifty roubles, ten cigarettes for three hundred and fifty roubles, and a box of matches for two hundred and fifty roubles. I was wondering at first as to whether in view of this giddy cost of things there were any purchasers for these articles in the City of Moscow. But I learned later that there were a lot of people in that city who occupied themselves with speculation and were making big sums of money—of course, until the heavy hand of the "Tchrezvychaika" would fall upon them.

The first person that I was eager to locate was Dr. Max Goldfarb. I had learned several weeks before I left New York that he was known in Moscow under the name of Petrovsky, and that he was the chief of all military officers' schools in Soviet Russia. But neither Nuorteva nor any of his assistants knew Petrovsky's address or telephone, and they advised me to get in touch first with Boris Reinstein and obtain through him the addresses of the former Americans who lived at present in Moscow. Reinstein, who formerly lived at Buffalo, N. Y., is well known in Moscow and occupies an important post in the Commissariate of Labor. I obtained his address and went to see him.

Boris Reinstein received me very cordially and told me many experiences that he had gone through in the almost four years that he had spent in Russia. He was laid up with typhus several months ago and was still weak. He is, nevertheless, happy that he is in Soviet Russia, and he speaks with great enthusiasm about all that the Bolsheviki have accomplished in the past three years.

"We go hungry and we freeze," he told me, "but our souls are warm and contented."

"But, pray," I asked him, "how long do you think you will be able to go on physically like that?"

"We have no such words like 'How long' in our vocabulary," he replied.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

THE MANY FOR ONE

"Am FREE!" This laconic, but inspiring cablegram, sent from Rouen, France, to Galveston, Texas, on November 10, 1920, expresses a volume in two pregnant monosyllables.

The cable came from Comrade Herman Baer, or rather from his heart, and was addressed to Mr. Charles F. Bullock, Galveston agent of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Atlantic and Gulf.

Baer's terse and exultant message brought rejoicing to thousands of kindred hearts in the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association, who, for seven long months, had been waiting to know his fate.

For seven months Baer had sat, a sad and uncertain prisoner, behind the gloomy walls of a French dungeon, fearful lest the fatal swish of the bloody guillotine should mark the final episode to his unfortunate career. Under such fateful circumstances it was only natural that his first articulate utterance should be a sigh of prayerful gratitude and heartfelt relief, sparked across the sea to those who had labored so long and unfalteringly for his acquittal and release during his long, dismal term of helpless, almost hopeless incarceration.

The story of Comrade Baer's misfortune can be quickly and swiftly told, but the moral it conveys will live forever.

Comrade Bullock, Galveston agent of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association, has kindly sent us the entire proceedings and correspondence in the case for analysis. We do not propose to write a detailed history of the case, nor make it the basis of a criminal novel, but as showing the intense interest taken in Comrade Baer's behalf by the officers and great body of members of his union, we may casually mention, the great bulk of typewritten manuscript submitted to us by Comrade Bullock, much of it written on tissue paper, was bedecked with 30c in [illegible] postage stamps.

This statement will convey a faint idea of the immense amount of work accomplished by the Cooks and Stewards' Association in their tireless and determined campaign to save an unfortunate member [illegible] and ignominious death.

The case of "The Republic of France vs. Herman Baer" is, in some respects, the most peculiar as well as among the most important in the annals of the Seamen's Union Movement on the Atlantic Coast.

Herman Baer, formerly second steward on the S. S. "Mount Evens," was arrested and imprisoned at Havre, France, about May 4, 1920, on a charge of homicide. Baer was accused of wilful murder in shooting and killing a Spanish fireman named Rodriguez on board the vessel named above during an altercation.

After [illegible] months' incarceration in durance vile as an homicide suspect, at Havre, [illegible] November, to Rouen, there to await in the local [illegible] the sitting of the Cour d'Assizes [illegible] was to be tried, on the charge of murder. On November 9 he was acquitted and released from custody, a free and blameless man. There we have both ends and the bight of the tragic tale in two paragraphs, with the usual happy ending to a thrill novel minus the skirt.

But between the initial tragedy and the final sequel to Baer's fearful dilemma are many closely interwoven and inextricably pertinent incidents and incidental factors which alone make the yarn worth spinning, if indeed it could ever have been spun at all. These are the human interest factors which emphasize the moral and adorn the tale.

The evidence in this case is conclusive; testimony there is none. Baer admittedly shot Rodriguez, alleging self-defense in justification of the deed. No one gainsays his testimony. He has therefore been liberated, the dignity of the law upheld, and Justice has been satisfied without blood sacrifice. So from a legal point of view, the dismal chapter is closed. It is only from an historical or liberal consideration of the facts involved that the case becomes at all interesting or instructive.

From a careful perusal of the maze of documents and letters bearing on the case, it appears that on the night of May 4, 1920, Baer, second steward of the "Mount Evens," came on board very late after an evening's enjoyment ashore in Le Havre, and found two Spanish firemen, one of whom was Rodriguez, at the galley door. Immediately upon his arrival, Baer asserts they both greeted him with a truculent demand for a can of milk.

This demand Baer claims he politely refused them on the ground that it was contrary to the express rules of the ship to open the storeroom except at certain stated hours, namely, at 7 and 11 A. M. and 4 P. M. each day. Thereupon, Baer asserts the two Spaniards became very insistent and abusive in urging their demand for milk, threatening him with violence unless he should comply, and calling him vile names.

Unheeding their boisterous threats, Baer says he went directly to his room and closed the door. But upon returning to the galley half an hour afterwards to get something to eat himself, Baer says he was surprised to find the same two firemen still at the door and still in the same bellicose frame of mind. They now attempted to prevent him from getting anything to eat for himself, he states, until he should first comply with their demand for condensed milk, and upon his repulsing them they both became furious and closed in upon him, one drawing a stiletto, the other brandishing a butcher's cleaver, and both declaring their determination to kill him.

In this mortal crisis Baer says he tried to escape from the galley, but found the door latched; therefore, in desperation and self-defense, he drew a revolver from his pocket and fired three random shots; not with intent to kill, he declares, but in the hope of frightening off his assailants and attracting attention to his dangerous predicament. As a result, one of the Spaniards was mortally and the other casually wounded.

Upon leaving the kitchen Baer says he met the first assistant engineer, who had been startled by the shots and hurried to the scene.

When told what had occurred, the engineer tried to get possession of the gun, which Baer still retained, but the latter refused to surrender the weapon to any one except the captain. "Thereupon," says Baer in his statement, "I went to the captain's room together with the third mate, intending to hand over the gun, but the captain and chief engineer seized both my hands and held me while the weapon was taken from my pocket."

Rodriguez died from his wound and his companion was sent to the hospital to be treated and then held as a material witness for the State. But, strangely enough, he left the hospital a few hours before the "Mount Evens" was to sail and is presumed to have gone back on board. Therefore, there was no direct evidence for the prosecution. According to Baer's statement, however, the skipper did all in his power to insure conviction.

It was at this point in the proceedings that the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association assumed a leading hand in Baer's defense, with the result already announced.

With the return of the "Mount Evens" to Galveston came the first tidings of Baer's plight in France. Whereupon, Mr. Charles F. Bullock, port agent, at once adopted measures for his personal relief and ultimate release from prison. In this cause Mr. Bullock has been ceaseless in his efforts and untiring in zeal to secure Baer's liberation.

The headquarters of the Cooks and Stewards' Association was at once notified of Comrade Baer's arrest, and subscriptions were opened all along the coast to secure competent counsel for him and provide for his personal and pressing needs while he must remain in jail.

In this manner large sums of money were collected both at the headquarters and all the branches of the Cooks and Stewards' Association, and among some of the Marine Firemen's branches as well, all of the sums thus collected being turned over to the Galveston agent in trust for Baer's benefit.

In this way Baer's personal needs and comfort were as well provided for as the circumstances would permit. Comrade Bullock also placed himself in direct communication with the American consuls and prison authorities both at Havre and Rouen, during Baer's confinement in those places, and the pressure brought to bear upon those officials by the evidence of home interest and the backing of a powerful maritime organization undoubtedly exerted a most beneficent effect in his behalf.

But perhaps most gratifying of all, from Baer's point of view, were the fraternal letters of hope and encouragement constantly sent him by Comrade Bullock to assure him that among a mass of other official duties his interests were being given first attention. Baer's many replies to these cheering letters attest his heartfelt gratitude; for a friend in need is a friend indeed, and who can be in greater need than a helpless brother in a foreign prison?

But the main desire of Mr. Bullock and his fellow members was to secure able, astute and reliable French counsel for Baer and try to effect his acquittal and release.

With this object in view, Mr. Bullock immediately got into communication with M. Grandmaison, a leading member of the French bar, at Havre; and upon being assured as to the gentleman's public standing and professional record, officially retained him to conduct Baer's defense.

But after Baer had been removed to the prison at Rouen, it was necessary to retain new counsel in that region to assist in conducting the defense and plead before the Cour d'Assizes as his special advocate.

For this purpose M. Meteyer was duly retained, and the fees and incidentals of both attorneys were approved and guaranteed by the Association.

How ably and vigorousy the case was defended is attested by the result.

Both counsel deserve to be complimented for their honorable conduct of Comrade Baer's defense; but money makes the mare go, especially in foreign prisons, and Comrade Baer's chances wouldn't have been worth a wet match in a hurricane had he not taken time by the forelock by joining the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association.

Meanwhile, the entire membership of the Cooks and Stewards' Association had been aroused to the fighting pitch over Baer's unhappy plight, and no pains or expense were spared to alleviate his distress or defend his life.

The amount required for counsel fees was at once appropriated by a regular meeting at headquarters with a rush, and ordered cabled to France at once through Mr. Bullock.

Then early in the Autumn, Mr. William L. Cartledge, general secretary of the Association, acting under special instructions from headquarters, made an official trip to France in Baer's behalf. Brother Cartledge visited Comrade Baer in his cell in the Maison d'Arrest, wherein he was confined at Rouen.

That Brother Cartledge's unexpected visit was a momentous event in the dismal life of the solitary prisoner in Rouen jail is evidenced by the fervent letters of heartfelt gratitude to Comrade Bullock, which immediately followed from Baer himself. While in France Mr. Cartledge took up all the aspects of Baer's case in detail and went into them thoroughly with his counsel, both at Rouen and Le Havre; and also with the French authorities and leading officials of the Honorable, Le Cour d'Assizes, before whom the case was to be tried.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Cartledge's appearance and official interest inspired enthusiasm among the lawyers and authorities as well as hope and happiness in the heart of the miserable and helpless member.

Such in brief are the essential facts and prominent features in the now famous case of the Republic of France vs. Herman Baer, mariner, once in jail but now at liberty, through the mediation of his own comrades and the untiring, unflagging and determined efforts of their organization and officials.

We will respectfully leave it to our readers, especially the self-sufficient non-union element among them, to arrive at their own conclusions and dictate their own editorials on the subject.

If they cannot take a hint until they are kicked it isn't our fault.

Some time ago we took occasion to remark that the International Seamen's Union of America was possessed of a "Continental stride and an International reach." If there still remain any misguided, addlepated, mole-eyed numbskulls among us who still feel inclined to question the self-evident truth of that broad statement, we most respectfully refer them to Comrade Herman Baer of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Atlantic and Gulf for further enlightenment and practical instruction on the subject.

THE OLD MAN ON THE POOP

The presence of President A. Furuseth at the regular meeting of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association on November 29 was the high signal for a crowded and enthusiastic gathering, as it always is.

Brother Furuseth entertained us for some time with a brief description of his recent tour of instruction along the Pacific Coast, and then amplified it with a pertinent discourse for our own benefit.

Mr. Furuseth's sage and solemn advice and serious admonitions made a deep and impressive and, we hope, a lasting effect upon the meeting.

After adjournment an impromptu mass meeting of those present and other late arrivals was held, at which Comrade Furuseth was given a better opportunity to enlarge upon the various topics of primal interest to seamen at the present juncture than that afforded by the regular business meeting.

The most important as well as the most significant feature of the meeting was the eagerness of the younger generation of seamen to listen to Mr. Furuseth's views and wise exhortations. Which goes to show that the rising generation of manjacks appreciate genuine and authoritative counsel.

J. H. W.

Comrade G. H. Brown, coast instructor of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, reported to the meeting the successful results of an Eastern speaking tour, including Boston, Portland and Providence in his recent itinerary. The report was received and approved and the program ordered to be continued. Comrade Brown now proposes to conduct a special series of open meetings in and around New York before going farther afield again.

Education, like childhood and charity, should begin at home, and there is no port in the world so badly in need of Comrade Brown's intensive instruction as New York. It is as full of Holy Joes, devil dodgers and crimps as the woods are full of jackals, and the seamen must be taught the best methods of smoking the detestable varmints out.

Comrade H. P. Griffin, president of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association, left here recently on a special speaking and organizing tour through the Southern ports. It was originally intended that Comrades Griffin and Brown should tour the coast together—they would surely have made a team—but the enforced absence of Secretary W. L. Cartledge while in Europe on other important missions for the Association, tied Mr. Griffin down to his desk for the time and thereby interrupted his plans. We bespeak for Comrade Griffin a loyal and sincere reception and respectful and earnest attention from seamen of all classes wherever he may appear.

We see by the minutes that President Furuseth was present at the regular meeting of the Baltimore branch of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association on Nov. 30, the meeting having been postponed one day in anticipation of his visit. Old "Shanghai" Brown ought to be glad he's dead; if he were alive to-day he would find this world a —— sight colder than the other place is hot.

Comrade Percy J. Pryor, general secretary of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, couldn't afford to pay rent in Manhatten, so he has bought a house in New York. Brother Percy is only following the same policy which entrenched landlordism forced his organization to adopt six months ago. We wish him long life and happy days in his new domicile.

AGE OF THE EARTH.

A geologist describes by means of a graphic chart the comparative lengths of the different periods of the age of the earth. He places the age of the earth arbitrarily at 72,000,000 years, represented by a clock dial of twenty-four hours—3,000,000 years to each hour.

On the above basis the first six hours of the clock represents Azoic time, the earliest conjectural period of the earth's formation—18,000,000 years; the next six hours Eozoic and the next eight Paleozoic time—18,000,000 and 24,000,000 years, respectively—periods of mineral and vegetable formations. In the next three hours animal life developed—Mezozoic time, 9,000,000 years—that is, from the twentieth to the twenty-third hour. Thus the last hour of the twenty-four—3,000,000 years of geologic time—represents Neozoic time, which includes the appearance of human life in the Quaternary period.

This last division of the twenty-four hours, the Quaternary period, is shown as only ten minutes—in other words 500,000 years. The existence of human life on the earth, therefore, bears the same relation to the age of the earth as ten minutes does to twenty-four hours. But since the period of written history is estimated roughly at only 6000 years, this last division is not shown on the chart, since it would only be twelve seconds in duration. —Scientific American.

Japan trebled its output of coal between 1901 and 1917, producing 29,000,000 tons in the latter year. In 1917 there were 187,000 Japanese underground coal workers.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(By Laurence Todd)

Caught between unemployment and business stagnation on the one hand and a flood of half-famished immigrants on the other, organized labor in the United States faces a hard winter.

Congress is trying to work out a scheme for restoring business, without sacrificing any of the power now exercised by bankers, manufacturers and investors as against the workers. If it must choose between a general panic and the adoption of industrial democracy in any considerable degree, organized business will probably take the panic. Organized labor is not yet making a great effort for industrial democracy as a way out of the existing trouble.

Immigration is a factor which the labor movement finds more easy to deal with. When jobs are scarce, it is a simple thing to appeal to Congress to shut out any foreign claimants for these jobs. That is what the labor movement now proposes, and the House Committee on Immigration agrees that it should be done. Complete exclusion of immigrant labor for a period of two years is the plan which the House will be asked to adopt, this session. If reports from American consuls and newspaper correspondents in Europe are to be relied upon, such legislation is necessary if the coming of millions of workers from Central and Southeastern Europe within the next year is to be prevented.

A well-organized opposition to this bar to immigrants is now in the field. It is financed by the Dupont interests, and is known as the Inter-racial Council. Its object seems to be the bringing in of further supplies of cheap labor, to be played off against the organized workers in the basic industries. Greeks, Bulgars, Slovaks, Poles, Serbs, Syrians—any and all races will be welcomed by this organization, and their feuds and nationalistic hatreds, the one or the other group, will be welcomed with them. So long as the European war can be continued, through mutual jealousies and quarrels, in the steel and powder and textile and dye and coal and other industries, industrial organization and industrial democracy can be kept out.

Where formerly the radicals in the American labor movement were doubtful or hostile to the exclusion of European workers, now they are inclined to look with favor on the proposal that the workers of Europe be compelled to face their own problems in their own countries and settle them there. While they would maintain the right of political asylum in America for refugees from such countries as Hungary, where the life of no trade unionist is worth a penny, they would discourage the wholesale migration of German or Polish or Greek or Italian workers who have a chance to vote and to organize to better their conditions at home.

President Wilson, it is assumed, will veto any bill passed by this Congress to stop immigration. However, the existing law was passed over his veto, and his influence was never so weak at the capitol as it is now. The two-thirds majority which can override his veto will be ready, if the Senate and House leaders permit the immigration measure to come upon the floor for a vote.

If the bars are put up, and if several million workers in Europe are thereby forced to remain at home, trade unionism in America will have a better chance to work out its own line of defense against the anti-union employers and the business collapse, while the would-be immigrants will be stimulated to do something to make Europe safe for the working class.

How bad the business situation has grown was indicated by the testimony of Secretary of the Treasury Houston, before the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture, in joint session. Houston declared that the country would not be justified in doing anything to turn back the downward trend of prices, but must protect itself from a far worse disaster by enduring the pinch of "readjustment." Any attempt by the Government to loan money to Germany or other countries, in order to finance them in resuming production, so that they may trade with us, he opposed. He said, that if the Government embarked upon any such "unsound" policy, it would probably soon find itself in the same condition as are the foreign governments. The thing to do, in short, was to bend before the storm, and hang on.

W. P. G. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, suggested that if people would stop worrying over what they owe the banks, and "let the banker walk the floor" worrying, business would soon begin to recover. He predicted a "stabilization" of prices in January, with a return of buying and a resumption of production following in due time. He made the pointed suggestion that the bankers don't want to sell out the business men and farmers at sheriff's sale; they want only to get a reasonable assurance that their loans will be paid after the depression has run its course. While he did not recommend a moratorium, he seemed to have that idea in mind as a desirable means of avoiding a severe panic.

Independent steel manufacturers are laying off men in some plants, and are cutting the working hours from twelve to eight in others. This eight-hour shift is only temporary, of course, and is adopted in order to hold the plant organization together for a while. If business continues bad—as is likely to be the case for some months—then most of the men will finally be dismissed. The same is true in other basic industries in the East.

This financial and industrial collapse has gone so far that the incoming Republican administration will have to devote itself almost exclusively to finding remedies, or evading them. It will have no time for a general onslaught upon the labor movement. The Clayton Act and the Seamen's Act are safe—for a while at least. Since the farmers and the borrowers have learned how to go on strike, and since the small business men and small bankers are daily slipping toward ruin, the financing of wars upon organized labor is more difficult than it was a year or two ago. War profits, contributed so freely to every reactionary scheme that came along, are shrinking and disappearing as the speculative market sags and breaks, carrying down with it to ruin its daily hundreds and thousands of petty profiteers.

Because labor is beginning to come to the surface of the tide that overwhelmed it in November, the talk of the probable selection for Secretary of Labor in the Harding cabinet takes on new interest. It may be wholly a coincidence, but since the adjournment of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor there has come a great deal of quiet talk of the probable naming of Vice-president James Duncan of the American Federation of Labor for that post.

At first blush the suggestion seems absurd. Duncan is a lifelong associate of Samuel Gompers, and a member of the executive council which made so desperate a fight against Harding. He was sent by President Wilson to Russia in 1917. He was nominated by President Wilson to the Interstate Commerce Commission last spring, and the Republicans in control of the Senate have never confirmed him for that job, although he is a Republican. Moreover, he comes from Massachusetts, which has already the certainty of one member of the cabinet—former Senator Weeks, who will head the Navy Department.

But in favor of Duncan it is urged that he has the support of Senator Lodge of Massachusetts; that he is the oldest, most level-headed, experienced, representative and the best administrator among all the trade unionists who have been suggested for the place. It is pointed out that, after all, Harding knows he must have some man in his cabinet who has the confidence of a large body of the workers. And finally it is remarked that Duncan has never been a sincere follower of Mr. Gompers, but has led the opposition—such as it was—in the council. He was the candidate who came near being nominated against Mr. Gompers at the Boston convention some years ago. So there is no certainty that, if placed in the cabinet, Duncan would follow the advice of the head of the American Federation of Labor who did his utmost to prevent Harding's election.

These suggestions have come from various sources near the executive council of the American Federation of Labor since its session ended. Only the members of the council know whether the matter was brought up there.

Chances of political preferment for President Hutcheson of the Carpenters, who was one of the Harding partisans, seem to have sunk to zero. Hutcheson sent a telegram of defiance to the National Adjustment Board for Jurisdictional Disputes in the Building Trades, refusing to discuss or obey the decision rendered in favor of the Sheet Metal Workers against the carpenters as to installing metal window frames. The board voted to go ahead with its work in this case, and to let Hutcheson outlaw himself and his organization if he and the carpenters chose to do so. His message set at naught his previous agreement to abide by decisions within the building trades. He has been an active member of the board, and has helped to enforce decisions against smaller unions. By starting a feud with the entire Building Trades Department—which is in effect what he has done—and by continuing to refuse to abide by the decision of the American Federation of Labor conventions in the dispute with the machinists, the head of the carpenters has chosen a rocky road.

Meanwhile the question of the refusal of the American Federation of Labor to affiliate with the International Federation of Trade Unions bobs up again, with the announcement that Edo Fimmen, its general secretary at Amsterdam headquarters, will visit the United States next summer. Fimmen wants to talk to mass meetings and conventions of labor, to explain just what is the position of the International, and to plead with the Denver convention, in June, for a vote instructing the executive council to affiliate. He will argue that the Amsterdam body is not so radical as to give good cause for worry to conservative American labor officials; that if they want something to worry about, they should look at the labor international formed in Moscow, which denounces the Amsterdam international as "reactionary."

LARGE JAPANESE FAMILIES.

There are very few American families in which there are as many as ten children, and most Japanese families are small because their parents have not lived in this country long enough to produce large families. Registrar L. E. Ross of the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the Board of Health has discovered at least two Japanese families, however, in which ten children have been born to the parents. One of these families is in San Francisco and the other is in San Joaquin County. The San Francisco Japanese mother is thirty-eight years old. A tenth child has been born to her recently and eight of her children are now living. The mother living in San Joaquin County is forty-five years old. Her tenth child was born in April and six of her children are now living.

"But this is merely a phase," I attempted to debate with him, "human beings that are hungry, cold and worn out bodily cannot work and produce."

"You are right," he told me, "and that is why we are constantly appealing to the workers of the whole world that they aid in the lifting of the blockade against us and that their governments do not incite any more wars upon us. After we have got through the blockade and the constant warring, we shall have enough bread and coal. Then we will produce sufficiently and work in peace."

"The fate of Soviet Russia, then, depends on the action of the governments of other countries; what will happen, for instance, if the blockade is not lifted and the wars do not cease?" I inquired further.

"We shall continue to do then what we are doing now: We will starve, freeze and fight, fight and go hungry. The working classes of Russia will not give up the fight until capitalism and militarism have disappeared from the face of the globe."

"But that might last God knows how long," I retorted.

"Our children will continue the fight with even greater ardor than ourselves. If this task proves beyond our own strength, our children will consummate it. You ought to visit our children's schools and their homes and observe for yourself how we educate the young. That is going to be a generation of fighters!" he exclaimed with enthusiasm.

Reinstein gave me Dr. Goldfarb's address and telephone and also promised to get me in touch as soon as possible with Lenine and Tomsky, the President of the "All-Russian Trade Union Federation of Soviets." I immediately attempted to get in touch with Goldfarb-Petrovsky, and succeeded shortly. I must say that the telephones in Moscow work almost as good as in New York. After fifteen minutes of holding the receiver I heard Goldfarb's cheerful "Hello!"

"You must come to see me today," he told me in English.

"All right, I shall come up presently," I said with satisfaction.

"Oh, no, not at once," the voice came back. "I am awfully busy just at present. Suppose we make it tonight at twelve?"

I thought at first that he was joking or that I did not hear him right, and I inquired again about the hour.

"At midnight sharp," he replied, "at my residence, No. 6, Bolshaya Sadovaya."

"Can one go out visiting at such a late hour in Moscow?" I asked in wonderment.

"In Russia it is not at all a late hour," he attempted to reassure me, "our time has been moved back fully four hours."

"But you rise four hours earlier in the morning, don't you?" I insisted.

"Don't ask so many questions," he replied, "I am too busy to answer them at present. Goodbye and remember—twelve o'clock tonight!"

After I had spent a few days in Moscow I learned that the midnight hour was quite an ordinary hour for visiting in that city. My appointment with Lenine was also for twelve o'clock at night. Nuorteva made me meet him once at one o'clock at night. One need not fear to go alone in the streets of Moscow at a late hour, and the stories that are being circulated on the continent and America that one is not safe with his life if he ventures out at Moscow at night—particularly if he wears good clothes—are pure fiction. I am inclined to believe that it is much safer to walk the streets of Moscow at night than the streets for instance of Chicago. I frequently walked during my two weeks' stay as late as three o'clock in the morning, all alone, wearing a good overcoat and with a gold watch and chain on my body and no one ever annoyed or even stopped me. Neither did I hear of anything like that happening to any one else.

When I made the appointment with Goldfarb-Petrovsky the hour was half past five. The day was still bright and the weather very inviting. So I went out to make my first acquaintance with the city.

Moscow is an unusually beautiful city. Her main streets are paved with asphalt and rows of trees adorn the sidewalks. Wherever one casts an eye he meets imposing cloisters of remarkable architecture and splendid squares and parks. able architecture and splendid squares and parks. These streets have not been fixed in six years now, and the buildings have not been renovated or painted. The exterior plastering on some of these has fallen off and some look quite dilapidated. Nevertheless, the city still looks remarkably beautiful, particularly toward evening, when the sun sets upon the enormous gilded cupolas and the church steeples are bathed in the rays of the parting daylight.

Of all the "forty-times-forty" churches in Moscow not one, to my knowledge, has been desecrated. Yet all of them stand there as if in exile, as if in mourning after their lost paradise, though intact and unharmed. In the early days of the Bolshevist Revolution the churches indeed passed through days of danger. There was heard in the streets of Moscow the clamor: "Down with the churches!" but the enraged mass of revolutionists only damaged the cupolas of one church. The leaders of the revolution issued at once strict orders not to damage the churches and their command was scrupulously obeyed.

So the churches stand in Moscow as before and their bells ring out chimes as in the days that preceded the revolution. At the entrances of the cloisters, masses of old and young, men and women, stand daily on their knees crossing themselves and praying. The streets of Moscow are quiet these days; there are few street cars and still fewer automobiles; the newsboys disappeared from the streets, too. And the steady chiming of the innumerable church bells imparts a peculiar sadness and yearning that weigh heavily upon one's heart.

The streets in Moscow are kept much cleaner than the streets of Philadelphia, Chicago or Boston. They seem to be constantly swept and cleaned. As one must do some work in Moscow in order to be entitled to a ration of food, and as there are thousands upon thousans here who know no trades and who are physically too weak for other work (as is the case with many middle-aged women), these are being given brooms and are sent out to clean the streets. Some streets are being cleaned several times a day.

As I walked out into the Tverskoy Boulevard, I forgot completely, for a few minutes, that I was in Moscow, the capital of the Bolsheviki. This street is remarkably beautiful and kept immaculately clean. The wide sidewalks were crowded with people, and great signs with gilded letters adorn every building. From the first glance I thought this street appeared very much like the Leipzigerstrasse in Berlin. After I had taken a second look at these buildings and observed that most of them were empty and their main entrances boarded up, and that most of the men and women walking along the boulevard were carrying food bags with them—either going to or coming from the bread lines—and that every face was clouded with grave mien, without smile or laughter, I perceived a feeling of waking up from a heavy nightmare.

Labor News

It is stated that New England textile industries, employing 300,000 workers, have reduced their output one-half from the 1919 standard. Some mills have shut down and others are being operated on a 20 per cent basis. The bosses' strike is given the fancy title, "curtailment of production."

"With its present scale of wages the Government is unable to compete successfully with the commercial world," said Adjutant General Harris in his annual report. The army official insists that the Government cannot expect to retain its best employees indefinitely, because, in justice to themselves and their families, they must accept the larger opportunities offered to them outside the Federal service, unless the Government decides to readjust salaries.

"Show that you have the moral courage to go to jail, if necessary," said President Barrett to members of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of America. The farmers' executive made this appeal in connection with the movement to hold products for higher prices. It is claimed that Federal agents are collecting evidence to use against the farmers. Efforts of the farmers toward co-operation, Mr. Barrett said, have met with strong opposition from the first. He charged that efforts have been made to prevent the farmers from buying collectively.

The Tennessee Manufacturers' Association will hold a convention to establish the non-union shop. The calls states that "we want to say to you frankly that a serious situation confronts us at the next session of the legislature." The manufacturers have in mind the defeat of Governor Roberts by organized labor at the last election. The bosses are alert to the effect of this unexpected defeat and plan to stiffen the backbone of their political agents. The organized workers are preparing to meet the attack and declare the Roberts' medicine will be handed others.

The kept press in West Virginia is attempting to discredit officials of striking coal miners and C. F. Keeney, president miners' district No. 17, replies: "As long as I can hear the howls of the jackals on my trail I know that I am going in the right direction." The miners have been evicted from company houses and their household goods have been thrown on the public highways by armed guards and Baldwin-Feltz detectives. The union has secured tents, and several thousand women and little children are faced with the rigors of winter while housed in this manner.

Immigrant education was the subject of a strong endorsement by the New York State Federation of Labor in August. The Education Committee of the Federation endorsed the educational program of the State in this respect and, to secure immediate results, requested each local union and central body to appoint a special committee of three on Americanization to assist the Federal, State and local authorities in enforcing the compulsory attendance of non-English speaking and illiterate minors, and urge the provision of more facilities for adults by having school boards provide proper financial aid and equipment.

The Anglo-California Trust Company has established at 101 Market Street a complete-service bank. This advanced business ideal is attained through the purchase of the Seaboard National Bank and its expansion for broader duties.

Here—the only bank located between First Street, Battery and the Bay, one of San Francisco's most thriving commercial districts—are found facilities for every banking need—savings, commercial, trust, securities and safe deposit departments.

Seafaring men will find here a full-functioning bank especially helpful to them. It is conveniently located for the quick transacting of their business upon arrival in the port of San Francisco. It takes scrupulous care of their savings and other banking requirements whenever they may call upon it from the far-flung ports of the world. Why not start a savings or commercial account to-day?

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

"Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

"Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.

"As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am

"Respectfully yours,

FRANK MANNING,
Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

The report of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company for the last fiscal year shows net profits of $2,430,731. This is equivalent to $18.99 a share on the $12,800,000 capital stock, as against $12.76 a share the preceding year.

Sales of the F. W. Woolworth Company during October, amounted to $13,243,233, as compared with $10,645,543 in October of last year. This concern operates a chain of 5 and 10-cent stores throughout the country.

Following the cold-blooded murder of two San Francisco police officers and the sheriff of Sonoma county (Cal.), three notorious San Francisco gangsters were taken from the county jail in Santa Rosa at midnight, Dec. 9, and lynched. All three were hung on the same tree. No identification of those who participated in the lynching has been made to date.

There are in Georgia 8,000,000 acres of land in an unproductive state for lack of drainage, said Andrew M. Soule, president of the State College of Agriculture, in an address before the National Drainage Congress. The speaker estimated that it would cost approximately $150,000,000 to reclaim the land, and he advocated issuing State bonds. He said taxes on the improved land would pay back the drainage cost in about 25 years.

The report of the Packard Motor Car Company for the last fiscal year shows net profits available for dividends of $6,395,468, an increase of nearly $1,000,000 over the preceding year. The company also reduced its liabilities more than $4,000,000 and increased its inventory account nearly $11,000,000. It has a reserve of $2,500,000 to guard against possible shrinkage in the value of materials, and has a surplus of more than $20,000,000.

Regarding the paper shortage as a matter of public concern, the provincial government of Ontario has announced its plan to erect and operate a pulp mill near Fort William, using power from its Nipigon hydro-electric development. Sawmills, a paper mill and kindred industries in the publicly owned woods on the north shore of Lake Ontario are included in this undertaking; in short, the plan comprises the scientific operation of an immense forest reservation, including a block of 8,480 square miles, with installation of modern fire protection and reforestation methods.

Los Angeles negroes feel that they have won an important legal victory in the award of damages to a colored boy for refusal of a moving picture house to let him select his own seat after having paid for a ticket. In this as in other California theaters it has been customary to segregate persons of dark skin on one side of the house. The defendants, in appealing the case to the supreme court of the State, attempted to prove that the manager had acted without instructions and that, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff had been excluded from a section of the theater because he was a minor. The Supreme Court held, however, that clearly the defendant had been refused a seat because of his color, and that this was contrary to sections 51 and 52 of the Civil Code.

Domestic and Naval

The British S. S. "Mobile," ex "Cleveland," 16,960 tons gross, 10,267 net, built at Hamburg in 1908, and owned by the British Shipping Controller, is reported sold to the Embiricos Bros., Athens.

The Norwegian S. S. "Hjeltefjord," ex "Filomachi," ex "Queen," 3,347 tons gross, 2,146 net, built at Sunderland in 1894, and owned by A/S Damps, Hjeltefjord, Christiania, is reported sold to Spanish owners for £68,000.

The British tank S. S. "British General," ex "Georgian Prince," 3,245 tons gross, 2,078 net, carries about 4,700 tons deadweight, built at Newcastle in 1893 and owned by the British Tanker Co., London, has been sold foreign for about £187,500.

The S. S. "Maryanne," ex "Liberia," ex "Curityba," 2,518 tons gross, 1,583 net, carries about 3,300 tons deadweight, steams about 8 knots, built at Hamburg in 1887, and owned by the Maryanne Shipping Co., Inc., New York, is reported sold to Greek owners.

The Shipping Board has rejected the bid of $1,176,000 for the ex-German S. S. "Black Arrow," 7,050 tons, made by the Polish-American Navigation Co. of New York. The offer for the "Black Arrow" and "Orion," 5,610 tons, by the Oriental Navigation Co., has been withdrawn.

Leading Danish banking and shipping firms are engaged in establishing a shipping trust to include the various tramp shipping concerns in Denmark. The amalgamation, with a joint capital of Kr. 300,000,000, is to be centered round the United S. S. Co. of Copenhagen.

The former German S. S. "Kigoma," 8,156 tons gross, 4,831 net, 15 knots, built at Hamburg in 1914 and "Ypiranga" (ex Ger. s.s.), 8,103 tons gross, 4,907 net, built at Kiel in 1908, have been sold by the British Shipping Controller to the Anchor Line, Glasgow, and renamed "Abyssinia" and "Assyria," respectively. Each boat carries 150 passengers.

The Australian Prime Minister reports that in spite of the bitter opposition of the British Conference Line, the Government-owned Commonwealth Line has received a fair share of support. The Conference is said to have threatened shippers with refusal of space if shipments were made on Commonwealth steamers and to have in some cases carried the threat into effect.

During November, 29 American vessels arrived at London, the largest number in the history of the port, 27 were cleared. The average stay in port, except one vessel in dry dock, was 10 days compared with 18 in November, 1919. Bristol transport workers' strike, causing transport workers strike, causing [illegible] to be diverted to other ports for discharge. Congestion is increasing at Cardiff, which is still suffering from strike effects. Many British vessels were cleared in ballast for American ports for coal cargoes, 20 coal loading during the past week. Edinburgh reports coal exports and bunkers for week double those for the corresponding week of 1919. Manchester port not fully occupied, quick discharge port 14s, and bunkers satisfactory. Newcastle reports tugboat strike continues but some tugs breaking away and bunkers scarce. Other ports are normal.

News from Abroad

Since the Armistice the British Admiralty has sold 1,231 serviceable vessels for £10,024,000 and scrapped 638 more, which realized £3,464,000.

The Italian battleship "Carraciolo," launched last May, has been sold to the Navigazione Generale Italiana, Genoa, for conversion into a trans-Atlantic liner.

The Pacific Steam Navigation Co. has established a service between Rotterdam and the west coast of South America. It is stated that the new line will serve Holland, the Rhine Valley, Basel, and Zurich.

The Claymore Shipping Company, Cardiff, which owns four boats of about 18,000 tons d.w. in all, shows for a 15 months' period to September 30, 1920, a net profit of £112,925 out of which the directors pay a dividend of 15 per cent. The company's four boats are valued at just over £25 to the ton d.w.

The former German raider "Moewe," which was surrendered last May under the terms of the Peace Treaty, is now a fruiter and under the name of "Sungo" carries bananas from Jamaica to England in the service of Elders & Fyffes, Ltd. The "Moewe" was originally built for the fruit trade, but was requisitioned by the German Government before she was put in commission. A sister-ship, the "Pionier," has also been taken over by Elders & Fyffes.

The Nautilus Steam Shipping Company of Sunderland, whose fleet aggregates 49,664 tons gross, shows a net profit for the year to June 30, 1920, of £265,854, after deduction of taxes and commission of £38,926 paid to the managers. The dividend for the year is at the rate of 22½ per cent., against 30 per cent. paid for the two preceding years, 39⅓ per cent. for 1916 and 31 per cent. for 1915. The issued capital of the company amounts to £318,100 and the fleet is valued at £927,086.

Better films are demanded by British motion picture theaters, of which there are some four thousand. Complaining that Great Britain has been made the dumping-ground for inferior American films, prominent exhibitors have recently formed the Exhibitors' Co-operative Association of Great Britain and Ireland to buy and distribute their own pictures. The membership at the start was three hundred, with prospects of soon including one thousand. Objection is taken not only to the quality of American films but also the booking system which forces exhibitors to subscribe to a large number of inferior films they do not want for the purpose of securing the good ones.

New relief and reconstruction credits, amounting to over $50,000,000, in the form of food, raw materials and transport services, by the governments of Denmark, Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, were arranged at the recent Brussels conference of the International Committee for Relief Credits. Other governments, especially the French, the Argentine and the Canadian, have further credits under consideration. The beneficiaries of this organization are Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Rumania, the Baltic states, Armenia, Georgia, Austria and Hungary. The United States, though no party to this agreement, is collaborating with the committee.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE STEAMBOAT INSPECTION SERVICE

Summary of Annual Report by Supervising Inspector General

The work of the United States Steamboat Inspection Service in practically all its phases is of direct and personal interest to every American seaman.

Since July 1, 1903, the Steamboat Inspection Service has been under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce, having been transferred from the Treasury Department. The present chief of the Inspection Service is George Uhler.

Under the law, Mr. Uhler, the Supervising Inspector General, is charged with superintending "the administration of the steamboat inspection laws" and to "produce a correct and uniform administration" of said "laws, rules and regulations."

A summary of the activities and statistics of the Steamboat Inspection Service, gleaned from the annual report just issued, is published on this page.

The force inspected and certificated 8,051 vessels with a total gross tonnage of 15,621,399, of which 7,736 were domestic vessels with a total gross tonnage of 12,741,807, and 315 were foreign passenger steam vessels with a total gross tonnage of 2,879,592. Of the domestic vessels, there were 6,418 steam vessels, 704 motor vessels, 23 passenger barges, and 591 seagoing barges. There was an increase of 644 in the total number of vessels inspected, and an increase of 4,059,233 in the total gross tonnage of vessels inspected as compared with the previous fiscal year. Letters of approval of designs of boilers, engines, and other operating machinery were granted to 26 steam vessels with a total gross tonnage of 600. There were inspected for the United States Government 82 hulls and 2,096 boilers. There were 2,417 reinspections of vessels.

Licenses were issued to 33,614 officers of all grades. There were examined for visual defects 11,324 applicants for license, of whom 108 were found color-blind or with other visual defects, and rejected. Certificates of service were issued to 18,478 able seamen, and 1,598 were rejected. Certificates of efficiency were issued to 8,323 lifeboat men, and 661 were rejected.

Steel plates for the construction of marine boilers to the number of 5,733 were inspected at the mills, and a large amount of other boiler material was inspected. There were examined and tested 226,110 new life preservers, of which number 3,009 were rejected.

The total number of accidents resulting in loss of life was 192. The total number of lives lost was 470, of which 42 were passengers. Of the lives lost 145 were from suicide, accidental drowning, and other causes beyond the power of the Service to prevent, leaving a loss of 325 lives as fairly chargeable to accidents, collisions, founderings, etc. There was a decrease of 73 in the number of lives lost as compared with the previous fiscal year. Passengers to the number of 368,870,327 were carried on vessels required by law to make report of the number of passengers carried. Dividing this number by 42, the total number of passengers lost, shows that 8,782,626 passengers were carried for each passenger lost. There were 911 lives saved by means of life-saving appliances required by law.

It is desired to point out the respects in which at this time substantial changes may be made, not only in the substantive law but also in the regulations enacted incident to that law, all to the end that the United States may maintain its supremacy upon the high seas; and in line with this thought there will be treated hereinafter the subjects of classification of vessels, boiler pressure, transportation of dangerous articles, extension of motor-boat inspection, and examination of applicants for licenses.

Classification of Vessels

The Bureau recommends the Government classification of vessels, as insuring greater safety to vessels, and renews its recommendation looking to the creation of a board of naval architects in the office of the Supervising Inspector General, whose function it would be to pass upon hull construction. If such a board were created, it would pass upon the blueprints and specifications of all hulls of American merchant vessels subject to the inspection of the Service. After such blue-prints were approved in the central office, they would be sent to the proper field officers, and it would be their function to see that the vessels were constructed according to the blue-prints and specifications that had been approved.

The Bureau also renews its recommendation for the appointment of a corps of experts in boiler construction in the office of the Supervising Inspector General, whose functions would be to pass upon the blue-prints and specifications of boilers for use on vessels under the jurisdiction of the Steamboat Inspection Service, in the same manner as with hull construction. If the blue-prints and specifications were approved by the experts, they would be sent to the respective field officers, who would see that the boilers were constructed along the lines laid down by the experts in the central office. The local inspectors would then exercise no function in the matter of the approval of boilers. They would simply see that the boilers were built as approved.

Safety and Boiler Pressure

The Bureau renews its recommendation that section 4433, revised Statutes, be amended so as to read as follows:

The working pressure allowable on all boilers inspected as required by Title LII shall be determined by the rules of the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

In the annual report of the Supervising Inspector General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, it was pointed out that the purposes of the proposed amendments in this section are, first, to do away with the obsolete rule contained in the present law, which prescribes a working steam pressure for single-riveted joints, without taking into consideration the percentage of strength of the riveted joint, and allows 20 per cent. additional pressure for double-riveted joints, but which does not allow a greater working pressure for triple-riveted and quadruple-riveted, etc., lap and butt joints, for which greater working pressure should be allowed on account of the greater strength of the triple-riveted and other joints of greater strength than the double-riveted joints.

Boiler users have for many years desired this greater allowable working pressure for the stronger forms of riveted joints, and that desire is perfectly reasonable and should be met by the Government in the interest of better practice, all of which will result to the good and to the advantage of the American merchant marine. The present law does not give an incentive for the building of boilers with stronger joints that will carry a greater working pressure with but slight increase in the amount of material that will be required for double-riveted joints.

The Bureau, having in mind the fact that this Service has been open to some criticism with reference to its rules in regard to boiler pressure, has drafted a bill looking to the amendment of sections 4418 and 4433, Revised Statutes. If the authority asked for in the bill is given by Congress, the Board of Supervising Inspectors could prescribe rules that would meet the various conditions of boiler construction, taking into consideration the percentage of strength of the various kinds of riveted joints, as is now almost the universal practice.

It is recommended that section 4418, Revised Statutes, be amended so as to provide that the rule for the hydrostatic pressure applied to boilers shall be determined by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

Transportation of Dangerous Articles

In recent years it has become more and more apparent to this Bureau that section 4472, Revised Statutes, is obsolete, and that it should be amended in such manner as to enable the Government to proceed along modern and progressive constructive lines in the matter of the transportation of dangerous articles on steamers carrying passengers. Therefore, the Bureau has prepared a bill that it is believed will accomplish this result.

Extension of Motor-boat Inspection

In previous annual reports this office has had occasion to point out the inadequacy of the act of June 9, 1910, known as the Motor Boat Act. It is a question whether, under the provisions of section 4426, Revised Statutes, this Service has sufficient authority in the matter not only of the inspection of the small motor boats that are just over 15 gross tons, carrying freight or passengers for hire, but also over the great motor ships that are now coming into general use, and the law should be so amended as to give the Service the requisite jurisdiction in the premises.

This Bureau suggests a definite program in the matter. It believes that motor boats should be inspected and certificated, and that the operators of motor boats should be required to be 21 years of age, citizens of the United States, and to take written examinations. While, on the one hand, these small craft are placed in competition with steam craft required to be properly inspected, and have in some respects resulted in putting the inspected boats out of business, the more important thought to have in mind is that the operators of many motor boats need to be protected against themselves. When this Bureau argues for the inspection of motor boats, it does not mean the same kind of inspection as applied to a large ship, but it does mean that there should be an inspection of the five or six fundamental things on a motor boat, and that a certificate of inspection should be issued to that boat. It need not be a large certificate such as is carried by a steamer. It need not be required to be posted, but it should be required to be kept on board. This would result in the operators of motor boats knowing exactly where they stand with reference to equipment, and it would insure the public that they are actually protected. As it is now at pleasure resorts, the public sees a man with operator's license and, not knowing the law, believes that full protection is afforded by reason of that license. That license is obtained without any examination, and it puts the seal of the Government quite often upon incompetency when the Government should stand between the reckless operator and the unsuspecting public. This Bureau believes that the Government should insist upon the proper kind of life-saving equipment on board even pleasure motor boats, and contends that life preservers of an approved type should be required, and that buoyant cushions should not be permitted.

It is fully realized that there will be strong opposition to the adoption of the proposition of the inspection of motor boats, but when that opposition is analyzed it can be based on nothing else than the desire for license. The liberty of action of the real sportsman is not proposed to be interfered with, the profits of the operator engaged in the transportation of passengers are not proposed to be cut down, but it is proposed that this very important matter shall be properly regulated so that the public may be protected, which is at all times the first interest of this Service.

Examination of Applicants for License

Efforts were made during the fiscal year to bring up the standard of examinations, especially with engineers, and this work met with some success.

There is a class of license to which special attention must still be given, and that is the matter of motor engineer. That matter was previously considered by the Board of Supervising Inspectors at its last annual meeting, and it is expected that at the next annual meeting in January, 1921, definite and detailed rules will be adopted with reference to the examination of applicants for this particular kind of license.

Comment on Personnel

The pay of the inspectors of this Service should be increased because of the quality and the quantity of the work that they do. The reason that their pay should be increased is not primarily the fact that kindred positions outside of the Government have had the pay increased manifold until they are receiving two and three times as much as an inspector of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, but it is because the pay should have been increased regardless of whether there had been any war conditions or whether there had been any increase of pay outside of the Government service. The fact of the matter is that the inspectors never did receive the proper remuneration for their services. It is not necessary here to go into detail in regard to the nature of the services of inspectors of this Service. Suffice it is to say that an inspector must be intelligent, well educated, and at the same time physically able to carry out very arduous duties that are quite often very trying.

That which is true with reference to increasing the pay of inspectors is also true with reference to the clerks in the Steamboat-Inspection Service. Upon the one hand, it may be claimed by those who do not know that the clerks in the Steamboat-Inspection Service are the same as clerks anywhere, that they have clerical duties to perform, and that anyone can perform those clerical duties. That idea is entirely erroneous. The Steamboat-Inspection Service is not only peculiar in its discipline but also in its work, and it is a fact that before one may become efficient as a clerk in the Service he must become familiar with the work of the Service. If we are to continue offering small salaries to clerks, we will continue in employing people who are not the best in their class, and if we cannot offer the proper kind of promotions to those in the Service, we will continue to lose the best clerks we have, all resulting in the loss of morale and efficiency. It may be well enough to say that only a clerk has resigned and that other clerks may be obtained, but that does not solve the problem. The thing that is necessary to do, regardless of whether the Government takes action relative to other employees or not, is to increase and readjust the pay of the inspectors and clerks of the Steamboat-Inspection Service.

Inadequate Appropriations

If any thought whatever be given to the fact of how rapidly the American merchant marine has expanded as a result of the World War, it would seem that it is unnecessary to advance any argument looking to the necessity of increasing the number of inspectors.

It is just as essential at this time that there should be more clerks as that there should be more inspectors, yet the number of clerks has practically not increased, and this in the face of the enormous increase in shipping and of the unusually large number of men examined.

The inadequacy in appropriations is also felt in regard to the rental of quarters. It is never known when the inspectors of this Service will be required to move out of a public building and hire quarters in a private building. With inadequate appropriations it is impossible to hire the proper quarters in private buildings.

Civil Service for Supervising Inspectors

The Bureau renews its recommendation that the supervising inspectors of the Service be brought under the Civil Service, as are the local and assistant inspectors.

The supervising inspectors are almost entirely recruited from the local inspectors of the Service, and yet, when there is a vacancy in a supervising inspectorship, a good local inspector may hesitate to accept a promotion to a supervising inspector because he is afraid that his tenure of office would not be as long and as secure as if he were a local inspector. This should not be, and the supervising inspectors should feel that they have all of the protection that goes with an employee under the classified civil service.

THE BRITISH COAL STRIKE

(By United States Consul A. B. Cooke.)

The British coal strike, which began at the close of the working day on October 16, ended on November 3, when, after a ballot in the several coal fields, the Miners' Federation conference declared the strike at an end and advised the men to resume work immediately. In the balloting it was necessary under the laws of the federation to secure a two-thirds majority in order to continue the strike. Though this required majority was not secured, it is noteworthy that there was a majority of 8459 returned for the continuance of the strike and rejection of the terms offered by the Government and approved by the miners' representatives, the poll showing a total of 338,045 for and 346,504 against acceptance. The two coal fields which gave a majority against acceptance were Lancashire, which voted 14,600 for and 70,109 against, and South Wales, which voted 51,647 for and 98,052 against. The other eighteen fields gave substantial majorities for acceptance, with two unimportant exceptions.

It is estimated that the strike has cost the miners some $75,000,000 in wages lost and $10,000,000 in strike wages paid out to members of the federation. In addition, there has been a loss of about 14,000,000 tons of coal in output of mines. The economic burden which this loss of coal imposes upon the country is all the greater since it falls upon the export trade, from which the profits from the industry are at present mainly derived.

By the settlement of the strike all workers of 18 years or over, whether employed on the surface or underground, are to receive an additional 2 shillings, or $0.486, per shift. This increase is guaranteed unconditionally up to December 31, 1920, after which date it will depend upon the increase in output of coal, being subject to a sliding scale of increase or decrease adjusted every four weeks.

As the workers of the class named were receiving before the strike a wage of $4.58 per shift, this will make the wage per shift $5.07, at least up to the end of the year. The wage per shift in June, 1914, was $1.61. The current wage represents, therefore, an increase of 215 per cent. over pre-war wages. The increase in cost of living, all items included, over July, 1914, is, according to the British Labor Gazette for October, 1920, 164 per cent. When it is remembered that the miner pays practically the same rent as in 1914 and that he gets his household coal at an average of 6 shillings per ton while the general public has to pay ten times as much, it will be seen that the mine worker is better situated economically than ever before and relatively better than ony other class of worker.

DENMARK'S MERCHANT FLEET

During the first six months of 1920 Denmark's commercial fleet showed an increase of 21 ships of more than 100 tons, totaling 28,000 tons. Therefore the fleet on June 30, 1920, totaled 729 ships of more than 100 tons, with a total tonnage of 777,000. There were being built on July 1, 1920, 85 ships, totaling 130,000 tons, while there had been ordered, but not begun, 91 ships, totaling 223,000 tons.

In comparrison it is interesting to note that Norway, during the first six months of 1920, has increased its fleet by 59 ships, totaling 180,000 tons, while Sweden has in that time increased its fleet by 9 ships, totaling 29,000 tons. Norway's fleet, according to Norske Veritas, totaled on July 1, 1920, 1,756 ships, with a tonnage of about 2,126,000. Sweden's mercantile fleet totaled 1,262 ships, with a tonnage of 1,023,000.

A STATE TRAWLING INDUSTRY

The following is from the current issue of the Australian Worker: "Since the reconstruction of the N. S. W. State trawling industry by the Labor Government, the price of all fish sold has been reduced from 10 to 50 per cent., while at the same time the department has been elevated from an unpayable to a profitable one. The management expenses in connection with the department has been reduced 50 per cent. and a monthly loss of £600 has been converted into a monthly profit of £1700."

PROHIBITING IMMIGRATION

By a vote of 295 to 41, the House of Representatives has passed the Johnson immigration bill, as amended, to prohibit all immigration for a period of one year. The bill originally called for a two-year prohibition.

The bill now goes to the Senate, and predictions are made that it will meet with strong opposition in that body.

NATIONS USE BOYCOTT

The League of Nations' Assembly has recommended that the league apply an international boycott against any nation member of the league that violates the league covenant, or agreement. The assembly does not use the term "boycott," but has coined the very diplomatic and soothing phrase, "economic blockade."

It is hardly necessary to say that abolishing an evil and suppressing the complaint about it are entirely different, and, in fact, antithetical, propositions.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Contributed by American Federation of Labor

Christmas Greetings

(By Samuel Gompers)

The American Federation of Labor sends Christmas greetings to the working people of America.

There is much that calls for an expression of gratitude at this time as we approach the coming of another year, and there is much that causes thoughtful men and women to be apprehensive.

The labor movement must not and can not deceive itself. It must face the facts and fight its fight in the light of conditions as they are.

Numbers of employers, out of harmony with the great dominant thought of our time, blind to the lessons not only of the immediate past but to that which is transpiring in all other countries, bent only upon greed and willing to encompass destruction to gain profits, are placing obstacles in the road to progress.

Extreme reactionary joins hand, in effect, with extreme radical, to make more difficult the constructive work of the trade union movement, the greatest agency for progress in our Republic.

The American Federation of Labor sends a Christmas greeting in which it pledges itself to the fight to maintain that struggle for humanity and for the betterment of humanity, so fitting at this season.

Let all have courage to fight wrong and intolerance and tyranny. Let the ranks be close and firm. Let the might of right and justice stand solidly against the aggressive efforts of unfreedom and destruction.

The right will triumph only if those who believe in the right assert their belief. Working men and women, unite for justice and progress.

Anti-union Employers are Quack Patriots

The anti-union employer now calls individual bargaining "the American plan."

These quack patriots commercialize the most holy ideal and brazenly call on the Shades of men who have lived a life of service to indorse cheap wages, child labor and denial of human rights.

The real patriot is unselfish; the quack would control the lives of others. One inspires; the other is visionless.

The quack's Americanism is lip service and big profits.

He favors free speech—but not for those who disagree with him.

He favors a free press—when it is silent on wrongs that are profitable to him.

He believes in the education of children—but would fill his factory with child labor.

He talks of freedom, but would feudalize America.

He glories in the progress of his country but plays no part in its social or intellectual development. To him, government is a thing for private use. Its only purpose is to grant special privilege and "keep labor in its place."

The counting room patriotism of these cheap wage employers cannot be fused with the Declaration of Independence.

Paternalism in the shop and voting-booth liberty is not democracy.

Freedom is not actual where individual bargaining exists. Patriotism is unreal midst industrial autocracy.

If patriotism and Americanism are to be exalted the terms may well be rescued from these men of sordid mind.

Citizen's Alliances and kindred bodies should be called upon to cease trafficking in a nation's aspirations.

The youth of the land should not have their ideals debased by market place hagglers who bellow patriotism as they barter with unorganized, defenseless workers.

Men must live Americanism to be Americans.

The pretense of quack patriots should be hooted.

Paying the Fiddler

Manufacturers have lost $250,000,000 the last few months by retailers breaking their contracts, said H. F. Barker, of the National Association of Credit men. Mr. Barker is chairman of the association's committee on credit co-operation and credit methods. He said manufacturers were being paid back in their own coin.

"When the market was in the sellers' hands," he said, "questionable methods were frequently resorted to, which, in effect, are just as serious and deserving of condemnation as cancellations. Purchase agreements were often neglected when the commodities could be sold at higher prices. Not placing, therefore, the sole responsibility on the buyer when conditions were reversed, and the market came to his hands, yet there has resulted from the lack of good faith in the treatment of orders a damage to business which we have endeavored in a general way to estimate at $250,000,000."

"A Mismanaged Industry"

Scranton, the heart of anthracite coal lands, but 100 miles from New York, is linked with tidewater by a maze of tracks and but for the greed of the railroads in destroying water competition to erect a monopoly that is not competently conducted, it might be served also by up-to-date canals, says the New York World.

"A Mismanaged Industry" is this paper's reference to the present situation. To dig coal and haul it 100 miles "is bungled in almost every conceivable way."

"Profits grow also by delayed deliveries. The best coal storage is in cellars. It was impossible to fill bins in April at $11 and $12 a ton; the rise to $14 and $15, with many sales at higher rates, suggests ugly possibilities of profit in having the trade badly handled. A sudden and severe cold spell finds thousands of people who cannot get coal at any price.

"A meeting of coal wholesalers was held yesterday in New York to consider questions of selling profits. Very interesting to the trade, no doubt, is the limitation of wholesalers' profits, though these percentages alone take one-third of the cost of coal years ago to the consumer—but more

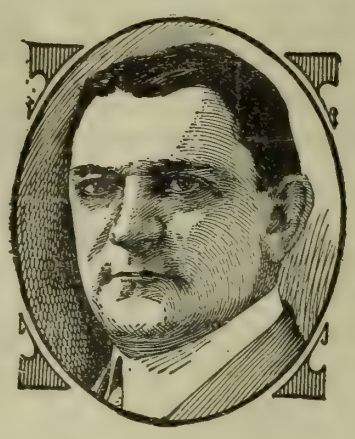
New land laws in Roumania have for the first time in history given the peasants the right to actually own land. These laws, passed by the ruling class in an effort to end the Bolshevist movement, which swept the country a year ago, gave to the peasants and actual farmers over 5,000,000 acres of land formerly held by the aristocracy and the State. These aristocrats were enraged when their "divine right" to monopolize the land and keep the people in a state of serfdom was questioned, but yieded rather than see the dreaded Soviet movement obtain complete control of Roumania and have all the land and natural resources confiscated and used for the benefit of the producers—workers and farmers.

Unemployment is becoming widespread in Germany, and another social and economic crisis threatens the country this winter. Emboldened by the Italian workers' victory in securing partial control of industry certain radical German unions have been planning a similar movement. Learning of the proposed movement the government attempted to kill the plan by forcing the movement to a head prematurely. This they succeeded in doing, and led by the government "agents-provocateurs" workers in some isolated industries in Berlin and other cities seized the shops and announced "soviet control," but the government having brought about this action was prepared and the movement was nipped in the bud and received a temporary setback.

Japan now owns and operates 9,745.10 miles of railways capitalized at $692,685,000. These government lines carried 357,881,989 passengers last year, hauled 59,903,957 tons of goods and made a profit of $53,756,789, or 7.8 per cent. on the capital account. The railroads of Japan were first taken over by the government in 1907, under the provisions of the Railway Nationalization Law of 1906. Since then the government has steadily extended and improved the system until today it includes 9,745 miles of track and accompanying equipment. The enormous increase of traffic and increase of costs of operation have made it necessary to raise rates and fares about 25 per cent. but the wages of the employees have been raised and the hours of labor shortened.

For the protection of maternity and infancy last year the British ministry of health appropriated more than $2,500,000, according to the United States children's bureau. The funds are administered by the ministry of health, in co-operation with local authorities. The latter contribute a sum equal to that granted by the government. In commenting upon this work, Dr. Addison British Minister of Health, says: "The development of the services throughout the country in nursing, midwifery and other facilities and the combination of the whole big effort, has been able to reduce the infant mortality in 20 years from 151 to 78. If we had had that figure of 78 during the last 10 years, it would have meant the saving of 270,000 lives in that period."

A MESSAGE TO SAILORS



By PAINLESS PARKER, Dentist

I WANT sailors to feel free to come to any of my offices and have their teeth examined. No charge will be made for it. Any sailor can find out just what his teeth needs and just what it will cost him to have them fixed up in good shape so he can chew fine.

My prices are moderate, but not "cheap," for I am not a man who does "cheap" things. But my System does save a lot of money and makes my work better, so I can give more good dentistry for a small price than dentists who do things in the old, expensive way.

I have offices all up and down the Coast in the principal ports. See the list below. You will get the same careful attention, the same painless treatments and the same moderate prices, no matter which office you go to.

Pacific Coast Marine

Owing to the continuous shortage of oil fuel on the Pacific Coast, the Canadian Pacific Railway is reported to have decided to convert its oil-burning coasting steamers into coal-burners.

One hundred and twenty-seven steam, motor and unrigged vessels entered the port of San Diego during November, according to Harbor Master Joseph Brennan. Departures numbered 119. During the month a total of 108,794 tons of merchandise, valued at $1,560,000, was handled over the wharves.

Word has been received from Sydney that the barkentine "Olympic," 1353 tons, had been chartered to carry coal from Newcastle, Australia, to Callao, at the rate of £5, or judging by the present rate of exchange, $17.50. The vessel is at present at Sydney, having arrived there from Eureka with a load of lumber. Thomas Crowley is the owner of the "Olympic." The vessel has been chartered to carry a full cargo.

Imports of coal from British Columbia to San Francisco are about to be resumed. It now costs $7.50 per ton to carry Utah coal all-rail to San Francisco, while transportation by water from the Comox mines could be made for $5. San Francisco coal importers have requested the Shipping Board to place in the trade nine 8,800-ton dead weight freighters now laid up in Southampton Bay, which would be able to bring down 55,000 tons of coal monthly.

The Ed Lefsen Fuel Company of Portland has filed suit in the Circuit Court against the Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Steamship Corporation to recover $15,741.61, alleged to be the value of coal delivered to the company for which the latter has refused to pay. The steamer "West Apaum" is the vessel coaled by the Ed Lefsen Fuel Company. Some of the bunker coal caught fire after heating and was discharged.

The vessels of the Canadian fishery patrol service operating out of Esquimalt, B. C., with the exception of the steamer "Thiepval," have been laid up indefinitely on instructions from the marine and fisheries department at Ottawa. One hundred and twenty officers and men manning the fishery vessels have been discharged from the service. The vessels affected are the "Malaspina," "Givenchy," "Armentieres" and a number of smaller craft. The "Armentieres" will be turned over to the tidal survey service.

Three more freighters will be returned to the Shipping Board due to the laxity of freight offerings, according to an announcement by McCormick & McPherson, operators of the vessels. Intimations were also given that two more Shipping Board steamers under their supervision will be returned unless there are more favorable offerings in the cargo market. The vessels to be returned are the "Eastern Ocean," the "West Elcajon" and the freighter "Culberson." The latter is now en route to Hamburg with a shipment of wheat loaded at Seattle.

With the launching on December 15 of the destroyer MacDonough, the Union Plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation has constructed a total of sixty-one fighting crafts of different types for the United States Government since the outbreak of the war. Named in honor of the late Commodore Thomas MacDonough of Littletown, Del., the torpedo boat slid into the water at 12:20 o'clock p. m., in the presence of a large attendance from the works and representatives of the navy. Mrs. Lucy R. Dabney of Santa Barbara was sponsor for the fighting ship.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Regents of the University of California approval was given to a plan to accept a 350-acre tract of Oakland waterfront property in partial settlement of 25,000 shares of stock owned by the University of California in the Pacific Improvement Company. The stock is a gift of the late Edward F. Searles, and is valued at $2,000,000. The land is on the Alameda site of the Oakland estuary, near the Bethlehem shipbuilding yards, and is valued at $350,000. If proposed naval base plans go through its value will be greatly enhanced.

The U. S. S. "California," which will be commissioned about the 1st of the coming year, is the latest addition to Uncle Sam's Navy, and will be the world's greatest fighting machine. Of the 700 vessels of the Navy, the California will be the peer of them all, and will mark the latest strides in battleship construction in this or any other country. The California will be the third electrically-driven ship of the U. S. Navy, and the second to be manned by sons of the State after which she is named. She is of 33,000 tons displacement 608 feet over all has a width of 97½ feet, will attain a speed of 21 knots—24 land miles—and will carry in her main battery twelve 14-inch guns. Her secondary battery will consist of twenty-two five-inch rapid fire rifles, and a number of smaller guns, including six torpedo tubes.

Having completed his work as supervising director of the Government's investigation of the Pacific Coast shipyard frauds, Attorney Bert Schlesinger has resigned his post. Schlesinger submitted to Attorney-General A. Mitchell Palmer a report that showed the Government was saved $7,000,000 through the investigation. The saving was brought about by a reduction of credit claims made against the Shipping Board by shipbuilding companies and associated industries. "Your superior service in revealing gross irregularities in claims against the Shipping Board is thoroughly appreciated," the Attorney-General said in a letter to Schlesinger.

Mrs. Frank B. Anderson, wife of the president of the Bank of California, in the presence of a large number of attaches of the General Petroleum Company and the Union Construction Company, sponsored the future career of the 10,000-ton tanker "Liebre" launched on December 15. Without a hitch the monster oil carrier moved. gained motion and dipped stern first into the water. The vessel was built at the Union Construction Company's plant in Oakland for the General Petroleum Company. Fitted with Scotch boilers and reciprocating triple expansion engines with a speed of eleven knots, the "Liebre" is 435 feet long and has a capacity of 70,000 barrels of oil.

A dispatch to Lloyd's from Sydney, Australia, says the British Steamer "Cosmos" reports by wireless that she picked up the dismasted American schooner "Inoa" in latitude 34 south, longitude 154 east, with only two members of the crew aboard. The captain's wife and the remainder of the crew had left the vessel in a lifeboat. The "Cosmos" reported that she was towing the "Inca" to Sydney. Lifeboats of the "Inca," containing members of the crew of the schooner, have been picked up by the "Cosmos." The "Inca," a vessel of 901 tons, left San Francisco, September 8 for Eureka, from which port she sailed October 10 for Sydney. The place where the "Inca" was picked up lies about 800 miles off the coast of New Zealand.

Hawaiian sugar plantation owners have decided to erect a sufficient number of refineries in the islands to refine enough of the home-grown product for consumers of sugar living in the territory of Hawaii. At present there is only one sugar refinery in Hawaii and this is inadequate to handle the output for local consumption. In the past and at present practically all of the refining of Hawaiian sugar is performed in California. The movement of the Hawaiian sugar growers, it is stated, will aid materially in lowering the present high price of refined sugar in the islands. Out of a total of sixty sugar estates in the islands, it is stated that there is only one refinery, and that the owners have decided to erect a number of the former to handle the demands of local consumers.

Twelve thousand and thirty tons of coal were discharged from the collier "Ulysses" at the Cristobal coaling plant of The Panama Canal in fifteen hours and twenty-five minutes on November 12, 13. The collier docked at 8:50 a m., November 12; unloading was begun at 8:55 a. m.; at 12:20 a m., November 13, the cargo of 12,030 tons had been completely discharged, the ship cleaned up and all men were off. Cleaning up and taking the men off usually requires about an hour. The discharge was effected by means of the 4 unloaders of the plant, equipped with four 2½-ton clamshell buckets. Four unloaders worked from the beginning until 3 p. m., three continued from that hour until 11 p. m., when two were discontinued, and the unloading was completed with the use of one unloader. About six hours of the work was performed after dark. The new record beats the previous record for discharging the collier at this plant by six hours and ten minutes.

Marine surveyors at San Francisco are investigating the presence of six feet of fuel oil in the cargo holds of the British freighter "Waihemo" and are estimating the damage to the vessel's cargo, which, it is believed, will amount to nearly $100,000. The vessel arrived here from Ocean Falls, B. C., last Saturday with part cargo, destined for Auckland, Melbourne and Sydney, under operation of Hind, Rolph & Co. Preparations were made for loading 2500 barrels of fuel oil in bulk into the freighter's double bottom tank. When that amount had been pumped into the vessel and the capacity gauge refused to register, an examination was made. Officers of the ship then made the discovery that the oil had flowed into the No. 2 and No. 2A holds of the vessel, covering shipments of paper, cases of salmon and general merchandise stored there to a depth of six feet. All of the cargo in the above holds will have to be unloaded. Captain Cecil Brown is reported to be conducting the investigation on behalf of the local offices of the surveyors. The vessel is in command of Captain P. J. Foster and is a craft of 3540 net tons.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1920.

"SCIENTIFIC" UNIONISM.

A certain amount of dissatisfaction and discontent are lodged in the breast of every normal human being. Instead of being discreditable such attributes are merely signs of virility and health.

Every sound and well-balanced organization, too, has a more or less active dissatisfied minority. This, also, is a sign of vigor and life within the union.

Of course, there are limits to all things and in a labor union the limit is reached whenever a dissatisfied minority resorts to disruption tactics and above all when "emancipation" is sought through the organization of dual unions.

The Cigarmakers' International Union is just at present confronted with the manipulations of such an element.

A local union at Chicago (noted for the championship of "progressive" ideas), recently surrendered its charter to the headquarters of the Cigarmakers' International Union because as one member put it, the members of Progressive Local 527 refuse to pay the $1.00 per week Tampa assessment and have therefore organized a dual movement which is described as "an industrial organization based on scientific lines" and known as The Amalgamated Cigar-Tobacco Workers' Union.

In plain language it means that a small group of workers who call themselves "industrialists" and "progressives" refuse to continue paying a weekly assessment for the support of their own craftsmen on strike at Tampa, Florida. As usual in cases of this character the seceders use many fine phrases to cover their traitorous conduct. In a circular letter sent out by these progressives the Quixotic claim is made that at last the workers in the tobacco industry are to attain emancipation through applied science.

In commenting on this remarkable pretension the editor of the Cigarmakers' Journal says:

> Just what new science they are going to apply is not made clear. However, it must be of a very potent nature as it must necessarily overthrow the regularly applied calculations of mathematics, that we, who have not beheld the new vision, must use in our every day affairs. The only conclusion our arithmetic reaches is that if a group of workers, organized for self protection and mutual welfare, agree to pay to a part of their membership on strike to further their well being $5.00 per week in strike benefits that part of the group not on strike and working must provide an amount of money sufficient to meet the weekly payments.
> This is just what these self-styled scientists refuse to do. Instead of accepting the four square principle of solidarity they refuse to contribute their individual share of the expense and dissolve their local to form a more scientific (?) one.

Here, then, is a group of shirkers and fakers who seek to evade the payment of strike assessment by crawling under the mantle of new, high sounding phrases. And this in an international union that has almost from its inception raised wages, reduced hours of labor, paid death, sick and out-of-work benefits and in general made the life of the members better worth while living.

Truly, this manifestation of treachery (labeled science) among the Cigarmakers should be an object lesson to all the organized workers in America.

Beware lest your own legitimate dissatisfaction is used by unscrupulous and designing persons to further the plots of treachery and disruption.

Discontent is a healthy sign but think well and carefully before accepting beautifully painted substitutes for the real article. The established American trade-unions are not perfect. Nothing on earth is perfect, yet with all their faults, shortcomings and limitations the unions that function under the American Federation of Labor are a thousand times superior to the "scientific" makeshifts of which there is any record.

THE FERRYBOATMEN.

The employes of the ferries operating on San Francisco Bay were on the verge of general strike last Saturday night. Only the timely intrusion of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco prevented a walkout by the licensed officers and the members of the Ferryboatmen's Union.

Since May of this year the ferryboat employes have had a petition pending for an increase in wages. In "due time" the petition was considered by the U. S. Railroad Labor Board functioning under the Esch-Cummins Act.

At the hearing, held by the Board in San Francisco, the workers proved that the cost of living had increased 90% since December 1914. During the same period their wages were increased only 48% on the average. Still, an increase in pay was flatly denied notwithstanding the fact that the companies involved have repeatedly been authorized to raise their rates—60% on commutation rates and 80% on straight fares.

The companies, of course, declined to make any concessions to the men after the Board had rendered its verdict. Spokesmen for the companies have laid great stress upon the recent fall in wholesale prices of commodities. That this is a misleading and unfair contention is borne out by recent statements of Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, Commissioner of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor. Said Mr. Stewart:

> Slight reductions in the price of single articles of food have very little effect upon the cost of living to the average wage earner. There was a drop of one cent in the price of a loaf of bread in New York the other day, that is, the price fell from ten cents to nine cents per loaf. Now let us see what this much heralded reduction in the cost of living really means to the average worker with a family of five. On the basis of October, 1920. prices, the total annual cost of the food items carried by the Bureau of Labor Statistics would be to an average family in the United States $682.57. If bread were to drop one cent a pound this would make a difference of $2.25 per year or one-third of one per cent. of his total food expenditure. When milk drops one cent a quart it means $3.55 per year to the average family or 52/100 of one per cent. A drop of one cent a pound in the price of flour saves the average family but $4.54 or 77/100 of one per cent. of his food cost based on October prices. Sugar may fall a cent a pound and the average family saves $2.69 in a year, or 39/100 of one per cent. of the total food cost. A decline of one cent a pound in the actual retail price of sirloin steak means but seventy cents a year to the average workman's family, though a similar reduction in pork chops would mean $1.14 a year, or 17/100 of one per cent. Butter might decline, if it ever should decline, one cent a pound and advantage the average workman only to the extent of $1.17 per year. A drop of one cent a dozen in eggs would mean eighty-five cents a year; of a cent a pound on lard would mean eighty-four cents a year—in each case only 12/100 of one per cent.: and so forth.

Every American, who supports a family, knows that the cost of living as represented by food prices increased by leaps and bounds and simultaneously along the entire line of products, so that when the average cost of food to the workman began to go up it went up with extreme rapidity, and reached what was to the average wage earner an enormous sum.

On the other hand, the decline in prices so far has been comparatively small, has affected for the most part articles that do not enter largely into the worker's total cost and may be more than offset by the unheralded increase in some other article of food which proportionately affects him a great deal more.

There is no doubt that all are glad to see a drop in prices in any important article of food, and all agree that every little helps. At the same time, as Mr. Stewart points out, the net effect of the decrease in wholesale prices has been trifling when applied to the average family budget.

At the time of going to press the employes of the San Francisco ferry systems are in conference with representatives of the companies. So far nothing has been settled.

The Star of San Francisco, founded by James H. Barry and edited by him continuously for 35 years, has suspended publication. Outside of the circle of labor papers, owned and maintained by the labor organizations, there are but few really independent papers in all America. The Star was one of the few and its suspension is a genuine loss to every worthy cause that needs assistance. Never in its long and eventful career did The Star fail to champion right and justice. Never did its editor refrain from attacking wrong and injustice no matter how powerful the men behind the curtain. The Star will be missed by many who loved to read a paper without a subsidy and with scarcely any advertising. Here's hoping that with a return to normal conditions in the newsprint line The Star will reappear and again point the way to greater and bigger and better things in life.

The JOURNAL extends to its readers ashore and afloat the very best wishes for a Merry Christmas.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Establishment of machinery overseas in co-operation with foreign governments through which aliens, before breaking up their homes, may determine whether they will be admitted to the United States and legislative consideration of the proposals made by the Second Industrial Conference are outstanding recommendations in the annual report of Secretary of Labor Wilson, made public during the week.

Secretary Wilson devotes much of his report to a discussion of immigration and the expulsion of aliens. He asserts that he alone has authority to order the arrest and expulsion of aliens, although the Bureau of Immigration has assumed to itself power not only to make recommendations but also to make findings.

The report shows that 633,371 aliens arrived in this country during the last fiscal year as compared with 237,021 the year before. Of the total arrivals 11,795 were excluded. Of those arriving 430,001 are classed as immigrant aliens and 195,575 as non-immigrant aliens. Departures of aliens totaled 428,062, including 288,315 emigrant aliens and 139,747 non-emigrant aliens, making the net increase in the immigrant population for the year 193,514.

Japanese admitted numbered 16,174 as compared with 14,904 the year before. The total number of Japanese departing is placed at 15,653, making, the report says, the indicated increase in Japanese population 521.

Besides the immigrants turned back at the ports of arrival, 2762 were ordered deported during the year on departmental warrants as compared with 3068 the year before. Of those deported on warrants 469 were classed as anarchists and criminals.

During the year 519,003 aliens took out the initial or final steps toward citizenship. While this is less than the record total of the year before the decrease is confined to aliens in military service and results from the demobilization of the Army. First papers were filed by 300,106 aliens, while petitions for final naturalization were filed by 166,925 aliens in civil life and 51,972 soldiers.

Secretary Wilson never believed in quibling. So it is no surprise that he unequivocally endorses collective bargaining. "The department," says Wilson, "stands for collective bargaining. It recognizes collective bargains as in the nature of 'gentlemen's agreements' in contradistinction to legally enforcible contracts. Collective bargains cannot be regarded in the same category as ordinary contracts, because there is no mutuality."

The Secretary of Labor renews his recommendation for legislation to improve the work of labor distribution by making public lands and community credits more accessible. He also again urges Congress to provide governmental means for the adequate training of workers in industry.

Secretary Wilson's term of office will soon expire and his successor will be appointed by a Republican President. But whoever may be the next Secretary of Labor he will have to be an A1 public servant to maintain the high standard of public service established by America's first Secretary of Labor.

FIVE WEEKS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Third Instalment of Personal Experiences by President Schlesinger of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union

Hotel Savoy was one of Moscow's most beautiful hotels, and its location in the heart of the opera and theatrical district made it one of the gayest hostelries in Moscow; a kind of a four-story Ritz. The best known singers, actors, theatrical managers and all other luminaries of the stage world were housed there.

Today, only government officials, largely from the Commissariate of Foreign Affairs, located within a stone's throw from the Savoy, live there. It is also reserved by the Government for visitors and guests from foreign lands. The former luxury and elegance of the hotel have totally disappeared. Gone is the splendor of the reception rooms and lobby, which used to be the favorite rendezvous of the stage celebrities of Moscow and of their admirers. The massive leather chairs, the opulent carpets, silk portieres and crystal chandeliers have disappeared. The candy stands and book stalls are there no more either, and the doormen and servants in gorgeous liveries, who stood guard at the doors, have vanished from sight. Hotel Savoy is a proletarian hotel now. Its visitors have to open the doors and close them by their own efforts; they sit on wooden benches or stand up on bare uncovered floors, and have to be contented with the light shed by the lone electric bulb in the room.

As you open the door of the main entrance and ascend the few steps leading to the office, you are halted by a Red Army man, gun in hand, to whom you must exhibit your pass card, your permit to live in Moscow. This done, you have to inform the young woman at the desk, with the big ledger, as to whom you are looking for at the hotel. You stand there in line waiting until everything is found to be "legitimate," and only then are you permitted to advance.

By the time I had gone through all these formalities with the Red Army Guard, and the girl at the desk, and had climbed four stories with my bag up to the room Nuorteva had reserved for me—there are no elevators running at the Savoy—I was covered with beads of perspiration. One look at the room that was destined to be my home during my entire stay in Moscow, the bed in that room, and particularly the bedding upon that bed, was, however, sufficient to send a shudder down my back. What a room that was! The paper on the walls and the ceiling was indescribably dirty and hung in pieces. There was an iron bedstead, two small straw-packed pillows, two crippled chairs and a three-legged table in the room. This comprised all the furnishings in the room. The filthy looking pillows were without covers, and the mattress without a top sheet. The idea that I would have to sleep in this bed and on this uncovered mattress and pillows, almost took my breath away.

As I stood there in contemplation of my cheerless prospects, I heard a bang on the door, and before I had a chance to say a word, in walked Simeon Ogursky, whom I knew well in New York, and fell upon my neck. He learned from Boris Reinstein that I was in Moscow and discovered at the Foreign Office that I was stopping at the Savoy.

"You must see that I get some sheets, pillow covers and a blanket," I told him a little later.

Poor Ogursky certainly did his best. He ran from one place to another, to the commandant of the hotel, the supervisors, but could not obtain more than a promise that everything would be forthcoming tomorrow. For the first night, he advised me, to wrap up the pillows with my top shirts and to use my overcoat for a blanket. He gave me some additional instructions how to get along until the following morning, and then took me down to the dining room for supper.

The evening meal consisted of black bread, three sardines, two small potato pancakes and two glasses of tea. Before leaving the dining room I also obtained a package of twenty-five cigarettes and a box of matches. I learned later that cigarette smokers are furnished by the hotel with twenty-five cigarettes daily. I told Ogursky of my appointment with Goldfarb for the midnight hour, and he volunteered to escort me to the latter's home on the Sadovaya. And as the hour was nearly eleven and the distance from the hotel was considerable, he proposed that we start out at once and walk through the principal streets of the city. Indeed, I was quite eager myself to see Bolshevist Moscow at night.

The night was divinely beautiful, starry and moonlight. Yet, somehow as I was looking into the dark blue firmament, it seemed to me that our New York moon shines more cheerfully, while its Moscow face is overdrawn with a painful haze and mist. I even made this suggestion to Ogursky.

"It is the same sky, the same stars and the same moon," he said with a smile, "but while you are looking at them here in Moscow your mind is still under the spell of life in America. That is why your New York moon seems more cheerful to you. Forget America for a while. Think of the great fight which Russia is waging

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

BOOZE FIGHTERS AND BUCKOES

The flagrant misconduct at sea and in port of some of our new era shipmasters, and the crass indifference of American consuls as a whole toward complaints of aggrieved seamen in general, fully justifies the oft-repeated assertion of the organized seamen that the La Follette Law needs amending upward and outward, instead of inward and backward, as the shipowners contend.

The following, copied, verbatim, from an affidavit, recently subscribed and sworn to by Erick W. Johnson, A. B., is only one of many similar complaints now on file in support of the general contention in this regard:

State of New York,
City and County of New York—ss.

Erick W. Johnson, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I reside at 198 Carroll St., Brooklyn, New York. I am not a citizen of the United States.

I was an able seaman on the S. S. "Bellingham" at $85 per month. I joined her at New York some time between September 24th and 29th, 1919, for a voyage to Rotterdam. I was assaulted by the master, Capt. McKelloun, during the voyage, while at sea, about October 6th, and again about two days after we got into Rotterdam, about October 16th. I was compelled to leave the ship, after demanding half wages, because of harsh treatment. I applied to the American consul for protection. I saw the chief consul. He said he was sorry but could not do anything about it. He did not give me any letter to the captain and did not summon the captain to him as far as I know.

I did this before I decided to demand half wages and leave the ship.

The first time I was assaulted I came up about 12 o'clock to relieve the man at the wheel. The captain came up about the same time to the bridge.

He had been drinking—in fact, he had been drinking heavily all the voyage. You could tell by the color of his nose he was a heavy drinker.

We had a fresh breeze and choppy sea at the time I was at the wheel.

I was steering a course of 115 degrees. He (the captain) came up and said: "What are you on now?" I said: "I am on the course now, sir."

Two or three minutes later he again said: "What are you on now?"

I said: "I am on the course, sir." A few minutes later, just as she was taking a swing to port, pitching, he said: "What are you on now?"

I was a bit confused any way and I waited to see how she would swing when I got her steady so I could tell him where she was before answering.

He came up close then and said: "Why don't you answer me?"

He looked in the compass and saw she was two points off the course, and said: "No wonder you didn't answer me, you are two points off!"

I said: "I never thought of it, sir." Then he said: "Anyone aboard this ship who does not answer me I will knock his block off!"

I made some reply and he swung on me with his right hand, and a heavy ring which he wore came in contact with my head, behind my left ear, where I still have a deformity or growth of some kind as a result of the blow.

On or about the 16th of October I wanted to draw some money, and not being able to get it from the super-cargo, I knocked at the captain's door about 7 p. m. He came out in his pajamas. He asked me if I had worked that day or the day before, and when I told him I had not, he asked me how I could expect to get any money. I said I had not expected to but wanted to find out if I could. He then called the first officer, and I could see he was getting ready to do something. He said: "You come in here!" and I stepped into his cabin. The cabin on this ship is divided into two parts. The front part was his office and the back part was his state-room. There was a woman in there whom he had brought on board from ashore. Just as the mate came up from below he made a lunge at me. I ducked and his fist struck the door.

Then he came at me again. I defended myself the best I could, deeming that I had the right. Before making the attack he said to the mate: "Here is a young Swedish son of a —— who thinks he can run this ship! I am going to run him ashore and leave him ashore!" I believe the captain received a pair of black eyes during the next few minutes. The mate struck me over the head with a flashlight, but I did not mind that much as I was pretty mad. Then I saw the mate looking around the captain's desk, where I knew a revolver or two was kept. At the first opportunity I ducked out the cabin door and ran to the starboard side of the ship, which was next to the dock, and jumped to the string piece, which was about eight feet.

I then got outside and saw the captain and mate both coming on deck each carrying a revolver. I then managed to get up the dock and out the gate before I was stopped. I had a few dollars with me, but of course no clothes except what I wore.

The next day, when I thought things had cooled down, I attempted to return to the ship, but I was warned by the second and third mates to stay away, as the captain carried a gun with him and declared he would shoot me if I came on board. Knowing what a heavy drinker he was, I thought it best to keep away. I saw the captain's woman ashore the following day and she told me the same thing. I do not know the woman's name, but she is of ill repute and generally known around that port.

The following day I reported this whole proceeding to the American consul. He said he knew this captain bore a bad reputation, but that he could do nothing for me. He said that personally he would like to help me, but as he is representing the American Government he could not do so.

I was told by other members of the ship's crew that for three days after that Saturday night, when he drove me ashore, that the captain kept himself locked up in his room; would see nobody, and was drinking heavily—in fact, raving drunk all the time.

I am making this affidavit for the purpose of filing it with the United States local Steamboat Inspectors, and with the State Department of the United States. I desire to become a citizen of the United States, and I hope the publication of these facts will lead to an investigation which will result in proper action being taken in regard to this captain's license, as well as some amendment in the law which will enable American consuls in foreign ports to afford some degree of protection to American seamen.

This Captain McKelloun is now master of the tanker "Sepulgia," which was reported on September 10th off Point Leboa, Mexico, bound for Boston.

ERICK W. JOHNSON.

The foregoing statements of fact, subscribed to under oath, by seaman Johnson fully justifies our oft-repeated contention, that all masters are not plaster saints, that all foreigners are not fools, and that even American consuls are not immaculate. As long as shipowners will persist in employing drunken reprobates as master mariners, allowing them to discredit and disgrace America and American institutions abroad, and then backing them up in their frenzied rascality, they can expect nothing but trouble from their crews. In certain quarters all seamen are presumed to be irreclaimable drunkards; they are as irretrievably tagged with an opprobrious term as a dog with a bad name, and nothing good is ever believed, much less expected of them. The master, however, is looked upon as a patriarch among his crew, especially in foreign ports. Like captain like country is the world verdict, and a shipmaster is usually presumed to represent and uphold in the highest degree the most exalted traditions of his native land. Like a minister in his pulpit or a judge upon his bench, he is esteemed above the herd and held by common repute above reproach if not above criticism.

Whenever a shipmaster lowers himself to the degrading of a common drunkard and public libertine in the presence of his crew, he deserves to be disrated and discredited, and publicly tagged for the unprincipled reprobate he is.

If Brother Johnson anticipates any official action, either from the State Department or the Board of Supervising Inspectors, as a result of the disclosures made in his affidavit, we fear he is foredoomed to disappointment.

A longer acquaintance with the ways and wiles of official functionaries in these United States will gradually dispel any lingering or preconceived notions of that kind he may have entertained or inherited heretofore on the subject. Those "inspectors" wouldn't if the ship was overboard. Besides, common sailors are even more common than common drunkards (even when these do happen to be captains), and who is going to spoil a good game of golf investigating a drunk?

The cynical disregard and official contempt almost invariably manifested by American consuls toward the gravest of complaints brought by aggrieved seamen against brutally inclined officers has long been a cause of intense and bitter resentment and world-wide protest among those most intimately concerned—the complaining seamen. Among the hundreds of complaints coming from abroad, it is only at rare intervals that we hear of an individual consul who is manly enough to defy the political power and pull of the mighty shipping interests by according even-handed justice to aggrieved seamen.

The present consular incumbent at Rotterdam is an old and frequent offender in this regard. Why?

In the JOURNAL of Nov. 10, as our readers will recall, we discussed at some length, the case of a complaint made by five seamen from the S. S. "City of Flint" to this selfsame consul, accusing the chief officer, while frenzied with drink, of making a murderous, unexpected and entirely unprovoked attack with a deadly blackjack upon an unarmed and defenseless seaman.

In that case, it was reported, the consul obligingly quashed the complaint and ordered the witnesses back to their ship, at the master's suggestion.

Can any one remind us of a prominent case wherein an American consul has disregarded a complaint preferred by a master against an insubordinate or delinquent seaman? Why are consuls such obvious respecters of persons?

A possible explanation of this prevailing consular prejudice against seamen complainants may be found in the recollection of an historical incident which occurred within the United States. On the theory that history repeats itself, we relate the incident in point for what it may be worth.

Away back in the early eighties, Mr. James B. Reed was appointed Shipping Commissioner in the port of New York, through the special intercession of the late Chester A. Arthur, then President of the United States, as a mark of personal esteem. That was probably the most appropriate appointment of Mr. Arthur's whole administration. Upon his retirement from the presidency in 1885, Mr. Arthur requested of his successor, Grover Cleveland, as a personal and parting favor, that Mr. Reed be retained as Shipping Commissioner at New York during the incoming administration. This request, of course, was complied with, to the intense dissatisfaction of the "spoils system" adherents in control of the political situation in New York, and who joined vociferously and unanimously in the old party slogan, "Turn the rascals out!"

Thus it came about that Mr. Reed remained in uninterrupted though not unprotested occupation of his office during a period of nine years, throughout two conflicting national administrations, a hostile and intensely acrimonious period when party affiliation was the only logical excuse for public spoils.

From the very outset of his first term as Shipping Commissioner, Mr. Reed accepted his official duties seriously and proceeded to fulfill them faithfully and conscientiously, to the great consternation and despair of the crimping combine, whose members and parasites had always been previously accustomed to dealing with fellow crimps and ward healers disguised as "deputies," when invading the shipping office to rob or coerce seamen.

But Mr. Reed's first offensive was a revelation to the crimps, and properly supported by his superiors in Washington would have led straight to their inevitable finish. It must be borne in mind, also, that those historical incidents occurred before the seamen's unions hove in sight, even on the Pacific Coast. One of Commissioner Reed's first official acts was the complete and rigorous exclusion of all classes of crimps, including boarding masters, runners, shipping agents, jackals and parasites of all kinds from his official precincts. Notices of such exclusion were printed and publicly posted in all parts of the premises, warning all would-be offenders of this ruling, and police officers were stationed at the entrances of the building to enforce it.

Printed circulars were likewise conspicuously posted in the old Barge Office, setting forth in distinct and forcible language the reason for the promulgation of such drastic rules, and the determination, as Mr. Reed announced, to carry them out unswervingly "unless and until I have been directed by higher authority to do otherwise." And, unfortunately, Mr. Reed's personal apprehensions in this regard were eventually to be fulfilled in fact.

Among many other public circulars posted at the Barge Office by Mr. Reed, was one setting forth his personal views regarding the duties and purpose of the Shipping Commissioner's office. The office, he firmly asserted, was established primarily to protect seamen as far as possible from their ancient enemies and despoilers, the crimps, and to facilitate the efforts of masters in securing reliable crews. In order to carry out his proposed plans Mr. Reed converted his entire premises in the old Barge Office into a public waiting room and employment bureau for seamen only.

Notices were posted inviting seamen to make free and unlimited use of the premises provided for their protection and convenience. Settees and reading matter were provided, so that seamen might rest and pass the time away comfortably and profitably while waiting either to sign on or be paid off.

Seamen holding good discharges from American vessels were assured the preference in shipping over men supplied by the crimps, and shipmasters were invited to co-operate in carrying out this policy.

A branch office was opened by the Commissioner at No. 68 West St., North River, to look after the welfare of seamen engaged in the immense coastwise trade, which at that time centered in the port of New York.

This office was placed in charge of a certain Mr. Jones, likewise a man of sterling honesty and unimpeachable character, and one of the truest friends the seamen ever had.

Addressing himself to the hostile crimps and the public generally, in justification of his new policy, Mr. Reed said in part, as near as we can remember the words of his circular: "While I do not consider it as being to the best interests of seamen to aid or encourage them in avoiding the payment of their just obligations, I do realize at the same time that in the vast majority of cases the bills presented here by alleged creditors of seamen are either fictitious accounts framed up against them while under the influence of liquor, or rum bills for the very same drinks that got them so."

Mr. James B. Reed was the real John the Baptist of the seamen's unions on the Atlantic Coast. A little ahead of his time and generation, perhaps, but he was the real voice and forerunner of all the magnificent reforms and improvements that have since transformed the whole scheme of seamen's lives.

Alone and unaided, save by his own sense of righteousness, force of character an dfficial influence, he held the entire wolfish horde of predatory, conspiring beach pirates in check for several years, and protected the seamen at all hazards and against all comers.

But the position of the organized crimps at length became utterly precarious and not at all permanent. Under the new state of affairs they were rapidly losing their power and prestige over the seamen, and without that the source of their revenue and the hope of their gain would likewise be gone.

In sheer desperation at length the organized crimps called their faithful backers and loyal associates, the shipowners and the patrons of the Sailors' Home (?) to their support. Hadn't the Superintendent of the Home (?) gone to Washington in a previous emergency and saved their conspiracy from destruction by securing a practical substitute for the prohibited advance system? Certainly! And wouldn't he oblige again to save the "blood money" monopoly? The Sailors' Home (?) runners had likewise been excluded from the Commissioner's office! Certainly! If this exclusion game was to be kept up much longer an honest thief would be actually compelled to work for his living! Thus reasoned the crimps, and their devoted allies came secretly to their aid. Through certain devious and mysterious channels undue and pernicious influence was brought to bear in certain exclusive sanctums in Washington, and as a result an official admonition came to the sailors' only friend and protector, "reminding" him that "the Shipping Commissioner's office was established to help, not to hinder commerce."

Therefore Mr. Reed was obliged to desist in the program of righteousness which had hitherto governed the business of his important office, and let the devil have his day.

In view of the foregoing notable precedent, and in the face of existing conditions, is it not rational as well as reasonable for seamen to surmise or suspect that American consuls are being similarly admonished or trifled with by some subtle and unseen power? We do not assert or even allege that such is the case. We only suggest, upon the theory that history repeats itself, that stranger things have happened.

In the course of his affidavit, which is the basis of this discussion, the deponent seaman reports the consular statement made to him in Rotterdam, as follows: "He said he knew this captain bore a bad reputation, but that he could do nothing for me. He said that personally he would like to help me, but as he is representing the American Government he could not do so."

Since when, and by what authority, has the "American Government" forbidden its consuls to protect its merchant seamen against unlawful treatment abroad? Is it possible that all American consuls have been secretly instructed that their offices are also established "to help, not to hinder commerce"? The practical unanimity of their acts in dealing with such cases in widely separated parts of the world renders such a theory a tenable proposition, to say the least.

That the American consular service is badly in need of a thorough overhauling and all around shaking up has been evident for a long time.

Personal protests to the State Department from individual seamen, however, are a mere waste of time. We might as well sing our sorrows to the deep sea. What

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(By Laurence Todd)

What does the new Needles Trades Alliance mean, and how will it affect the American Federation of Labor?

That question is in the minds of all trade union officials here, as the fact is borne in upon them that the 300,000 members of the four largest internationals in the garment trade inside the A. F. of L. have united with the "outlaw" Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America to resist the organized employers in the latter's demand that piecework be restored. Along with the restoration of piecework the bosses propose to regain the sole right to hire and dismiss employes. They aim, in short, to destroy the vital positions won by the strongest union in the garment trades. The battle is on, and every American community will feel its effects.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers, speaking through President Schlesinger, says that the Alliance is formed purely for defensive purposes, because the garment industry is so closely united in all its economic elements that the unions can no longer fight alone to any advantage. Henceforth they will help each other in all their battles and will seek a common program of progress.

The other bodies which have entered into the Alliance are the United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers of North America, the Journeymen Tailors, and the International Fur Workers' Union. The Ladies' Garment Workers and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers took part, last summer, in the organization meeting at Copenhagen of the International Federation of Needle Trades Unions. All five of the organizations are faced by the same demands on the part of the employers—to the extent that these points have been won by the unions. If the Amalgamated is beaten in the great lockout begun by the employers in Boston and New York this week, the four organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L. will next be attacked, one at a time.

The tendency of all the internationals to form defensive alliances within the industries is stimulated by the word from Boston that the textile manufacturers have met in conference and agreed to cut wages in the textile industry 22½ per cent. More than 250,000 men and women are affected by this drastic lowering of the standard of living in the poorest-paid industry in the country. Textile unions are not strong. The bosses have all the advantage. But such as they are, the unions in most of the textile towns are planning to resist the cut.

It is to be noted that the United Garment Workers and the United Hatters are not included in the Needle Trades Alliance. They have at all times refused to have any dealings with their respective rivals, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Cloth Hat and Cap Makers. The Amalgamated, with over 100,000 members—some say they have 200,000—controls virtually nine-tenths of the men's ready-made clothing industry. The Cloth Hat and Cap Makers are suspended from the A. F. of L. because of their failure to obey a convention award giving a large part of their membership to the United Hatters. But the irregular unions continue to flourish and to improve the conditions of their members.

Almost equal in importance to the developments in the garment and textile industries this week have been the events in the railroad world. President Johnston of the International Association of Machinists, speaking for the executives of the sixteen standard railroad labor organizations, issued on Monday a long letter to Vice-President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., denouncing Atterbury's statement that the sixteen brotherhoods and unions were plotting to establish a "One Big Union" and the "closed shop," and through these agencies force the country to accept Government ownership and democratic operation of railroads under the Plumb Plan.

Johnston showed, from the records, that the railroad unions have never demanded the "closed shop," because they do not need any such contract. They have not plotted to form a "One Big Union." On the contrary, they have been convinced by experience that it is the railroad companies' officials who have financed detective agencies which have paid many of the most active "One Big Union" agitators to try to break the solidarity of railroad labor. And finally, the railroad labor unions are quite aware that their only chance to secure the adoption of the Plumb Plan is through the education of the American people to the economic advantage of co-operative as against profiteering control.

Atterbury, who is an old-time labor-baiter, had accused the unions of this "plot" because they asked the Railroad Labor Board to re-establish the national adjustment boards that handled the grievances of the men in the shops and in the maintenance departments especially. When Atterbury sprung his sensational charges, a small panic in railroad stock ensued, and several millions of dollars were lost by the frightened old ladies who gamble in Wall Street. Johnston, in his reply, showed that Atterbury was merely trying to destroy the unionism which the Pennsylvania and other roads had kept off their roads for many years by means of spies, gunmen and general intimidation. Now that the shops are organized solidly, and even the section hands are in the union of their craft, the management seeks to break down their defense by crying "plot" and "radicalism."

"Naturally," says Johnston, "the workers will resist by every means they can command under the Constitution and laws of our country."

Moreover, the Pennsylvania has begun to let contracts to the Baldwin and other private shops for work which should be done—and has been done at 60 per cent. of the contract cost—in the road's own shops. This is to be followed by leasing the Pennsylvania shops to these outsiders, which are connected by a system of interlocking directorates with the Pennsylvania company. Johnston brands their plan as a "brazen attempt to evade the provisions of the Transportation Act." Besides, it is to be worked on the notorious "cost plus" system, and railroad rates are to be boosted so that the public will pay as much as the ruinously high charges of the private contractors may make desirable.

There is war in West Virginia, this week, as usual. Federal soldiers are holding Mingo county, and President Lewis of the United Mine Workers, and Governor Cornwell are exchanging further opinions of one another, although the mine operators' trade papers have been publishing favorable articles on the candidacy of Lewis for re-election as head of his international union. Winter weather in West Virginia is making the tent colonies in the strike zone a pitiful place of abode for the thousands of women and children who are sheltered there, but the spirit of the strikers was never stronger. If they are finally beaten it will be because they have not had their fight properly made for them in Washington, where the control of Federal troops is located. The soldiers have disarmed the strikers, but apparently the company gunmen in Mingo county retain their weapons. That fact tells its own story of the possible outcome.

Immigration legislation, which yesterday seemed certain to be rushed through Congress in this session, has had a setback. The House will pass the bill forbidding general European immigration for the next 22 months. The Senate will go slowly. One reason is that there is a protest from the Senators interested in the future relations of the United States with Germany, who fear that a bar to immigration now may seriously affect the political security of the German Government and possibly other governments whose working people are tempted to become communists. Another reason is the suspicion that the anti-Jewish agitators, such as Henry Ford, are "putting something over." The third, and most weighty, is the desire of big non-union employers to keep a supply of cheap foreign labor coming, to break strikes.

The group which talks of the right of political asylum here for the oppressed peoples of the earth is very small. Idealism is at a low ebb in this Congress.

LUMBER IN AFRICA

A reinforcement for the world demand for lumber is preparing in British East Africa, where there are between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 acres of woodland to draw upon, and a new industry, very infantile at present, is expected to grow so rapidly that the government is now considering plans to improve the harbor facilities for exporting the forests. The best wood is suitable for wheelmakers and wagon-builders and the making of wood block paving, railroad ties, bridges, ox yokes and ax, pick and tool handles. It also makes good flooring and lining boards. The builder, however, must needs be of a patient disposition if he postpones building until these British East African woods are available. Meantime there are new sounds in some of the African forests, the rhythm of the woodman's ax, the buzz of the sawmill, and the puffing of undersized locomotives on the narrow-gauge tracks that are penetrating from the main line of railways into the woodlands. And many a workman, no doubt, will some day work with tools whose handles grew in an African forest.

today for the liberation of mankind, and then look at our moon and it will appear less sombre to you."

We passed through several streets and squares. The streets were unlit, yet there were lots of people everywhere. The benches on the squares were occupied with couples. "Do you see this section," Ogursky remarked to me as we turned into a wide, fine street lined with tall attractive buildings which must have housed big business enterprises before the Revolution, "this street was impassable for women until three years ago. This was the market of Moscow's prostitution. Hundreds and thousands of women street walkers used to gather here of nights to sell themselves. This section before the Bolshevist revolution was Moscow's Tenderloin. Tonight it is quiet and clean. Those unfortunates have disappeared."

"What became of them?" I asked.

"Most of them went to work," was the answer. "Very few women take up prostitution for the love of the profession or because they are driven thereto by unbridled passion. Most of them lead a life of shame owing to economic circumstances; others because they cannot obtain work; still others because they cannot make enough to live on from their earnings. There were some who could not withstand the temptation of wearing such nice clothes as rich women used to wear here. Today, however, there is enough work for everybody, and everyone must work. Today everyone gets three meals a day and all necessities of life, and we haven't in our midst idle rich and overdressed women who excite envy in others.

"Yes, most of these," he continued, "have gone to work in factories and are leading wholesome family lives, and those with whom this life of shame has become second nature and who wouldn't go to work, we simply compelled to give up this mode of living. Some of these have been sent to institutions, while others have been jailed for long terms."

"Do you mean to say then that you have completely done away with prostitution," I asked him.

"I don't say that we have totally abolished it," he replied, "but we, the Bolsheviki, the godless people of Russia, have done more in that respect and with more success than the French, the Germans, the English, and even the Puritan Americans—of this I have no doubts."

"Tell me something about the nationalization of women in Soviet Russia," I inquired.

"Are the American papers still feeding you on these ugly tales?" he turned eagerly towards me.

"Some still write about it occasionally, though in a rather less positive way," I said. "Only a few weeks ago there appeared in a New York newspaper a story about 'Woman's Week' in Soviet Russia, a week during which every man was supposed to have been given the privilege of selecting for himself any woman he desired and of compelling her to live with him. I read this in New York, and I am sure that this story was reprinted in many other newspapers in America."

"A 'Woman's Week,' a 'Woman's Week,'" Ogursky was repeating to himself, as if trying to recollect something. "Oh, yes, I have it!" he burst out laughing. Your American correspondent was either a fool or a knave, or perhaps both," he said merrily. "Indeed, we had here a 'Woman's Week.' But this was a week devoted to a drive among women to join the Communist Party. We have had several such propaganda weeks. A few weeks ago we had a 'Young People's Week,' during which we conducted an agitation among the young to join the young people's sections of the party. During the past six months we had a 'Red Army Week,' a 'Book Collection Week.' So your correspondent must have construed it as a week during which men were given the license to pick for themselves any women they might desire. Very clever indeed.

"Family life in Soviet Russia is more chaste than in any other country in the world," he continued. "Our marriage and divorce laws are such that make impossible the scandals and hypocrisy witnessed in other lands."

"Tell me something about your marriage and divorce laws," I asked him.

"In Russia today, when a couple make up their minds to get married, they carry out their purpose without any difficulty or 'red tape.' They go to the official bureau and register as husband and wife and that act constitutes marriage. If they are religious, they may go to a priest or rabbi, but that is their own affair. Divorces are just as simple. If both husband and wife agree to part, they have no difficulty whatever. They don't have to go to any court, or to make any fake accusations against one another, as is being done elsewhere. They go to the official bureau and declare their intention to get divorced, and this constitutes the act of divorce. In case, however, when only one side desires to get divorced and the other does not—whether that be the husband or the wife—the case goes to a hearing, and without lawyers or detectives at that. The matter is passed upon by a jury of three and let me tell you, I have not yet heard of a case where such judges have compelled either a wife or a husband to live together against their mutual will."

"And who takes care of the children in case of divorce?"

"Children under sixteen are taken care of by the Government anyway" he replied. "Many married people raise their children in Soviet children's institutions. In case of divorced couples, the children are naturally taken into Government homes. But our children's homes are not like similar homes in Europe or America. In our homes they receive the best education and the best food and clothes that we possess.

"Your newspapers have been telling lying tales about the 'nationalization' of our women. The truth is that we are encouraging marriages here. All cities, for instance, have adopted laws to give each groom and bride 40 arshines (about 35 yards) of linen gratis. In Moscow they get in addition to that a special bonus. The groom gets a special suit of clothes and the bride a wedding dress. Mind you, if one were to attempt buying such clothes under present conditions one would have to spend one thousand rubles, whereas in this case they get it for a nominal price; one thousand rubles—about twenty cents in American money.

"We have even had some comical occurrences in connection with this law which ended tragically in a few instances. The 'Tchrezvychaika' (Extraordinary Commission) has discovered a gang of couples who kept on continually marrying and divorcing each other in order to obtain the eighty arshines of linen and the two suits of clothes. The gang was arrested and some of them paid quite dearly for it."

We soon reached the Bolshaya Sadovaya where Goldfarb, Petrovsky's residence, was located. I took leave of Ogursky and entered the gate of the house.

Profiteering in Glass.

Window glass has increased in price 300 per cent. in the last four years, and plate glass 400 per cent., said Senator Kenyon, a member of the Senate committee which has been investigating housing conditions.

"Our committee discovered," said Senator Kenyon, "that although they had orders to be filled, plate glass manufacturers shut down their works to keep up prices. The committee intends to send the testimony taken in this connection to the Department of Justice."

The lawmaker declared that the country needs 1,000,000 houses, and that probably 20,000,000 people are not properly housed. He said that in one district in Chicago he found there was an average of 17 persons to a home.

"I believe it is imperative that something should be done," he said. "The present situation is creating a great deal of unrest."

is needed to bring about a practical reformation in the consular service is a formal demand from the International Seamen's Union of America, backed by the necessary evidence produced by men in the service to justify an official investigation. For this reason we respectfully suggest that all seamen having bona fide grievances of any kind against consuls, or consular officers abroad, should file affidavits upon their return, not with the State Department, but at the first union office they arrive at; and that all such depositions be preserved and carefully recorded as cumulative evidence of consular misconduct or neglect. These affidavits will, in the end, be bound to compel attention somewhere. Some public officials are fearless, and thorough, honest and efficient as well.

Labor News

The American Sugar Refining Company announced a general reduction of 10 per cent. in wages, which affects more than 2500 laborers in its northern refineries.

There were 400,104 members in good standing in the Brotherhood of Carpenters at the close of the fiscal year, reports Frank Duffy, general secretary of that organization.

Business men in Little Rock, Ark., are worried over a loss of business, and their chamber of commerce is devising methods to attract out-of-town buyers. These business men have stood behind anti-unionists in their war against organized labor, and organized labor retaliated by urging unionists to give the city a wide berth. The business men are now reaping what they sowed—hence the squeal.

The Miami Cycle Company of Middletown, Ohio, posted a notice on Saturday that the plant would be closed "until further notice" because of industrial conditions. The following Monday the management notified its organized polishers that the plant would resume if they accepted a wage cut. These workers refused the offer and are using the incident to show why employers want the non-union shop.

Cheap labor employers in Oregon are extremely modest in their plans to hamstring organized labor. All they ask is that the unions be incorporated, that strikes be outlawed and that a State body be empowered to set aside any agreement entered into between employers and a trade union. With these few changes the cheap wage advocates might be induced to permit the workers to organize ping pong parties and golf clubs.

The ridiculous lengths that anti-unionists will go is shown in the cheap stunts of the Better American Federation to attract attention to its non-union campaign. Two of its representatives appeared on the streets of Martinez, California, in an automobile. They were dressed in the garb of the mythical Uncle Sam and made speeches on the street corners. These attempts to capitalize a patriotic spirit are so unreal that they are reacting on the antis.

The Washington State Federation of Labor will establish a weekly labor paper in the near future. The recent political campaign has removed every doubt on the need for additional education and publicity by organized labor. Officials of the State Federation of Labor state that they will co-operate with existing labor papers, and as the field is a wide one, there will be no competition except in the sense of rivalry to develop stronger publications.

Anyone who says American citizens have no right to strike "is talking through his hat," says the Cincinnati Post, which declares that strike opponents are "creating bitterness and disorganization and are playing into the hands of the bolsheviki." "Whoever heard of President Wood of the American Woolen Company being sent to jail for arbitrarily shutting down his mill," asks the Post. "Whoever heard of Judge Gary being arrested for speaking in favor of the 12-hour day? We believe that men have a right to quit work, and we believe they have a right to talk about it."

Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,
> FRANK MANNING,
> Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Home News

During the first eight months of this year the production of coal was 408,904,000 tons, an increase of 54,994,000 tons over the first eight months of the previous year, reports the bureau of mines.

The breaking of contracts by American concerns doing an import business has reached such proportions that the standing of the United States in the world's markets is threatened, says the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, in its bulletin.

Nearly 50,000 pounds of Columbia River salmon, declared to have been improperly canned, were ordered Salt Lake City. All of the shipments libeled were from the Tallant-Grant Company at Astoria, Ore., according to Federal officials.

This year Standard Oil has paid dividends of $115,220,720, a new high record. In the nine years from 1912 to 1920, inclusive, total cash payments to stockholders total $807,725,565. It is claimed that the present market value of stock dividends increases this amount to more than $1,500,000,000.

Export figures made public by the Department of Commerce indicate production possibilities of this country. In October these exports were valued at $752,000,000 against $605,000,000 in September. For the ten months ending with October exports were $6,832,000,000, compared with $6,499,000,000 in the same period last year.

The United States Supreme Court has busted another trust in a decision ordering the Lehigh Valley railroad to divest itself of the Lehigh Valley Coal company. When the news reached Wall street the railroad company's stock advanced in price on the theory that the stockholders will receive valuable rights as a result of the dissolution.

"Shoes should come down," writes Richard Spillane in the financial column of the Philadelphia Public Ledger. "The greatest leather company in America is reported to have purchased 400,000 hides at prices ranging from 13 to 16 cents a pound. Last year hides of the same grade cost nearly 50 cents a pound. Hides now are selling on a pre-war basis. In fact, they are a little below it."

"With hogs bringing only $10 a hundredweight at the Chicago stock yards, where in July last year the quotation was $23.60, and with wheat and flour at less than one-half the prices commanded before the decline began, the American farmer has a grievance which he naturally voices," says the New York World. "These sharp reductions in basic food values ought to be reflexed in the commodity markets everywhere, but they are not. Most of the things that the farmer buys are presented to him at war-time prices.

In an address to business men in New York, Julius Kruttschnitt of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company urged the repeal of laws that limit the length of freight trains "and compel the employment of unnecessary men." The speaker wants things fixed so a train will be a couple of miles long with as few in the crew as possible. This, he says will aid efficiency. Railroad employees have secured legislation that limits the length of freight trains and provides for a sufficient number of men in the crew to protect life and property.

Domestic and Naval

The wood barges "Nashville," "Hermitage," "Old Hickory" and "Caney Fork," the sale of which, by the U. S. Shipping Board, to W. B. W. Mann, Baltimore, was reported in the press, has been canceled.

The Cuban prohibition on the importation of rice has been extended to March 31, 1921, by a decree of Nov. 19. (The former prohibition on the importation of rice was to be in effect until January, 1921.)

The new Spanish liner "Alfonso XIII," in course of completion at Bilbao, was badly damaged by a fire believed to be of incendiary origin. The whole interior was wrecked, the damage being estimated at 12,000 pesetas.

The Polish-American Co-operative Company, which propose to operate a steamship service between Danzig and New York, is reported to have acquired the British S. S. "Nigeria," 3755 tons, built in 1901, formerly an Elder-Dempster liner, to carry emigrants.

France has returned to the Hamburg - American Line the small steamers "Cobra," "Silvana" and "Kehrwieder." The Hamburger Correspondenz states that the Cunard, Luckenbach and American Lines will soon acquire their own terminals in the port of Hamburg.

The Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. will establish next spring a transatlantic passenger and cargo service between New York, Southampton, Cherbourg and Hamburg with the S. S. "Orduna," "Orbita" and "Oropesa," all large and commodious liners, fitted with magnificent passenger quarters.

Thirty Chinese, members of the crew of the British S. S. "Elder Branch" at Newport News, Nov. 27, overpowered the watchman and deserted, carrying with them about ten pounds of opium. Twenty-two of the men were arrested later and more than two pounds of opium recovered.

The first section of the German Floating Dock No. 23 has been surrendered under the terms of the Peace Treaty, and has arrived at Sheerness in tow. Two other floating docks have already been surrendered by Germany and brought to Sheerness, one of them being a huge structure capable of lifting 40,000 tons.

In view of the withdrawal of U. S. Army Transport Service from the New Orleans-Chistobal run, it is anticipated that the Panama Railroad will inaugurate a Cristobal to New Orleans service. The Army transports will hereafter sail between New York and San Francisco, touching as formerly, at Porto Rico and the Canal Zone.

A report received from Habana, December 1, 1920 reports that 15 vessels are unloading at the Habana docks, 25 unloading in the harbor, and 12 awaiting an opportunity to unload. Of schooners, there are 14 discharging and 14 awaiting an opportunity to discharge. During the past week the customs authorities dispatched 311,000 packages compared with 200,000 packages during the previous week. There has been moderate improvement in shipping conditions, 20 more vessels having cleared than entered. Concerning conditions at the docks and in warehouses there is as yet no material change.

News from Abroad

Of the 810,700 metric tons of coal imported into Switzerland during the first half of 1920, considerably more than one-half, or 432,602 metric tons, came from the United States. Germany follows with 157,371 metric tons, and Great Britain and Belgium next with 126,843 and 71,718 tons, respectively.

The Rotterdam firm of van Niewelt, Goudriaan & Co. has arranged with the Roland Line, Bremen, to transfer to the latter 10 small steamers in exchange for two 10,000-ton steamers built on the Weser. Some of the small vessels thus exchanged have been chartered to Robt. M. Sloman, Jr., for use in the Mediterranean.

The Italian State Railways intend to book through cargo from about 150 inland points in Italy to Canada, New York and Philadelphia, via Genoa and Naples. Exporters will receive a through bill of lading which will join the liability of the railways and of the maritime carriers. If the experiment proves successful, it is intended to extend it in other directions.

The Oriental Navigation Company will inaugurate, with the early sailing of the 7,500-ton d.w. Shipping Board steamship "Chester Valley," from Rotterdam, a regular service to Smyrna, Salonika, Constantinople, Braila and Constanza. A monthly schedule will be maintained with this steamer and the steamship "Sinsinawa," 7,825 tons d.w., calling at Antwerp and Marseilles.

The "Fritjof," 167x35x19 feet, recently launched at Gothenburg for the Gothenburgs Bogserings Akt., is said to be the largest salvage vessel in Scandinavian waters. She is propelled by three Diesel-driven dynamos generating a total of 1,250 h.p., and is able to pump 5,500 tons of water per hour. It is stated that she could run from her home port to New York or Java without refueling.

Search of the Italian steamship "America" upon arrival at Genoa from New York revealed a quantity of tobacco, sugar and coffee, which, it is alleged, was being handled by smugglers. In addition 400,000 rubles were found in the custody of the wireless operator. He declared the money was not to be used for political purposes, but belonged to speculators. The money and goods have been seized by the police.

The Italian levy on capital has proved a great disappointment. It was expected that 620,000 individuals would be subject to the tax which applies to property in excess of 50,000 lire, but only 361,000 have been found. The predicted annual yield of the levy of 783,000,000 lire, has dwindled to 450,000,000 lire for the first year of enforcement. The tax levy has shown that Italian wealth is more widely held than was supposed.

One of the Cardiff cargo-boat companies, the County Shipping Company, which owns two boats aggregating 11,300 tons d.w., valued at £20¾ per ton d.w., is stated to have earned more than 50 per cent. on its issued capital of £150,000 last year. The company has reduced its mortgage liabilities from £119,952 to £18,299 and distributed a dividend of 12½ per cent. last year, carrying forward £58,053 to meet depreciation and taxation.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

SEAMEN'S RIGHT TO DISCHARGE

Federal Judge Rules on Alleged Desertion of Seamen

A Federal Court decision of more than ordinary importance and in favor of seamen has been rendered by District Judge Waddill at Norfolk, Va.

In more than one aspect this decision should have a salutary effect on certain elements in America's Merchant Marine.

The points at law involved are not new, but the judgment of the Court (this being the second trial of the case) leaves no doubt that brutality at sea is no longer held justifiable as it was in the "good old days," when elastic reasoning justified almost any crime against seamen.

The verdict of Judge Waddill, together with an introduction summarizing the case, is published herewith.

Eight seamen, through their attorney, Jacob L. Morewitz of Norfolk, Va., sued the owners of the schooner "Marie F. Cummins" for pay due them for work on the vessel, which the owners of the vessel had refused to pay on account of the fact that the captain advised the owners that the men had deserted the vessel at Sewell's Point.

Members of the crew of the "Cummins" stated that the captain of the vessel had repeatedly threatened them with death when the vessel reached mid-ocean on its voyage to a Scandinavian port, whenever they demanded their unpaid wages, and he had attempted to assault them a number of times on the vessel without provocation whatsoever, and that all they wished was their pay and release from the vessel.

In specific language the libellants in the petition asserted that: "Thomas McIver, Master, since taking command of the vessel at Galveston, Texas, had been in a continuous state of intoxication, and while in such state of intoxication has repeatedly attempted to assault various members of the crew without any just cause whatsoever. That the said Thomas McIver has unlawfully refused to permit the complaining members of the crew to lay their various complaints before a U. S. Commissioner, as provided by law, and has heretofore compelled members of the crew who are libelants herein to remain aboard the vessel against their will after they had made respectful application to the master that they be allowed to file a complaint, said applications being answered by the master again attempting to assault various members of the crew and threatening them with bodily harm and with death when the vessel shall have arrived in mid-ocean, said vessel being bound for a Scandinavian port."

Judge Waddill decided for the men last September, but the company moved for a new trial, which was granted. He again decided against them, and, according to the law, a seaman in a case of this kind will get two days' pay for every day he is waiting for his money, so the judgment this time amounts to $7233.17, practically double what it did last time.

The order of the Court follows in full:

In the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia.

In Admiralty—No. 2682.

James Jackson et al., Libelants, Tommy Hara, Intervening Libelant, v. Schooner "Marie F. Cummins."

This cause came on this day to be heard on the libel of James Jackson, John Lewis, John Boyce, Esau Louie, Bernardo Bomba, Louis D'Anglebermes, and Lee Van Ward, and the Intervening Libel of Tommy Hara on the pleadings and proofs submitted, and having been argued by the proctor for the libelants and intervening libelant, and due deliberation having been had in the premises, it is now by the Court adjudged, ordered and decreed that the Libelants James Jackson, John Lewis, John Boyce, Esau Louie, Bernardo Bomba, Louis D'Anglebermes and Lee Van Ward do recover of the schooner "Marie F. Cummins" the respective sums to wit: One hundred and seventy-five dollars ($175.10) ten cents, to James Jackson; one hundred and seventy-nine dollars ($179.69) sixty-nine cents to John Lewis; one hundred and sixty-one dollars ($161.18) eighteen cents to John Boyce; one hundred and eighty-six dollars ($186.67) sixty-seven cents to Esau Louie; one hundred and seventy dollars ($170.88) eighty-eight cents to Bernardo Bomba; two hundred and fifty-nine dollars ($259.50) fifty cents to Louis D'Anglebermes, and two hundred and seventy-two dollars ($272.50) fifty cents to Lee Van Ward, with interest thereon from the twenty-first day of August, 1920, and their costs; and that the Intervening Libelant Tommy Hara do recover the sum of three hundred ($300.00) dollars, with interest thereon from the twenty-third day of August, 1920, and his costs, of the said schooner "Marie F. Cummins," all the said sums totaling seventeen hundred and five dollars ($1,705.52) and fifty-two cents which is hereby decreed unto them, together with interest as aforesaid, and their respective costs.

And it further appearing unto the court that under section No. 4529 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, that the said libelants and the said intervening libelant are entitled to receive waiting time, at the rate of two days' pay for every day until the settlement of the several claims for wages asserted by them, since the date when the same was due and payable unto them, the said libelants and intervening libelant, it is further adjudged, ordered and decreed that the said libelants and intervening libelant do recover, in addition, such sum or sums that will equal such two days' pay for every day that their said wages have been withheld from them without just or sufficient cause, in accordance with the said section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, since the twentieth day of August, 1920, the rate of pay to be computed in conformity with the schedules filed, on behalf of the said libelants and intervening libelant, along with their libels in this cause, the said penalty to run up to and including the date of this decree, and being respectively as follows, to wit: To James Jackson the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine dollars ($589.33) thirty-three cents; to John Lewis the sum of five hundred and eifihty-nine dollars ($589.33) thirty-three cents; to John Boyce the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine dollars ($589.33) thirty-three cents; to Esau Louie the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine dollars ($589.33) thirty-three cents; to Bernardo Bomba the sum of five hundred and eighty-nine dollars ($589.33) thirty-three cents; to Louis D'Anglebermes the sum of eight hundred and one dollars ($801.00); to Lee Van Ward the sum of eight hundred and ninety dollars ($890.00); and to Tommy Hara the sum of eight hundred and ninety dollars ($890.00), all with interest from the date of this decree, being the total sum of five thousand five hundred and twenty-seven dollars ($5,527.65) sixty-five cents which, together with interest as aforesaid, is hereby decreed as the penalty in this cause.

And it appearing to the court that the said schooner "Marie F. Cummins" has been released from arrest by the execution of a bond in the penal sum of thirty-four hundred and twenty dollars ($3420.00), with J. F. Molver, Master, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York, as surety, it is adjudged, ordered and decreed that the above mentioned bond be applied to the aforesaid decree, first to the satisfaction of the wages above decreed to be paid, and, secondly, to the pro rata satisfaction of the penalty above decreed, and that the said libelants and intervening libelant be entitled to execution against the said stipulators for their pro rata shares of the said sum of thirty-four hundred and twenty dollars ($3420.00) stipulated in the aforesaid bond, and that they be also entitled to execution on the residue of said sums decreed to be paid unto them, in their respective pro rata shares that will remain unpaid after the aforesaid sum of thirty-four hundred and twenty dollars ($3420.00) shall have been applied towards the payment of the said decree, against A. D. Cummins & Company, Incorporated, a corporation under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, owner and claimant of the said schooner "Marie F. Cummins," together with their several costs, and the said libelant and intervening libelant may have their right of fieri facias against the same, or either of them if this decree is not satisfied within five (5) days, in oroder to enforce the payment of the said amounts, or such other sums that they may deem proper.

It is further adjudged, ordered and decreed, that the libelants and intervening libelant do recover their respective costs in this cause from J. F. McIver, Master, as principal, and the American Surety Company of New York, as surety, the stipulators upon the costs bond given by the claimant in this cause, and that unless the same be paid within five (5) days, that execution be issued therefor.

U. S. POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

The United States Government accepts interest-bearing postal savings deposits from the public and guarantees to repay them on demand.

Any person 10 years old or over may open a postal savings account in his or her own name by depositing one or more dollars in any postoffice authorized to accept postal savings deposits. No person may at the same time have more than one account either at the same office or at different offices. The account of a married woman is free from any control or interference by her husband. Postoffice employees are forbidden to disclose to any person except the depositor the amount of any deposits.

A person may deposit any number of dollars, and at any time, until the balance to his credit amounts to $2,500, exclusive of accumulated interest.

A person desiring to open a postal savings account should apply at the postoffice, where full instructions will be given. If for any good reason an intending depositor cannot apply at the postoffice a representative may be sent, who will be instructed how to proceed. A person residing at a postoffice not authorized to accept postal savings deposits may open an account at a depository office by mail, through his local postmaster, who will give full instructions on application.

After a postal savings account has been opened deposits may be made either in person, by a representative, by money order, or by registered mail if the money-order service is not available.

Postal savings deposits are acknowledged by postal savings certificates which are made out in the name of the depositor and serve as receipts. These certificates are not negotiable or transferable. If certificates are lost, stolen, or destroyed, new certificates may be issued.

A depositor may at any time withdraw all or any part of his postal savings deposits, upon demand, from the postoffice where the deposits were made. Withdrawals may be made in person, through a representative, or by mail.

Postal savings certificates bear simple interest at the rate of 2 per cent. a year. Interest begins on the first day of the month following the month in which the certificate is issued and becomes due and payable at the expiration of each full year from the day interest begins as long as the principal remains on deposit. No interest will be paid for a fraction of a year.

Amounts less than $1 may be saved by purchasing postal savings stamps at 10 cents each. A postal savings card with ten savings stamps affixed will be accepted as a deposit of $1 either in opening a postal savings account or in adding to an existing account, or it may be redeemed in cash. Postal savings cards will be furnished free of cost.

A depositor may exchange the whole or a part of his deposits for registered or coupon United States postal savings bonds, bearing 2½ per cent. interest, issued in denominations of $20, $100, and $500. When bonds are issued in exchange for postal savings deposits the balance to the credit of the depositor is reduced accordingly, and he may make further deposits until his account reaches $2,500. A circular on postal savings bonds may be had at any depository postoffice.

OWNERSHIP OF TIMBER

Joseph E. Davies as Commissioner of Corporations in 1914 reported that sixteen holders own 47,800,000 acres of timber land or nearly ten times the land area of New Jersey. Mr. Davies also reported that 1,694 timber owners hold in fee over one-twentieth of the land area of the entire United States from the Canadian to the Mexican border. These 1,694 holders own 105,600,000 acres. "The Department of Agriculture," said Mr. Hampton, spokesman for the Farmers' National Council, "reports that about the year 1880 the best quality of white pine lumber commonly retailed throughout the west for $15 to $20 per thousand feet while in February, 1920, the farmers in Kansas paid $70 per thousand feet for white pine framing, and for better yellow finishing lumber for house construction they pay $147.50. Silo stock cost them $185. The Department reports that apparently the average farm unit uses about two thousand board feet a year, and to catch up with postponed construction much more is needed. In 1911 Commissioner of Corporations Smith in his report on the Lumber Industry stated that back in 1880 at least three-fourths of the timber now standing was publicly owned. Now about four-fifths of it is privately owned, the great bulk of it having passed to private hands through enormous railroad, canal and wagon-road grants by the Federal Government, direct Government sales of unlimited quantities at $1.25 per acre, and certain public land laws. He further reported that the Southern Pacific Railroad had 4,318,000 acres of timber lands, in southern California, and western Oregon, and with the Union Pacific, which controls it, millions of acres elsewhere. The Northern Pacific then held 3,017,000 acres of timber land and millions more of non-timber land."

Commissioner Davies also stated that of 82,500,000 acres granted to three western railroads in the sixties, the railroads still retained 40 per cent. in 1910. The lumber situation, Mr. Hampton claims, is a further indication of the tremendous cost to the American people of permitting private ownership of natural resources such as timber lands. "It is the bitterest irony," says the spokesman for the farmers, "that the railroads which received grants from the Federal and State governments of 155,000,000 acres of land should this year have received a guarantee of six per cent. on their capitalization, and they are also as owners of these valuable timber lands being permitted by the Government to charge such unconscionably high prices for timber which the farmers need to continue farming. The live stock raising and dairying interests, according to the Department of Agriculture, are hardest hit by high lumber prices, while they also are very heavily burdened by the tremendous increase in freight and express rates."

Arbitration is the alternative of war. It will never be more than an unattainable ideal to those who are unwilling or unable to put up a fight.

THE QUESTION OF "BOOZE"

Although no one believes that the opinion from the Attorney-General's office that liquor must not be sold on board American vessels—even on the high seas—will ruin American shipping, the opinion is but an incident of the kind of paternalism which prevents shipping under the American flag receiving the co-operation of investors. No one need be afraid to book passage on an American vessel lest he be deprived of a drink, because the Volstead Law has not stopped drinking on land. Anyone with the price can buy the hard stuff to his heart's content and the ruination of his stomach, although light, healthful drinks are under the ban in America. If the minions of the law are unable to enforce prohibition on land, they certainly will not be able to do so afloat. However, legislation of this nature—which tends to make Americans ridiculous—indirectly prejudices American commerce, for it belittles Americans in the eyes of foreigners, and when foreign trade languishes, shipping cannot be expected to thrive. Several boats have been fitted out for the sole purpose of carrying thirsty Americans to the Bahamas and Cuba during the season. Judging by what one sees in every city of this continent today, the owners of such boats need have no fear that the recent ruling will interfere with the open sale of booze on board.—Nauticus, New York.

U. S. ARMY CASUALTIES

Final figures on army casualties in the world war are contained in the annual report of Surgeon-General Ireland, made public, showing 34,249 killed and 224,089 wounded.

Of every 1,000 men sent to France 110 were admitted to hospitals as the result of battle casualties, the report says, and nearly seven men out of every 1,000 died as the result of wounds. Infantry losses were heaviest, 215.6 out of every 1,000 men of that arm being wounded and 12.77 killed. The signal corps was next with 52.22 wounded and 3.13 killed per thousand. No American soldier lost both arms and both legs, or both legs or both arms and one other extremity. Eleven lost both legs at the thigh; one both legs at the knee; nine both legs below the knee; one both feet, and three one arm above the elbow with one leg at the thigh. More than 4,400 lost a part of one or more extremities; sixty-six lost the sight of both eyes; forty-four lost the partial sight of both eyes and 644 lost one eye, while many contracted incurable nervous derangements known as "shell shock."

To say that the creator is greater than the created is well enough as a generalization, but we should be careful not to use that saying in justification of conditions the tendencies of which are in their nature uncontrollable. For instance, we should not say that the creator of a fire in a powder magazine is greater than the thing actually created, i. e., the explosion that follows as a natural sequence. So, in industrial affairs a body of free and intelligent men may easily enough create a condition of affairs that will inevitably reduce them to a state of helplessness.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Contributed by American Federation of Labor

State Arms Strike-breakers

The indictment of the steel trust by the inter-church world movement has been duplicated in a report issued by Denver church men on the recent street car strike in that city which resulted in the death of several persons and the injury of more than 100 others.

The investigators represent the religious forces of the community and include Protestant, Catholic and Jew.

It is shown that strike breakers were furnished rifles and ammunition that is the property of the State and that General Superintendent West of the company "expressed amazement that there should be any question as to the authorization for supplying the State rifles and equipment to the strike-breakers."

"As documentary evidence of the accu racy of his statement," sa s the report, "he showed us a commuication from the adjutant general which states plainly that 50 rifles and 1,200 rounds of ammunition were furnished to the company on August 7 at the governor's request."

Despite the poisoned publicity of the company and newspapers, the church men state that the union's officials did not inflame the carmen to strike rather than accept wage reductions.

The report says "none could gather an impression of the facts from the accounts as published in the daily press."

This poisoned publicity of the company and its allies is treated at length in the report. It is shown that there was no "Bolshevist element" in the union and not a particle of evidence has been found to support this and similar charges.

In listing the methods used in this poisoned publicity, the report says:

"Another common and equally unfair method of campaign is to represent that labor has fallen under the vicious influence of radical agitators. Sober, home-loving and law-abiding working men whose patriotism cannot be questioned, and whose hatred of every form of anarchy and lawlessness is deepseated, both in their ancestry and their whole education and training, are recklessly and wickedly charged with harboring sentiments which the men repudiate and they are not influenced by outside agitators who exist only in the imagination of their calumniators. This particular kind of misrepresentation is now a feature of every industrial controversy and the tramway strike in Denver is no exception."

In reply to the company's claim that its strike-breakers were peaceful, the report says:

"They certainly acted very different from the same strike breakers a day or two later at the East Side barns, when, without having received any injuries whatever, and under the protection of barn doors, the Denver police and the American Legion, they fired on a curious crowd of men, women and children and endangered the lives of hundreds of people in their homes, on their verandas, in their front yards, or walking peacefully and legitimately on the streets."

"Economic Blockade" Boycott's New Name

"Economic blockade" is the diplomatic term used by the League of Nations' Assembly to describe the old-fashioned boycott of organized labor.

A sub-committee of the Assembly, now in session at Geneva, Switzerland, has recommended that the "economic blockade" be used against members of the League breaking the covenant.

The Assembly consists of representatives of the 41 nations which have subscribed to the League's covenant, or agreement. The Council of the League, which is limited to the representatives of nine nations—in practice eight, as the United States is not included—has held previous meetings.

The decisions of the Assembly are tentative. To date Austria is the only enemy country that has been admitted to the League. Bulgaria has applied for admission, but this is opposed by Roumania and Jugo-Slavia on the ground that the applicant has not fulfilled treaty obligations. Argentina has withdrawn because of the Assembly's rejection of proposals which included provision for the admission of all countries and a rearrangement of the manner in which members to the important Council shall be elected.

The Assembly has appointed a committee to study the question of disarmament. The United States has been invited to appoint a representative to sit with the committee "in a consultative capacity." The invitation states that the function of the committee is only advisory and that the United States will not be bound by the report.

The members of the Assembly have no illusions about a sudden general disarmament. Senator Henri La Fontaine of Belgium, winner of the Nobel peace prize, is quoted as follows:

"I must tell the peoples frankly that the time for disarmament has not yet come. In the covenant clause dealing with dis armament it is expressly stated that armaments shall be reduced. But in order that this reduction may begin, the world must acquire new ideas about war. War must be stopped. The world must first acquire the idea that war is a crime."

Economist Favors Three Shifts

The economic necessity for a 12 hour day no longer exists and now is the time, with a surplus of labor, for steel plants to change to three shifts, said Horace B. Drury, economist, before a meeting of engineers and technicians at New York.

Mr. Drury said the expense of changing from a 12 hour to an eight hour shift would be slight, and that if the entire steel industry—blast furnaces, steel works and rolling mills—went on three shifts without any increase in efficiency, it could not add more than 3 per cent. to the total cost of making the finished steel product.

World's Workers

The Canadian government has ordered that immigrants must possess $250 instead of $50, as formerly, in view of unemployment conditions. The order applies to mechanics, artisans and laborers. It states that "a considerable amount of unemployment prevails in parts of Canada and the prospects for employment are not likely to improve during the next six months."

The Dominion Steel Corporation of Sydney, Nova Scotia, has closed its mills because of an ultimatum of 125 railroad employes of the company, who have been asking for two years for the scale awarded all other railroaders in Canada, following the McAdoo award in the United States. The company replied by closing its mills and throwing 4,000 employes on the streets.

Fifteen million men, women and children of all social and economic classifications, representing every nationality in Europe, are fighting for passage to the United States, according to reports submitted by 17 steamship companies to U. S. Commissioner of Immigration Wallis. Every seaport city and town along the western and southern coasts of Europe, it is stated, is crowded with persons who, in their eagerness to leave for this country, have sold everything they possessed. It is stated that 5,000,000 Germans and Austrians are ready to sail as soon as these countries make peace with the United States.

At a recent meeting of the Italian Council of Ministers it was decided to advance the sum of 20,000,000 lire to the National Institute for Credit to Co-operatives. The institute is the medium through which co-operative associations and other bodies for distributing supplies at low cost to consumers are financed. The present high prices of foodstuffs and competitive purchases by food speculators have seriously straitened the capacity of the institute and of the co-operative associations to find adequate funds for buying and carrying large stocks of goods for later retail distribution to consumers. The advance of 20,000,000 lire authorized by the Government will place the co-operatives in an easier position with respect to the credit needed to carry on their operations and give their members the benefit of lower prices than they could otherwise obtain.

Reynolds's Newspaper, one of Britain's leading liberal publications, calls on the public not to be fooled by present price reductions. "The battle between the public and the profiteer is far from over," says this paper. "There is no commodity which is needed by people in which the most stupendous fortunes have [illegible] made in the last few years, in every country. Prices have been [illegible] in spite of increased crops and [illegible] that not because [illegible] deliberately held up supplies, paying [illegible] on the money with which they bought them rather than let them come on to a market that might be called open. Now they [illegible] the basket of interest rates [illegible] and they are letting the stocks loose a little. But do not imagine that they have abandoned control of the markets. They have not. They are waiting for the moment when they will be able to force [illegible]"

PAINLESS PARKER AND HIS PRICES

I BELIEVE every man should make a decent profit on whatever he does. I get a decent profit on my dental work, but still my prices were kept down during the war and are still down today. The E. R. Parker System did it.

No man without a reliable system can get much of anywhere. The reason dental prices outside of mine are high is because the old way of practicing dentistry is costly. If a dentist has only a patient or two a day, he has to charge a heavy price. My associates and I treat a hundred thousand a year, many of them sailors. Even if we made an average net profit of a dollar each we would be doing pretty well. But how many other dentists are there who are satisfied with a dollar profit on each patient?

Following is a list of Parker offices. A sailor can go to any of them and have his teeth examined free.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

Word was received that the 3700-ton freighter "West Himrod" had been returned to the Shipping Board by Struthers & Dixon. The company had been operating the vessel in the trans-pacific freight service.

The United States Senate has adopted a resolution postponing until January 31, 1921, the date the joint congressional committee, which investigated sites for naval bases on the Pacific Coast, must make its report to Congress.

Four destroyers have been launched this month by the Union plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation for the United States Government. The crafts represent an expenditure of $1,700,000 each.

Proposals to sell about $6,000,000 worth of surplus shipping materials on the Pacific Coast on behalf of the Shipping Board, will be received up to January 14, it was announced by the board.

The two 14,500-ton deadweight freighters, "Manulani" and "Manukai," building for the Matson Navigation Company for their service to the Hawaiian Islands out of here will be ready for service within two months, according to W. P. Roth, vice-president and general manager of the company. The crafts are under construction at the Moore shipyards.

With the sailing of the freighter "Wanelona" from Belgium next month, a direct service will be inauagurated by the Admiral Line between the Pacific Coast and North Europe ports, L. L. Bates of the foreign freight department stated. The company plans to have three vessels in this service calling at San Francisco. Negotiations are now under way by the company for securing the freighter "Osaqumsick," making the third craft, for the new run.

With the arrival of the "President" of the Admiral Line at Seattle the end of this month, the vessel will be placed on drydock and undergo extensive overhauling. The vessel will be on the drydock for thirty days, during which time she will be cleaned, overhauled and repainted. Hugh H. Brittain, assistant general passenger agent of the line, stated that the "Admiral Watson" will be used to handle part of the passenger and freight business of the "President" during her drydocking. Brittain stated that there is a tremendous amount of freight of all kinds booked for delivery to southern ports from the Northwest and that the company has had its hands full in taking care of the shipments.

Nearly a quarter of a million dollars bonus was the Christmas present distributed by the Moore Shipbuilding Company to all salaried employes except those who participate in bonuses for the construction of ships or receive extra pay for overtime work. The Christmas gift represented a desire on the part of George A. Armes, president and general manager; Robert S. Moore, chairman of the board of directors, and Joseph A. Moore, vice-president and general superintendent, who worked out the plan of distribution, to show the appreciation of the company of services rendered during a year when more work has been done and at greater tension than during any similar period in the past.

San Francisco will witness the entrance of more than 2000 Filipinos and Portuguese through this port from the Hawaiian Islands in the first six months of next year, according to passengers arriving here on the Matson Steamship Company's liner "Matsonia." There are at present over 2000 of these nationalities awaiting transportation at the principal ports of Hawaii. These expected arrivals are not as a whole waiting for steerage accommodations, many of them desiring to travel first class. They are the workers and their families who have quit their jobs at the island sugar plantations after amassing in many instances, comfortable fortunes from their work on the plantations and the enormous bonuses paid during the past three years.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Lighthouses to the Secretary of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, just received, reveals that aids to navigation, including lighthouses, lightships, buoys and beacons, maintained by the United States Lighthouse Service, now number 16,304, an increase of 256 during the last year. Although there have been sixty additional aids to navigation installed along the coasts of Alaska during the last year, the report states that the great extent of these waters are still insufficiently marked. There are 535 aids to navigation along the coasts of Alaska, of which 206 are lighted. H. C. Rhodes, superintendent of lighthouses for this district, left during the week on an inspection tour of the south.

Word has been received that the Standard Oil tanker "Atlas," which went ashore on Snow Pass, near Wrangel Passage, the early part of last week, has been pulled from the ledge and has arrived at Ketchikan in tow of the U. S. S. Cedar. Advices from the North to the local offices of the company stated that a considerable amount of the vessel's cargo of gasoline had to be pumped overboard before the craft could be moved. The "Atlas," in command of Captain J. C. Sullivan, with eight officers and a crew of thirty men, sailed from San Francisco with oil and gasoline shipments for Port Angeles and Ketchikan. Three of the craft's tanks are reported to be damaged by the mishap and it is expected that temporary repairs will have to be made to the vessel at the Alaskan port before she is able to leave port.

Damage estimated at $1,000,000 was caused by fire which burned for two hours on the amusement pier at Venice, Cal., on Dec. 21, before it was brought under control by the combined efforts of the Venice Fire Department and two companies from Los Angeles just as it was threatening to destroy the city. Five firemen were injured when a wall of the Ocean Inn collapsed while they were fighting the flames. One of these, Arthur Harlan, was reported to be in a critical condition next day. Firemen estimated the loss at "more than a million," stating the estimate was based on reports from owners. The pier, known to hundreds of visitors to Southern California, was completely destroyed, except for the charred ends of piles protruding from the water and a mass of timbers from more than a score of concessions which had fallen on top of the piles.

W. H. Sellander, general passenger agent of the Matson Navigation Company, announced that the steamer "Enterprise," now virtually being rebuilt at the Moore Shipyards, will be ready for service on February 15. The craft has been subjected to the most extensive reconditioning ever performed on a vessel on the Pacific Coast. All the machinery of the vessel was removed, staterooms torn out and new equipment installed. A feature of the work performed was the installation of a suite of de luxe cabins. The vessel will have accommodations for twenty-two first-class passengers and will vie with the finest liners of the company's fleet operating from here to the Hawaiian Islands. The motor-ship "Annie Johnson" of the same concern is now receiving new engines, after being completely rebuilt, and will be ready to load cargo for Mahukona the end of the month. The vessel will again be operated as a motor-ship.

After being the storm center of a long series of disputes over ownership, the Russian steamer "Rogday" has been sold at San Francisco and will be placed in service on the Great Lakes. The vessel was formerly in the service of the Russian government under the old regime and was held in this port for more than a year to save it from being seized by the Soviet government. The new owners of the "Rogday" are the Pere Marquette Steamship Company of Milwaukee. She will be changed to American register and probably rechristened before being put in commission on the great lakes. While no announcement was made of the purchase price, it is understood that the figures were close to $160,000. The "Rogday" is 2300 tons. After being overhauled at the Union plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, the vessel will probably carry a cargo to the St. Lawrence River through the Panama Canal before going to the Great Lakes. Several months ago the United States District Court here decided that the vessel was the property of the old Russian government. Several attempts were made by representatives of the Soviet government here to seize the ship while in this harbor.

The trial trip on San Francisco bay of the 9400-ton freighter "Narcissus," on Dec. 21, makes a total of fifty-seven vessels constructed by the Moore Shipbuilding Company for the United States Shipping Board, according to Gordon Glidden, since the entrance of this country into the war. The above include freighters and tankers, most of the craft being built under contract with the United States Shipping Board. The "Narcissus," built for the Government, is reported to be laid up in Southampton bay. In the event that the craft is directed to tie up at the river anchorage, she will be the fourth craft constructed by the Moore company which has been tied up at Southampton bay immediately following her completion for the account of the Shipping Board. Completion of the "Narcissus" marked the final contract of the Moore company with the Shipping Board. Construction of the fifty-seven steamers represent an aggregate of approximately 500,000 gross tons and a financial expenditure of nearly $100,000,000. The company will shortly start work, according to Glidden, on three tankers of 76,000 barrels capacity for the Shipping Board, and it is reported that the concern is now in receipt of contracts for the building of several fuel carriers for the Standard and Union Oil companies.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1920

SEA POWER AND SEAMEN

Sir Karl Knudsen, at present staying with Lady Knudsen in the St. Francis Hotel, at San Francisco, is a member and representative of an influential Norwegian shipping concern in London. Sir Karl was made a Knight of the British Empire for his war time activities and he is said to be one of the few foreign-born British subjects to receive this honor.

All of this, however, would not be of sufficient importance to receive attention in these columns were it not for the fact that our distinguished visitor is quoted in the daily press as follows:

America's merchant marine will become a white elephant. Norway, with comparatively inexpensive labor and cheap tonnage, is unable to make a profit with her shipping under the present freight rates. How can America, whose expenses are much above those of Norway, expect to support a paying merchant marine? Norway retains her shipping to cut the cost of her imports. America has no such reason, with her fabulous resources as yet practically untouched. Altruistically speaking, America's merchant marine, also, means the bankruptcy of her debtors. America will be a shipping country when she becomes an importer of grain and raw materials for her industrial millions. That time will surely come. Already we have witnessed this country importing corn from Argentina. It is not a question of ability to build and run ships. Shipping is the means of covering the excess value of imports over that of exports. With the United States the position is exactly the reverse.

Aside from the questionable propriety of Sir Karl's remarks it must be conceded that he raises several rather delicate points relating to ships and shipping.

At the very outset exception must be taken to our visitor's all too hasty summary of current history.

It is fatuous to say: "America will be a shipping country," etc. As a matter of fact, America has already been all that and more.

The growth and development of the American merchant marine prior to the Civil War was without parallel in the history of commerce, our national maritime spirit was equal to every demand; American ships and American seamen were known in every port of the world; the United States was the mistress of the seas, operating her peerless clipper ships with her own men and carrying more than 90 per cent. of all national exports and imports in her own bottoms.

Then, as the result of the Civil War, the change from wood to iron, and our unpreparedness for that change, either economically or politically, our country's proud merchant marine in a short period shrunk to only a shadow of her former self.

Yet, the events of the past few years have clearly proved that when national necessity sounded the clarion call to the sea, our country, notwithstanding fifty dormant years, still had the necessary maritime genius and an abundance of the natural resources to found and maintain a great merchant marine.

Sir Karl Knudsen seems to conveniently forget certain very pertinent facts.

History is emphatic in her teachings that no nation can ever hope to retain and successfully operate a great merchant marine without a virile national maritime spirit back of it, because a native seafaring population to man the ships has ever been as essential to national welfare as the ownership of vessels, for in the final analysis sea power is in the seamen. Since Hiram voyaged for King Solomon's building materials: since the Phœnicians made the Mediterranean their own and passed the Pillars of Hercules to get tin from Cornwall; since Athens made the same sea a Grecian lake, only to yield supremacy to Carthage and see it pass in turn to Rome, to Venice, to Spain and finally to England, navies—and sea power—have been the progeny of merchant marine; and it is so still. Today the question of "who" has the sea power is decidedly a leading one. Things are somewhat unsettled in matters maritime. But unless all signs deceive, Americans have learned a few valuable lessons of late. The first lesson is the realization that the United States has from time to time been outwitted by British diplomacy and British statesmanship.

The passage of the Seamen's Bill of 1915 was the first clear-cut declaration of a new American shipping policy. It was a declaration to the effect that America was no longer content with trailing behind while others set the pace.

The second real lesson was driven home in August, 1914, when all the warring nations laid hands on their merchant ships to be used thereafter for military purposes. The carriers upon which Americans had depended for off-shore commerce were suddenly no longer available.

Just now there is a lot of idle tonnage because the inevitable economic depression following each great war has hit all lands. But this is merely a passing phase of after-the-war history.

So far, America has more than held her own in international competition. For, Sir Karl Knudsen to the contrary notwithstanding, inexpensive labor is not the vital and all-important factor which determines success or failure. If that were so, China, the land of cheap labor, should have acquired all merchant shipping long before this.

The JOURNAL dislikes to be impolite to so distinguished a visitor as Sir Karl, but it does appear as if his "white elephant" prediction is merely a case where the wish is father to the thought!

Compulsory arbitration is compulsory servitude.

WOMEN AS WAGE EARNERS

Aside from holding down the well-established occupation of stewardess, the female of the species has not made much progress in supplanting the male worker aboard ship.

But things are quite different ashore.

Women in the ratio of about 1 to every 9 men are now employed in American industries formerly employing chiefly or exclusively men. About 69,000 women are employed by 1,324 big firms in the iron, steel and other metal industries; lumber, leather, stone, clay and chemical manufacture: the making of automobiles, electrical apparatus, agricultural implements, musical instruments, optical goods, rubber goods, motion picture and photographic apparatus, in shipbuilding and on the railroads and street cars, repair shops, etc. In other words, there are 35% more women in these industries now than there were before the war, and their position in industry appears to be a permanent one.

These rather startling figures, made public by the Woman's Bureau of the United States' Department of Labor, are emphasized by the National Women's Trade Union League as indicating women's increased importance in the labor movement. Large numbers, it was pointed out at Washington headquarters of the League, have been added to the membership of the various international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, over 12,000 being found on the rolls of the International Association of Machinists, many thousands in the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, the organized timber workers, foundry employes (other than molders), brick and clay workers, oil-field, gas-well and refinery workers and others.

Truly, the last few years have brought the members of the weaker (?) sex to the front as wage earners. But considering the wholesale killing of the male during a world war lasting more than four years, there is really nothing surprising about it all. To the contrary, it is a very natural sequence of events which have created havoc the world over. Moreover, if, as currently reported, the surplus female population of the world has risen from about 5,000,000 to 15,000,000 since the beginning of the world war, then the woman worker in industry has doubtless come to stay.

An interesting settlement "out of court" was made at San Francisco during the past week. One of the crew of the S. S. "Diablo" contracted typhoid fever while employed on that vessel in 1919. He was left behind at Singapore and upon his return to San Francisco consulted Attorney H. W. Hutton, who commenced an action for damages. A number of depositions were taken, and the case set for trial for December 22. On December 21 the defendants paid for all lost time and attorney fees and the case was settled without a trial. This seems to indicate that typhoid fever is now generally accepted as an occupational disease for which the vessel is more or less at fault. But regardless of the tendency in that direction this case is somewhat of an innovation in damage recovery and Attorney Hutton deserves credit for the results achieved.

CO-OPERATION IN THE WEST.

The Pacific Co-operative League opened its first Rochdale store on May 1, 1917, at Rodeo, California. This store started with 32 members. At the present time the League has 35 co-operative stores in operation and is preparing to operate twenty more within a few months. In the year 1918, but one store was started. In 1919, six stores were started. 22 were started in the year 1920.

The present membership of the Pacific Co-operative League is 13,390. The average loan capital invested by these members in their stores is $50.

Many of these stores, although young, have already paid dividends. Among them are Tucson, Arizona, and Atascadero, Fortuna, Richmond and Rodeo, Cal.

The Rochdale co-operative movement progresses slowly but surely. It is the one certain way out from so-called wage slavery. It is a variety of organized self-help that can and will flourish in perfect harmony with the trade-union movement.

Population follows economic needs. The United States Forest Service, District of California, has partially completed an economic survey of the entire State, with a view to determining where the State's population will reside fifty years from now. The purpose of this study is to determine the proper spots for reforestation or conservation of present lumber supply. Many interesting deductions have already resulted, which indicate, among other things, that while California at present imports a large part of its lumber from States to the north, there is within the State a lumber supply adequate for many decades if transportation could be furnished. It is an old story. Proper transportation facilities by land and sea will solve many seemingly insurmountable difficulties and entirely eliminate many a problem.

Oil is supplanting coal. More than 50 per cent. of the vessels flying the American flag are now burning oil instead of coal, according to statistics cited by Ernest H. Peabody, when speaking before the twenty-eighth dinner of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers at New York. He further stated that the full value of burning oil had not been appreciated by the owners and designers, who are still following out conservative lines, he said, because they have been content with the advantages and savings that oil burning apparatus has accomplished without realizing the full possibilities of burning fuel oil instead of coal.

The twenty-fourth annual convention of the International Seamen's Union of America will meet at Philadelphia, Pa., on Monday, January 10, with President Andrew Furuseth in the chair. More than 100,000 American seafarers will be represented at said convention by about 75 delegates, elected by secret ballot in the respective district unions. Some very interesting personal reminiscences on the first convention of the I. S. U. of A. will be found in our Atlantic Department. Old, as well as new members, will enjoy reading it.

FIVE WEEKS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Final Chapter of Personal Narrative by President Schlesinger of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union

I met Dr. Goldfarb at midnight.

Max Goldfarb came to America from Russia as an emissary of the "Bund" about two years before the World War. For a time he was busy with an agitation tour on behalf of the "Bund" and the Jewish Socialist Federation of America. Later he became the labor editor of the "Forward" of New York. When the Russian revolution broke out in February, 1917, Goldfarb felt that his place was with his old comrades in Russia. He was among the first Russian revolutionists who were streaming back in those days to their old homeland from which they had been banished by the despotism of old Russia.

He left New York in June, 1917, and was not heard from in a long time. Then rumors began reaching his friends in New York that he was playing an important role in the stormy struggles that the revolution was waging during that period. Still no one seemed to know exactly in whose ranks he fought. Still later, definite news reached New York that he became Mayor of the city of Berditchev, in the Ukraine. Then came the bloody story about the terrible pogrom which took place in that city, and Goldfarb's friends became apprehensive as to whether he succeeded in saving himself from that massacre.

A number of months passed, and finally authentic news reached New York that Dr. Goldfarb was in Moscow, occupying a prominent post in the Soviet regime. Subsequently, it became definitely known that Goldfarb, former orator, lecturer and labor editor of the "Forward" of New York, had become the chief of all the officers' training schools of the Red Army, and that his was the task of supplying the Bolshevist Army with all its officers.

It was this "new" Goldfarb that I went to see—the man who is known today in Moscow not under the pseudonym of Dr. Goldfarb, but under that true Russian surname of Petrovsky.

As I opened the gate of his house, I began to realize quite palpably that I was about to meet a person of importance in the Soviet world. A Red Guard, gun on shoulder, stopped me to ask for a pass. After I had shown him my Foreign Office passport, he at once led me to Petrovsky's door. He knew already that a "tovarish Schlesinger" was to appear at this hour, and this fore-knowledge saved me a number of formalities which I would have had to go through otherwise. I rang the bell. The door opened and there, before me, stood the straight, strong figure of Max Goldfarb, clad in military uniform. He led me into a well-furnished reception room and seated me in a soft comfortable chair. He rang for tea and cigarettes and assured me that though only with paper tips, his cigarettes were equal to the best American makes.

We began to converse, breaking into each other's talk. He wanted to learn from me news of America, and I was anxious to get all information about Russia from him. After a short tussle, he came out the victor, and I had to relate to him in detail about all and everybody he knew in New York. It was only after I replied rapidly and with precision to all his questions that I began to ask him about Russia, her present situation, her hopes and prospects. I put to him, at first, the following question:

"We, in America, know more or less what Soviet Russia is passing through at present; but the news that we are getting comes invariably through professional newspapermen, through people who come to you, look at you and tell us forthwith their impressions and opinions about you. I would like to hear from you, an "inside" person, one who is in the midst of the fight, how Russia appears to you today. How do you regard this Russian struggle which has set the world by its ears for the last three years?"

Goldfarb-Petrovsky thought for a minute.

"I shall not find it difficult," he said after a while, "to answer this question to you, a leader of labor, in the language of unions and strikes. Russia is on strike against the entire capitalist world. She has struck for the loftiest of ideals, for no less a goal than the introduction of Socialism. Our strike committee is the present government of Russia, the Soviet regime. The Red Army is our picket line which guards our big factory, Russia, that it might not be captured by those scab-agents and gunmen, Kolchak, Denikine, Youdenitch, Wrangel and the rest."

"And how do your strikers feel these days?" I asked him. "After all, scab agents and strong-arm men are not the only dangers a strike is confronted with. Hunger is the greatest enemy to the morale of even the most devoted union people. How does this plague of starvation affect your masses?"

"Yes, we go hungry," he said thoughtfully, "but I assure you that we are, nevertheless, full of courage and determination. We are revolutionists, and we have no greater joy than the fight we are in. Add thereto the feeling of pride that we are opposing our breasts to the

DIED

Wm. Lawrence, No. 1716, a native of Germany, age 46. Died at Seattle, Wash., December 13, 1920.

The coastwise lumber-carrying trade has shown a decided slump during the past sixty days and as a result several vessels are scheduled to be laid up. It is predicted that unless there is an improvement in the lumber offerings a number of other coastwise lumber carriers will be taken out of service.

Arthur A. Isbell, Pacific Coast manager for the Radio Corporation of America, announced during the week that arrangements have been made for installing wireless equipment on four new tugs of the Red Stack Company and two 12,500-ton tankers under construction at the Southwestern Shipbuilding Company for the Union Oil Company.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

THE FIRST CONVENTION

Official announcement has already been made through the JOURNAL that the various delegations to the twenty-fourth annual convention of the INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S UNION OF AMERICA will assemble at Philadelphia, Pa., beginning Monday, January 10, 1921, and continue in session there until the business bringing them together has been disposed of.

The present proximity of the approaching general assembly of organized seamen, now less than a month away, the recent renewal, on my own part, of old, long-cherished and time-honored associations among our original membership, and the dominant position, power, prestige and encouraging prospects now enjoyed and wielded by the International Seamen's Union among the most progressive and influential labor organizations of the world, all inspire me with an uncontrollable desire to emerge for one enthusiastic moment from the irksome seclusion of my private sanctum, and revive for the general instruction and entertainment of our present membership my personal recollections of the first convention.

As a representative of the Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union at that time, I had the honor and good fortune of active participation in the councils of that historic assembly, and as the resident agent of the Seamen's Union in New York, I enjoyed the further privilege and honorable distinction of making the preliminary arrangements for the sitting of the visiting delegates in the Convention Hall and welcoming them to our coast in the name of the District Organization.

The first official convention of the I. S. U. of A. assembled in the old Seamen's Hall, 51 South street, New York City, on Monday morning, December 4, 1895.

Eleven fully accredited delegates responded to the roll call and were formally seated. The Sailors' Union of the Pacific was represented (of course) by Andrew Furuseth; the Seamen's Union of British Columbia was represented by Mr. George Noonan of Vancouver; the Columbia River fishermen were represented by a certain brother Carlson, who began his name, however, with a K.

The Lake delegation mustered five members, led by Thomas J. Elderkin, first president of the International Union, and Daniel J. Robertson, who was elected first and only vice president before the close of the convention.

The Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union was represented by Comrades F. H. Buryson; [illegible] general secretary, Oscar Benninger, of Fort Hamilton, N. Y., and yours fraternally, of nowhere in particular.

Of such material was formed the humble but sincere personnel of that historic gathering five and twenty years ago.

The International Seamen's Union of America had been founded three years previously, at New Orleans, in 1892. In that year the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor was held in the Crescent City, and taking very advantage of the opportunity thus afforded to accomplish the fulfilment of his life-long dream, Mr. Furuseth, during the sessions of the main convention, assembled about him the little, poverty-stricken group of seamen delegates representing the Great Lakes and the Atlantic and Gulf, and outlined to them his long-cherished scheme of the universal organization of seamen; federated and affiliated Union, as wide as the world is round, granting national autonomy to all affiliated Unions, and exchanging and extending mutual privileges, benefits and protection to bona fide members by general agreement throughout the world. Such were the brief, fundamental and abiding principles upon which the foundation of the International Seamen's Union of America was laid.

It was a radically bold and daring, almost a fanatically absurd doctrine for the down-trodden seamen of that period to proclaim, much less strive to uphold, but so the die was cast and so it had to remain. Upon that uncompromising basis the International Seamen's Union was conceived, and upon that basis was its irrevocable charter granted by the A. F. of L.

Before that provisional assembly adjourned a general course had been charted, and the new organization was formally launched upon the boisterous and uncertain seas of Maritime Reform, sailing under a new charter, a new declaration and by-laws, and a new constitution, with Thomas J. Elderkin at the helm as first president.

During the three years intervening between 1892 and 1895 no convention had been held, simply because the affiliated Unions were all too poor to afford the expense. During that interval all the business of the International was carried on by correspondence between members of the Executive Board, which at that time included Mr. Walter MacArthur, of San Francisco, and the leading officers in the various districts.

In 1895, however, it was generally felt that a formal meeting of representatives was imperative to enable the affiliated unions to cope with the existing situation. The conditions existing on the Atlantic were especially distressing, while our legislative program, then the main issue, was in a precarious state. Mr. Furuseth had been working like a Trojan in Washington for three years trying to secure the much-needed reforms, but the powerful lobbies of the big shipping combines were not easily overthrown. Moreover, it was as hard to arouse public opinion to Maritime necessities as to awaken ancient mummies from the dead. During the previous winter, however, Congress had made a slight concession in the seamen's favor by enacting one brief section of the seven pending Maguire Bills into law. This was the act of February 18, 1895, since known as the Maguire Act—as it was the only one of the original Bills introduced by Judge Maguire that was ever enacted under his name. This Act granted immunity to seamen in the coastwise trade from imprisonment for desertion and exempted the clothing of all seamen from attachment for debt.

Simple and unpretentious as these two clauses may appear to those unfamiliar with the ancient doctrines of Maritime Law, their effect upon the spirits and morale of coasting seamen was instantaneous and astounding.

Seamen long harassed and humbled by the crimps under the old law and the lawless system which it engendered in shipping transactions, began to assert their independence, and join the Union in large numbers to defend their new found rights. Even the old Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union began to puff out and forge ahead under the new stimulus, like a ship that has lain long wallowing in the doldrums, suddenly careening to the impetus of a fresh breeze.

Therefore it was felt that we could afford to hold a convention on the Atlantic coast; that coast being most in need of attention, would likewise have been too poor to have sent delegates had the Convention been held in either of the other districts.

Such, in brief, were the conditions which brought the first annual Convention of the Affiliated Seamen's Unions to New York.

Compared with modern arrangements, our preparations for the Convention were simple and modest in the extreme. There were no press agents to herald the coming of our delegates from the distant West, or from the chain of lakes.

No public officials or civic bodies turned out to greet them at the railway station with welcoming orations, or escort them in circumstantial procession to the spacious entrance of a gilded and far-famed hostelry.

No: "Not as the Conqueror comes; they the true-hearted came,
Not with the roll of the fife and drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame."

They came, accomplished and adjourned, in simplicity and silence, while New York scarcely realized their presence.

The old members of the Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union were a modest, simple-minded lot, not accustomed to magnificent extravagance or vulgar display.

But as poor as they were, they were determined to show their appreciation of the I. S. U. of A., and if they could not afford to seat the Convention sumptuously, they could at least receive the delegates with appreciation and decency. Fully a month prior to the date of the convention diligent arrangements for the respectable housing of the Big Event were begun on the homeward-bound scale. Every article of furniture or equipment in the old Union Hall was dragged out and inspected, and everything that failed to stand the test of a most critical and remorseless inspection was promptly condemned and junked, to be replaced by new and more ornate and up-to-date fittings.

The walls were given two elaborate coats of paint, and since we could not afford suitable covering for the large floor which we occupied, that was carefully scrubbed and treated to two coats of special anti-fouling composition likewise. Our old-fashioned slush lamps were discarded and up-to-date electric lights were installed instead. For the previous three years the Union Hall had been encumbered with a rough array of sixteen lumbering old spruce benches, tarnished only by the traces of time, and smoothed by the constant impact of dingy dungarees. These primitive structures constituted the entire seating arrangement of our stuffy old auditorium. They were each about sixteen feet long and a most unsightly and cumbersome nuisance.

But the near approach of a convention suddenly inspired our members with a keen appreciation of the poverty stricken appearance of their squalid surroundings, and animated them with an entirely new sense of class dignity and self-respect. The lumbering old benches were at once pounced upon and quickly reduced to useful kindling wood, and replaced by neat rows of trim, neatly varnished, hardwood chairs. Then a handsome rolltop desk and an eight-day clock were proudly installed, as well as a new and very ornate stove (the former one having been completely demolished during a vigorous argument between two very strenuous and emphatic disputants). Of course, the newly painted and smoothly varnished deck was held sacred, so the "boys" invested $12 in a dozen bright nickel-plated cuspidors to protect it from precarious defilement. Barney Harkins contributed a big thrum mat, which was spread in front of the door, beneath a warning sign which read: "Clean your mortal soles." Finally a big flagstaff was set out on the front of the building, properly secured with regulation toppinglift and spar guys, and a big American flag was flung defiantly to the free air of South street; then we were ready for the convention.

With all these transformations the Sailors' Union Hall became a model of scrupulous cleanliness and elegant simplicity. No clipper's poop was ever more thoroughly or conscientiously gone over, or more proudly and jealously guarded for homeward-bound inspection.

Old "Windy" Bill Wilson voiced the suppressed sentiment of all concerned when, returning from a hard pine coasting trip, he made a critical survey of our renovated and remodeled quarters for the first time. "Thar, by gum," exclaimed "Old Windy," glancing approvingly around the Hall, "it looks ez though sumbuddy lived 'ere now! Come on down, fellers, an' hev suthing,' I'm gonna blow the new outfit!"

Since those eventful days at the beginning of its world renowned history, The International Seamen's Union of America has held its annual conventions in most of the notable seaboard cities along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and along the chain of lakes as well. Important State and municipal societies and officials throughout the Union have eagerly bid against each other for the privilege of entertaining our delegates; governors, mayors, civic bodies and public functionaries of high degree have all jostled each other in their haste to bid them welcome, and extend to them the best that unbounded hospitality could provide or local opulence suggest; but never has a convention been seated amid more cleanly, cheerful and congenial surroundings, nor have our delegates ever been welcomed to any port with such genuine, heartfelt, unaffected and unassuming sincerity as that extended to them by the true-hearted and devoted members of the old A. C. S. U. at New York on December 4, 1895.

And the best evidence of that sincerity consisted in the fact that not one dollar of expense was charged to the Union for all the new improvements to our humble premises above described. All of those expenses were defrayed by voluntary contributions collected among the members of the branch.

And when it is remembered that wages at that time were about $16 per month in the coastwise trade, minus $5 shipping fees and other ruinous extortions, while employment was as fleeting and precarious as March sunshine, the meaning of such a corporate sacrifice to the contributors can be better appreciated.

On the Saturday preceding the opening date of the convention, Mr. Buryeson arrived from Boston, about an hour before Mr. Furuseth blew in from Washington. These two comrades had never before met, and their first personal encounter was attended by an amusing affair which has left the long laugh on Buryeson ever since, and emphasizes the danger of an over-wrought imagination coming suddenly into unexpected contact with the personal object of its pictured vagaries.

After paying his respects to the office, Mr. Buryeson went out to seek the attentions of a barber and Mr. Furuseth arrived during his absence.

Leaving his hand luggage in the office, Mr. Furuseth also thought of some personal matter of his own requiring attention, and was just on the point of leaving the hall, when he nearly collided with Buryeson, who was about to enter the door. Now, knowing Mr. Furuseth by reputation only, and having never set eyes on him before, Buryeson explained afterward, he had always pictured him as a big, boisterous, wild-eyed and bewhiskered old Viking, with the manners of a gorilla and a voice like a tempest.

With this self-conceived mental image constantly before him, Mr. Buryeson was entirely unprepared to greet the tall, mild-mannered, smooth-faced gentleman before him as the renowned seamen's leader and inveterate, anti-crimping advocate, Andrew Furuseth. The abruptness of the unexpected encounter had aroused his inward suspicions instead of his personal curiosity.

Hastily divining that Brother Furuseth must be either a crimp, a jackal or a scab, prowling around the hall with evil intent, Mr. Buryeson hailed him according to his imaginary colors. "Hey! What in hell are you doing around here!" he demanded belligerently, squaring himself off in the doorway to block the passage. "My name's Andrew Furuseth," came the stupifying but quiet explanation, with an amused smile. Buryeson was so completely taken aback and dumbfounded that it took him some time to recover sufficiently from his confusion to apologize and offer to shake hands.

The Lake delegation arrived on Sunday, as also did Mr. Karlson of the Columbia River Fishermen's Union. George Noonan of Vancouver was the last to report. He dropped off a box car at the Jersey City freight yards early Monday morning and was over to South street in plenty of time to respond to the opening roll call.

Mr. Noonan was in his way one of the most interesting delegates that ever attended a convention of the I. S. U. of A.

Before leaving Vancouver, Mr. Noonan had received from his organization $165 to cover his traveling expenses to New York and return. Packing the fare money safely in his soul and body lashing, Brother Noonan hooked a passage across the Sound to the mainland, then jumped an eastbound freight for New York. But he had kept his own counsel so completely that no one in the organization ever dreamed of his intention to "beat it" across the continent; least of all myself, who had never heard of him before.

Nearly a week before the date set for opening the convention, however, Mr. Noonan sent me a wire from a place called Metot's Mills, asking when the opening session was to be held. I didn't know Metot, or his mills either, neither did the telegraph operator. Neither of us knew either that Delegate Noonan was on his way through Canada until, after we had searched laboriously together all over the United States for those far-famed mills, that another official finally located them for us in the Dominion of Canada.

I was thereby able to reply to Comrade Noonan's telegram, which relieved my mind of a most oppressive burden, for in the fervency of my zeal and all-consuming enthusiasm, I could not conceive of any greater misfortune, or ill-omen circumstance that might possibly befall than a vacant seat at the opening of our first convention.

But Mr. Noonan arrived on time, as I have already stated—so why worry?

After introducing himself, Brother Noonan handed me an envelope containing $165 appropriated by his Union for traveling expenses, and a shooting iron he had packed along to defend it with. The shooting iron was a Smith and Wesson's "six," and I took both articles as trustee and deposited them in Joe Bloom's safe until wanted.

After the convention Mr. Noonan retrieved his traveling expenses and gun and, hopping another panhandle "Pullman," blithely "beat it" back to the Pacific and dear old Vancouver. After making his official report to his organization as a delegate to the first convention of the I. S. U. of A., Mr. Noonan returned $165, representing his "traveling expenses," to the Union treasury and then sat down and wrote me a nice chummy letter, recounting his experiences and safe arrival at his home joint. That was how a Union sailor attended the convention of his craft a quarter of a century ago.

The luck of odd numbers always seems to prevail in human progress, and as a figurative mascot the number 11 appears to predominate in religious and industrial reform movements. The Sailors' Union of the Pacific was founded by 11 devoted members meeting on an historic lumber pile; and 11 sailors attended the first convention of the I. S. U. of A. Our Lord had 11 faithful followers left after old Iscariot had kicked the bucket out from under him-

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(By Laurence Todd)

From ambush, the reactionaries controlling the Senate of the United States have fired their first shot in this session against organized labor.

Shortly after noon on Thursday, Dec. 16, when there were only half a dozen senators on the floor, and the calendar of minor bills was being hastily run through by the reading clerk, the Senate passed the Poindexter industrial slavery enactment. This bill makes it a felony, punishable by ten or fifteen years imprisonment, and by fine of $10,000 or $15,000 maximum, for anyone to seek to tie up any railroad by a strike.

Of course it hides behind a pretense of merely protecting interstate commerce, and especially railroad traffic, from stoppage due to a deliberate agitation or conspiracy aimed at stopping traffic. But its actual terms cover any and every word, act or agreement which would create a railroad strike. It reduces the 2,000,000 railroad employes to the legal status of slaves, powerless to better their economic condition by concerted action to test their strength against the strength of organized and oppressive capital represented by the railroad executives. In all the history of American legislation there has been no such backward plunge of the supposedly sane upper branch of the national legislature as was the unopposed and automatic passage of this insult and challenge to the whole labor movement of the country.

Senator La Follette was in conference in his office when the trick was turned. He had had no warning that it was on the program. Poindexter himself had told P. J. McNamara of the locomotive firemen, earlier in the week, that he had no idea of bringing the bill up this month. When notified by his secretary that the slavery bill had been slipped through without even a word of discussion or a record vote, La Follette hurried to the Senate floor and served notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which it had passed. Later in the day Senator Johnson of California, hearing of the affair, gave notice that he also was interested in the bill and the motion to reconsider its passage. It was reported that when the bill was being read Senator Kenyon walked into the chamber, and that someone immediately stepped in front of him, led him aside for a private talk, and so prevented him from knowing what was going on.

By good chance, the executives of the sixteen standard railroad labor organizations were meeting here on Friday, and they had a chance to exchange views at once upon the situation in Congress and in the labor movement which this act of war on the part of the Senate junkers had created. A conference was held in the morning, and another in the evening, at which were present, by invitation, the group of liberals or progressives in the Senate and House who were willing to permit the public to see them associating with trade unionists. This is a small group. Being a friend of organized labor in Washington is not so fashionable as it was six or eight years ago.

At the first conference, held in the headquarters of the International Association of Machinists, it was pointed out that although the Senate would probably be forced by La Follette and his friends to reverse its action on Poindexter's bill, yet the bill had been reported out by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce after long hearings, and in deliberate defiance of the organized workers of the nation. It was further pointed out that with so few liberals in Congress, some effective means must be devised to watch for future tricks like this one. A legislative information bureau serving the whole progressive movement of labor, farmers and decent citizens must be established and supported. In close touch with this information service must be the labor and farmer organizations and the liberal groups in Senate and House. They must have frequent conferences on all measures pending before Congress, and must so organize their co-operative effort that henceforth the reactionaries would be kept on the defensive.

What will come of these conferences will depend upon the Senate and House groups rather than upon the labor representatives. Labor is just now so much aroused that there can be no doubt that it will find a way to fight the labor-crushing propaganda, and to strike for reasonable wages and conditions quite regardless of any anti-strike laws which may be enacted. But if the legislators will really co-operate with them, there is almost no limit to the change in the situation at the capitol which will result.

On the same day that it enacted the anti-strike bill, the Senate passed a resolution appropriating $5,000 for counsel for the Calder Committee which has been investigating the reasons for the high price of coal, and has recommended that the Government take over the coal mines unless the operators stop gouging the public as they now are doing. Senator Kenyon explained that the committee wants to extend to the rest of the country the same sort of inquiry as has been made by the State legislative committee in New York, in the matter of the building industry. The Senate wants to know whether there is a nation-wide building combine which is preventing the building of more houses.

This gave King of Utah a chance to remark that what we want is a more drastic anti-trust law, so that combinations in restraint of trade can be punished. Otherwise the "demand for nationalization and socialization of our basic industries, and indeed all of our great industries," would be rapidly developed to the point where the system of private competition might be endangered. King said he was faithful to the competitive system of society, but it must be saved by anti-trust laws.

The Congressional record, by the way, shows that Smoot and King were taking part in discussion of bills that came up just before the Poindexter bill was brought up, and that King, Smoot and Chamberlain of Oregon debated the bill that immediately followed it. Presumably they approved the anti-strike bill, as they did not object.

Senator Warren of Wyoming, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, distinguished himself on Friday by attacking the Maternity Nursing bill, which the women's organizations throughout the country forced the Democratic and Republican presidential and congressional nominees to endorse. The establishment of Federal aid for States in the furnishing of nursing care to expectant mothers in the rural districts and in cities, as provided in this measure, would cost less than $500,000 at the start, and would possibly cost a matter of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year when fully developed. It would save the lives of scores of thousands of mothers and babies each year. It would cost less than any one of a dozen present expenditures on livestock, coal, and other commercial and agricultural items in the Federal budget.

Warren, however, knew what he was about. He knew that the Children's Bureau and the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labor had been a force for decency in government, and for humanity in the relations and responsibilities of the Government to ordinary folks. He showed that the Children's Bureau had grown bigger and more expensive, and predicted that it would be the same with this new bureau. He complained that the Treasury was "sicker than at any time since Civil War days," and said that there was no justification for "starting out in a new direction."

The ghastly humor of this plea is realized when it is remembered that Warren has been one of the most active big army men, and has log-rolled millions of dollars of military appropriations for an almost desert location in Wyoming, Fort Russell, with great political advantage to Warren. And there is a Congessional investigating committee's report in existence which declares that Warren's cattle company fenced in a great tract of public land in Wyoming. Today Warren pleads as a watchdog of the public purse, against the only bit of humane legislation offered in this session.

Ten Senators who are not of the Warren-Smoot-King variety have sent a letter to the State Department, demanding that it protest to the British government against the latter's refusal to permit the American Commission on Irish Conditions to send a delegation to Ireland to get the facts. Frank P. Walsh is counsel for the Commission, and it is understood here that it was because Walsh proposed to ask the same courtesy of the British government that all the visitors were barred. The British authorities do not like Frank Walsh. They fear that he may stir up Irish labor to a general strike, or some other dramatic expression of their will.

THE AVERAGE MAN'S TIME.

A French statistician has been dabbling with figures to find out just what man does with that precious thing called time. He concludes that at the age of fifty years the average man has slept 6000 days, worked 6500, walked 800, amused himself 4000, spent 1500 eating, and was ill 500 days.

A disposition on the part of a trade union to talk with its employers is no sign of its inability to adopt other means of securing justice if need be. And, per contra, the trade union that denies or ignores the wisdom of conferring whenever possible generally displays little stomach for sterner methods when forced to meet them.

ATLANTIC COAST AND GULF

self, and Joseph's dream of fortune was the sun and moon and 11 stars.

Punctually at the time appointed, the first convention of the I. S. U. of A. was called to order by President Elderkin; all responded to the roll call, and the committee on credentials found all present fully accredited and entitled to seats. Thus throughout that fateful and portentious week in the history of the Seamen's Unions, we sat together in earnest and solemn conclave, a zealous and devoted little band of hard-faced, hard-fighting, true hearted class liberators seeking to establish among seamen the Godgiven rights of "Life, Liberty and Happiness" decreed by the founders of this Great Republic as the fundamental prerogatives of humankind.

We were, compartively speaking, a youthful bunch, and Mr. Karlsen of the Columbia Fishermen's Union, a long, rangy, serious-looking comrade, wearing full beard, appeared like a patriarchal daddy in our midst, though in years he was probably no older than several of the others present.

Mr. Furuseth, the daddy of the movement, was still under 40, as also was Mr. Buryeson, the presiding sage and Holy Moses of the Atlantic Coast at that time. Mr. Elderkin was about the same age as his two principal colleagues.

The others ranged in age from 25 to 35 years; as for myself, I was just on the verge of my thirties, a conceited novice, facing the dismal future with an optimistic, devil may-care grin of blissful ignorance.

Owing to our paucity of numbers, the committees were, perforce, so appointed as to overlap each other considerably; thus we often had to do double duty, not to mention "overtime." But this constituted no hardship among a group of zealots whose only pleasure was to serve.

Mr. Buryeson and myself were originally appointed on the Legislative Committee, of which Mr. Furuseth was chairman, but we likewise served more or less on every other committee in the house before the end of the convention.

I was likewise appointed a committee of one to feed the press, and if the reporters failed to assimilate much news it was not for lack of provender.

Thus we worked harmoniously together, ever conscientiously and in fraternal accord, constantly exchanging and co-ordinating our individual opinions and personal views on predominating subjects for the common good.

On Saturday evening, December 9, the convention adjourned sine die, but without naming or announcing the place of its next meeting, thus leaving the future of the I. S. U. of A. entirely in the hands of Fate and fortune in so far as the directing influence of future conventions was to guide it.

On Sunday following the convention an informal meeting of delegates was held, at which we discussed freely and unreservedly many complex problems then confronting the organized Seamen, and pledged ourselves anew to the formal oath of original membership:

"I solemnly promise to regard every member in good standing as a brother; to defend his life, reputation or interests."

And by the fulfilment of that sacred promise we of today must firmly abide, for upon it the hope of our Union is founded, and upon the enduring solidity of that primal foundation alone can it hope to survive and perpetuate its basic doctrines of the Brotherhood of the Sea.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

Some of the 20 American companies that have adopted the three-shift system in the last few years have made no great change in operating methods, he said, and accordingly costs are somewhat higher than before the change. But others have taken advantage of the new system to cut out unnecessary positions, strive for greater output and to require greater care on the part of the men. The result has been that costs are but little higher than under the old plan. Some of the largest companies, the speaker said, have increased their labor force only 30 to 35 per cent. in putting on the extra shift.

Mr. Drury added that the human and civic values involved in changing from 12 to eight hours' work are more important than the financial and operating difficulties of the change.

rest of the world, riding from victory to victory—a feeling of pride that is mightier than the worst pangs of hunger,—and you will understand why our army is so steel-bound, so unconquerable."

"But, tell me, Petrovsky, don't you think that there is a good deal of flowery talk in all that?" I asked. "I know too well from personal experience the great importance of enthusiasm and of a high morale in times of conflict; but I know too the destructive influence of hunger. You don't mean to assert that your masses are different in this respect from any other masses?"

"It is, nevertheless, a fact," he replied. "The will of our masses has not been bent by hunger. You may call it a miracle, if you will, but this miracle is happening before our own eyes. You have seen how we have waged this strike for three years, and the firmness of our strikers has not been impaired in the least. Each new enemy of ours receives a greater drubbing than the preceding one. Soon you will hear we have destroyed Wrangel."

"How do your masses conceive this fight that you are conducting?" I asked again. "How do they explain this ceaseless war upon so many fronts?"

"They understand all," he replied. "We have won our power with the slogan of 'world peace' upon our lips. The world was drunk with warlust at that time, and paid no heed to our cry. Our masses know this; they know that the old world has forced the war upon us, and that we are defending our revolution upon barricades and will outlast our enemies."

Our conversation turned to the relations between the workers of other lands and the workers of Russia. They know in Russia of the efforts of organized labor the world over for the lifting of the Russian blockade and for the cessation of aiding the counter-revolutionary bands attacking at present the Soviet regime. They lay a great deal of hope upon these efforts, too. Our talk lasted several hours, and before I left him, Goldfarb-Petrovsky led me through all the rooms of his residence. Such wonderfully decorated walls, such deep, luxurious rugs on the floors, such rich draperies and furniture, I have never seen even in my wildest imagination. In this palace there must have resided before the Revolution either a Moscow multi-millionaire or a relative of the Tzar. It is well worth while to make a trip to Moscow to get a look at the bathroom in that palace alone.

Goldfarb was alloted this residence by the Government on account of the importance of his post. He has his offices there, too, where some of the most important business in connection with the Red Army is being transacted. This business requires a big staff and numerous suites for assistants, visitors, etc. I went back to my hotel in a government carriage.

Labor News

The Minnesota State Minimum Wage Commission has ordered a wage increase of from $11 to $12 a week for women workers.

If the Government regulates the coal industry, Senator Cummins is in favor of making coal strikes illegal, according to an interview in a Washington newspaper. After stating that he will urge Congress to handcuff miners to their jobs, Senator Cummins declared that "labor will get a square deal from the new Congress."

F. Whitaker, a member of the United Mine Workers of America, was elected judge of a county in Kentucky while serving six months in jail for contempt of court. He defeated Judge Stephen Combs, who sentenced him to jail. The successful candidate directed his campaign from behind prison bars and was supported by miners and other trade unionists. When he was elected he was pardoned by Governor Morrow. The new official has announcel that he will not commission gun men as deputy sheriffs.

The notorious "Citizens' Committee" has been revived in Tampa, Florida, and these business men are attempting to intimidate cigar makers on strike. This committee has committed acts of violence against workers in previous strikes. In the present instance the local press suggested that officers of the cigar makers be told to "get out of town." This gang of business men recently called on Sol Sontheimer, representative of the International Cigar Makers' Union, and notified him that he would be held responsible for any disorders in connection with the strike. The unionists asked for proof of disorders, but this was not forthcoming.

Postmaster General Burleson has ordered that postal organizations or postal employes can not solicit advertisements for their publications or periodicals. He says business men have responded to these solicitations because they have believed that their interests "would be protected by gaining the good will of these organizations" and not because of benefit from the advertisements. The bona fide postal trade unions have always conducted their magazines on a business basis, and sold advertising space as every other legitimate publication. It is still permissible, however, for a business man on some dark night to slip under the office door of one of these publications copy for an advertisement with the request that same be published.

Decreased employment in November, as compared with October, is indicated in a monthly report just issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The largest decreases in employment were in textile industries. There was a falling off of 17 per cent. in men's ready-made clothing establishments, 12.5 per cent. in woolen plants, 12.1 per cent. in hosiery and underwear plants. There was a decrease of 11.2 per cent. in the number employed in the automobile industry, 7.5 per cent. in the leather industry, 5.4 per cent. in the boot and shoe establishments, 4.8 per cent. in the cotton manufacturing, 4.8 per cent. in silk manufacturing, 3.2 per cent. in the iron and steel industry, 2.8 per cent. in the paper industry, 2.7 per cent. in cotton clothing.

Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

SAN FRANCISCO

The Anglo-California Trust Company has established at 101 Market Street a complete-service bank. This advanced business ideal is attained through the purchase of the Seaboard National Bank and its expansion for broader duties.

Here—the only bank located between First Street, Battery and the Bay, one of San Francisco's most thriving commercial districts—are found facilities for every banking need—savings, commercial, trust, securities and safe deposit departments.

Seafaring men will find here a full-functioning bank especially helpful to them. It is conveniently located for the quick transacting of their business upon arrival in the port of San Francisco. It takes scrupulous care of their savings and other banking requirements whenever they may call upon it from the far-flung ports of the world. Why not start a savings or commercial account to-day?

An appropriation of $1,678,648 has been asked of Congress by the Department of Justice to meet deficiencies expected to arise during the current fiscal year. Attorney-General Palmer said $500,000 of this sum would be needed "for the detection and prosecution of crime."

Chambers of commerce in Ohio, are discussing a one-man system or government which has been recommended by a board of experts employed by the joint committee of the legislature. The proposed change provides for election by the people of three State executive officers—governor, lieutenant-governor and auditor. Other administrative officers are to be appointed by the governor without confirmation by the Senate.

Last year's work by the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, in Alaska included geologic surveys of 2,700 square miles, topographic surveys of 2,300 square miles, and a continuation of stream-gaging work in southeastern Alaska in co-operation with the Forest Service, with special reference to the possible use of water power. This last-named work should be of benefit not only to mining but to the wood-pulp and other industries.

Investigation by experts, it is claimed, shows that the Government has lost $1,000,000,000 in delinquent taxes. Thousands of individuals and corporations were so generous to themselves in stating their income that the Government is now checking up. It is stated some corporations scaled down their payments as much as $1,000,000 under the amount actually due the Government. In many instances individuals fell short of making correct statements, and thereby saved themselves amounts ranging from $100,000 to $500,000. It is stated that delinquents will be called upon to pay.

The retail butcher is the most brazen profiteer in the history of piracy, declared Everett C. Brown, president of the national live stock exchange in an address to live stock producers at Chicago. "Wholesale prices of meat are now down to prewar level, while retail prices, instead of declining, remain at the peak they reached during the stress of war," said the speaker. Mr. Brown favored the formation of an organization which would enable consumers to place their finger on the profiteers in meat production, which he declared at this time were the retail butchers.

In a report on the eyesight of school children Commissioner of Education Claxton calls attention to a statement by the provost marshal general that 10 per cent. of all the rejections of drafted men in the great war were on account of eye defects. This does not include a large number of men with eye defects of a minor character or with eye defects corrected by glasses who were classed in the limited service group. "This is merely a confirmation in a dramatic way of the facts that have been revealed by examination of the eyes of millions of school children in all parts of the civilized world during the past generation," says the report. It is estimated that 20 per cent. of all children in the schools are in need of treatment for eye defects.

Domestic and Naval

The Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, reports 118 sailing, steam, gas and unrigged vessels of 213,957 gross tons built in the United States and officially numbered during the month of November, 1920.

The Jananese steamship "Shosho Maru No. 2," 754 tons gross, 431 net, carries about 1,000 tons dead weight, built in 1918, and owned by the Kabushiki Kaisha Shosho Yoko, Tokio, is reported sold for about Yen 22 per ton dead weight.

Cable advices from the U. S. Commercial Attaché at Tokyo state that the amalgamation of Japanese shipping companies proposed by the Government is meeting with opposition on the part of the large companies, and it is believed that such a consolidation is quite unlikely for some time, if ever.

The former Norddeutscher Lloyd liner "Berlin," which has been acquired from the British Government by the White Star Line, will be renamed the "Arabic" and placed in the New York-Mediterranean service, for which she was built. Since the Armistice she has been running in the P. & O. service.

The Tokyo police, according to a local newspaper, have discovered an agency for shipping stowaways to the United States. The agency is said to have been working in collusion with petty officers of freighters, who allowed stowaways aboard, disguised as members of the crew, for a fee of Yen 180 ($91).

Orders for the withdrawal from service of sixteen vessels, aggregating 87,000 deadweight tons, to be tied up at Baltimore, Norfolk, Seattle and in the Gulf, were issued by the Shipping Board on December 21. The craft range from 3400 deadweight tons to 9500 deadweight tons. Sale of three wooden harbor tugs for a total of $123,500 and six wooden hulls for a total of $363,500 was announced by the board on the same day.

A report by engineers of the International Mercantile Marine Lines, received here by T. H. Larke, Pacific Coast representative of the company, shows that the tonnage of the steamer "Olympic" has been increased eighty tons due to changing the vessel from a coal to oil burner. The speed of the vessels has also been increased one knot per hour over her former running time by the change. The "Olympic" is the largest British steamer afloat.

Fire which caused property damage estimated at between $3,000,000 and $10,000,000, when the Jahncke Drydock and Shipbuilding Company's plant near New Orleans, was gutted, was brought under control late yesterday. Several workmen, reported missing are believed to have been killed while more than a dozen are reported seriously injured. Reports to the police placed the probable loss of life at between three and ten. Damage to the Jahncke shipbuilding plant alone will exceed $2,000,000, officials of the corporation stated today. United States shipping board steamers the "Saranta," "Dilwyn" and "John Adams" were reported totally destroyed by the fire, which spread to ships anchored near the Jahncke wharf. Five other ships sustained slight damage. The fire is believed to have been caused by red hot rivets falling into oil in the stagnant river.

News from Abroad

Steel plates from Belgium have arrived in South Africa for the first time since the war.

All nitre companies in Chile, except those controlled by North Americans, have joined the Nitrate Producers Association, which is said to represent 98 per cent. of the total production of nitrate in Chile. The North American firms, says a dispatch from Valparaiso, are largely purchasers of nitrate, rather than producers, and are said to have been prevented entering the association by the laws of the United States.

The coal agreement between Great Britain and France, under which the latter country received 45 per cent. of the British coal exports, has been cancelled. The agreement with Italy remains in force, but the allotments for South America are abrogated. The German press has recently been complaining that France is now so well stocked with coal as to be able to offer to sell the coal delivered by Germany under the Treaty back to Germany at an exorbitant price.

A Norwegian shipowner who had placed an order with a Danish yard for a steamer costing kr. 3,900,000 sought to cancel the contract owing to the unfavorable prospects for shipping. The builders objecting, recourse was had to arbitration and the decision of the arbitrators was that there existed nothing whatever to justify concellation "of the contract." The Norwegian shipower had to pay the costs of the arbitration, plus an indemnity to the builders.

During the month of October the total amount of coal mined in Australia was 464,000 tons, of which 172,000 tons were exported overseas as cargo, 45,200 tons supplied to overseas vessels for bunkers, and the remainder consumed in Australia. Freight rates to Iquique for sailing vessels are 106s., on steamships to Callao 125s, on sailing vessels to Manila $12 U. S. gold, and by steamship 32 yen. Some vessels have been detained for two months on account of Government restrictions of coal exports.

A report from Paris says that in view of the necessity of increasing the purchases of American coal in order to constitute winter stocks, the rebate on such coal is increased to 150 francs per ton up to January 1, 1921. This rebate will be paid on all coal discharged in French ports between November 1 and December 31, 1920. This rebate consists of a refund to importers of American coal. On the other hand, a surtax is applied to French, Belgian and Saar coal so as to compensate for the rebate given on American and British coal.

The assembly of the League of Nations, consisting of representatives of the two score nations that are members of the league, have recommended the establishment of a permanent international court of justice. The organization as planned, lacks the obligatory appearance of both parties to a dispute and provides no penalty for noncompliance with the decision of the court. The plan will now go to the different countries for ratification. If 22, or a majority of the members of the league, approve it before the next meeting of the assembly, the judges will be elected and the court will come into existence in September.

"Who was it said that it takes two to make a quarrel?" asked Mrs. Gabb. "I don't know," growled Mr. Gabb. "But I'll bet a million dollars he wasn't a married man."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Are you having any trouble keeping your hired man satisfied with his job?" "No," replied Mr. Cobbles. "I worked on his superstition." "How so?" "I paid a fortune teller $5 to tell him seven-dollar-a-day jobs in town would soon be as scarce as hen's teeth."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

AMERICAN-JAPANESE RELATIONS

Plain Talks Versus Diplomatic Messages

A distinguished Japanese journalist who recently visited San Francisco said:

"The impression prevails in Japan that the Japanese in California during the past year's campaign on exclusion have been badly treated. I find that it is not so; that they have nowhere been interfered with or hindered in business, or insulted or abused personally. It has been difficult for the Japanese people to understand that an actual campaign for rigorous exclusion of Japanese could be conducted in such perfect good temper and without boycott or other offensive measures against the Japanese."

The article on this page will bear out that very contention and incidentally presents certain remedial suggestions which, if carried into effect, are likely to have far-reaching results.

The Oriental immigration problem has always been distinctively a California problem.

For seventy years the working people of California have striven for legislation prohibiting the further immigration of Oriental laborers. Certain internationalists and intellectuals of various shades have expressed doubts about the wisdom of adopting an exclusion policy. But men and women whose occupations have brought them into direct contact with the Chinese or Japanese have never had but one opinion as to the significance of their admission. Whether in the mining camps of the early fifties, in the factories and workshops of the later periods of industrial development, or as tillers of the soil, we find the same bitter complaints of the evils of such competition.

If Californians had been able to legislate on the subject, the question would have been settled long before the Chinese had arrived in sufficient numbers to constitute a serious problem. However, under our system of government Congress claims exclusive right to regulate immigration. Hence it was necessary to convince the nation before the desired relief could be obtained. And this was not an easy task. The small minority within the State whose interests were opposed to restrictive legislation were greatly reinforced by the merchants of older states, who feared to jeopardize the rich trade of the Orient, and by idealists who were loath to recognize the world-old significance of race in the application of their theories of political and social equality. Only by the persistent and sustained effort of the working people of California, first the State and then the Nation have been converted to the policy of Chinese exclusion.

No sooner had the Chinese immigration problem been disposed of to the general satisfaction of Californians when the menace of unrestricted Japanese immigration came to the front with startling rapidity.

For 250 years prior to the arrival of Commodore Perry, Japan had excluded all foreigners (barbarians) except a small number of Dutch traders who were, however, restricted to a small island.

Commodore Perry anchored off Uraga on July 7, 1853. Five years later the first official treaty between the United States and Japan was signed to take effect on July 4, 1859.

Only 33 years later, in 1892, the American Federation of Labor Convention adopted resolutions demanding extension of the Chinese Exclusion Act so as to include Japanese. And fifteen years after this demand was made, i. e., in 1907, a so-called Gentlemen's Agreement was arrived at through diplomatic negotiations whereby the Japanese Government agreed to keep laborers from America.

But the Gentlemen's Agreement has not been a solution of the problem. In California the demand for the exclusion of Japanese is more general and more pronounced today than ever before. Of course, the organized working people have been in the vanguard of this movement just as they led in the struggle for Chinese exclusion. Leadership in this respect does not mean hurling the most bricks. To the contrary, Labor in California has severely frowned upon violent anti-Japanese manifestations. And, although this is not generally known, it is a fact nevertheless that California trade-unionists have at all times made earnest efforts to eliminate the harsh and unpleasant features incident to such a campaign of propaganda.

There are many concrete examples to bear out this contention. But just one will suffice to illustrate the point. Two Japanese presented credentials as fraternal delegates to the annual convention of the California State Federation of Labor which met at Santa Rosa in 1915. The report of the Committee on Credentials, made to said convention, clearly sets forth California Labor's attitude toward the workers in Japan, and is quoted herewith:

"There have been submitted to the Committee on Credentials two credentials for fraternal delegates from the Laborers' Friendly Society of Tokio, Japan, namely, B. Suzuki and S. Yoshimatsu.

"Your Committee has given careful consideration to the question of seating these men. It has been said that the Laborers' Friendly Society is not a bona fide trade-union. It has also been alleged that these two men are not representing the working people of Japan, but are rather agents of the Japanese Government in a well-planned campaign to weaken our immigration laws, etc.

"Your Committee, however, has not been furnished with any evidence to substantiate the allegations referred to. We, therefore, recommend that both be seated without vote.

"We have arrived at this conclusion (1) because the seating of these delegates in no way affects our attitude or modifies our demand for the exclusion of all Asiatic laborers from our shores; (2) because we believe it is in accordance with the spirit of International Unionism and to our own advantage to aid and encourage the working people in Japan to organize and better their conditions."

The Committee's report was adopted and the delegates seated. During the second day's session Delegate Suzuki read a carefully prepared paper to the convention. His address was made a part of the printed proceedings.

The same convention which extended every courtesy to the Japanese delegates did not fail, however, to reiterate the old demand for an extension of the Chinese Exclusion Act so as to bar all Asiatics. United States Senator Phelan took occasion shortly after the adjournment of said covention to write to the California State Federation of Labor intimating "that the Federation had been trapped into a false position."

This was denied in a circular letter sent out by the Executive Council of the Federation, reading, in part, as follows:

"No, Senator, we have not modified our views upon the Japanese menace. We fully realize the danger of the so-called 'Gentlemen's Agreement' and we are anxious to have enacted an exclusion law which will effectively and permanently bar all Japanese laborers from our shores.

"Our objection to the Japanese in California is not, as you so well know, based upon trivial or sentimental reasons. We object to them for economic reasons, we know Californians cannot compete with them and maintain an American standard of living. And we have been in hopes that our kind treatment of the two delegates from Japan, and our own efforts to have them understand fully and unequivocally that we have no grievance against the Japanese as long as they remain in Japan, might have a tendency to bring about a better understanding between the wage-workers of Japan and the wage-workers of America. If we have failed in this honest endeavor it will be no fault of ours. We have at least tried."

In labor circles there was considerable discussion upon the question throughout the year but when Suzuki returned from Japan a year later he was again seated in the convention with only a few dissenting votes. At that time (October, 1916) Delegate Suzuki extended a formal invitation to the convention to send a fraternal delegate to the fifth anniversary of the Laborers' Friendly Society in Japan, to be held the following spring in Tokio.

The invitation was referred to a committee and in due time the committee submitted the following report:

"Upon invitation of the Japanese Fraternal Delegate to send a representative to that country, your committee submits the following resolution and recommends its approval:

"Whereas, The organized labor movement of California and of America stands ever ready to assist the workers of every country, color and creed, to emancipate themselves from exploitation, and

"Whereas, It has been necessary at times for the working class of this country to protect their standard of living by favoring the exclusion of foreign competition, in the spirit alone of imperative necessity and self-protection, and

"Whereas, We have learned, with interest and gratification, that the workers of Japan are organizing into industrial unions for their own welfare; a movement we can endorse; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the California State Federation of Labor, that we give to Mr. Suzuki, the fraternal delegate from the Laborers' Friendly Society of Japan, our expression of goodwill and a message of hope and encouragement for a brighter future of the working class of his country; and be it further

"Resolved, That, in assuming this position of a greater friendship between the workers of the East and the West, we must continue our unswerving stand upon exclusion until such time as immigration will not prove a menace to our own unions, our working people and our standard of living; and be it further

"Resolved, That the question of sending a fraternal delegate from this body to the Labor Convention in Japan be referred to the Executive Council of this Federation, with the hope that a delegate can be selected to carry a message of goodwill and encouragement to the laboring class of Japan."

The report of the Committee was adopted.

In November of the same year Suzuki attended the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor which met at Baltimore. This convention was equally emphatic in defining the position of organized labor upon American-Japanese working class relations, by the unanimous adoption of the following:

"Resolved, By the American Federation of Labor in annual convention assembled at Baltimore, Md., that we note with extreme pleasure and satisfaction the fact that the working people of Japan are organizing into unions and federated under the Laborers' Friendly Society of Japan; that we bespeak for them and their movement all the success possible; that we recommend that the Executive Council continue its friendly office in an effort to be helpful to the organization of the workers of Japan in every way possible by correspondence, and that it send a message of fraternal greeting, goodwill and best wishes for the success of the movement to organize more thoroughly and practically the wage-workers of Japan to bring light in their work and their lives."

It had been hoped that the American Federation of Labor and the California State Federation of Labor would each send a fraternal delegate to the meeting in Japan but the international situation became more and more critical and finally resulted in America's entry in the war. That put an end to plans for developing a clearer understanding and promoting mutual goodwill between the workers in America and Japan.

Suzuki did not return as a fraternal delegate, but since his last visit the workers of Japan have been represented at two international labor conferences held under the auspices of the League of Nations, and in each instance the Japanese representative gave an excellent account of himself.

M. Masumoto, Japan's labor delegate to the International Labor Conference held in Washington, in 1919, was a man with the courage of his convictions. Addressing the conference on November 27, Masumoto characterized his government as an autocracy which is the enemy of social justice. Pointing to the Japanese flag, he declared that under it "there is a police regulation whose aim is to interfere with the organization of labor." Describing what he termed the danger of extending to the Government of Japan special treatment, Masumoto said the industrial workers of Japan were mostly women and children, and that their lives approached almost that of slavery.

A second international labor conference was held at Genoa, Italy, during June and July of 1920 to consider the problems of seamen. Just prior to said conference representatives of the world's seamen held an open meeting in Genoa for the purpose of comparing notes and, if possible, to agree upon a joint program for submission to the official international conference.

At both of these meetings the seafarers of Japan were represented by Ken Okasaki, an able, courageous and resourceful champion of those who go down to sea in ships.

It has been my good fortune to come in personal contact with all three of these Japanese labor representatives—Suzuki, Masumoto and Okasaki. And it is not stretching a point to assert that men of this type are truly a credit to the working people in Japan.

Through association with these three men, often under decidedly trying circumstances, it has become a fixed belief with me that American-Japanese relations can be adjusted on a basis entirely satisfactory to the working people in both nations. No claim is made that this can be done by professional diplomats. But a series of heart-to-heart talks between workers' representatives from America and Japan will accomplish wonders. In fact there will be scarcely any ground for disagreement after a perfectly frank exchange of views has taken place. Of course, there must be honesty of purpose and discussion without disguise.

Japanese and American diplomats have so beclouded the main issue that the average man who is not a member of the diplomats' union and hence not versed in the fine points of that game cannot possibly follow the play.

For years we have been told that the Japanese are peeved because of the anti-Japanese campaign in California. But is it reasonable to assume that any Japanese duly acquainted with the immigration policy of Australia and Canada can have any grievance against California's efforts to similarly protect herself?

Can it be possible that any considerable number of Japanese, outside of diplomatic circles, will seriously claim certain rights for their countrymen in California when these "rights" have been and are being denied by other countries closely allied with Japan?

Every well-informed Japanese knows that certain groups of workers in Japan have time after time protested against the importation of Chinese coolies. Is it not a perfectly natural corollary that the working people of the Island Empire, if duly informed, will not only understand but actually sympathize with the identical attitude of American workers?

Trained diplomats may answer "No." But here is one California trade-unionist who believes that the working people in Japan will give an entirely different reply.

To be sure, the case must be presented to them in its entirety and also in its true colors. As years go by this becomes more and more difficult because politicians and statesmen (so-called) are doing their utmost to make frank and manly discussions of the problem a virtual impossibility.

But it is not too late to start right now. The organized working people in some of the countries of Europe are no longer content with old diplomatic usages. They have insisted, and in several instances succeeded, in securing recognition for men from the ranks of labor. It was not a question of getting government jobs for labor officials but rather the driving of labor's viewpoint, labor's thought and language, into the exclusive set who are labeled "trained diplomats."

So here's hoping that responsible forces will soon be at work—

1. To bring about an intelligent appreciation throughout America of the economic need for the exclusion of Japanese.

2. To map out a plan, open and aboveboard, whereby it will be possible to reach a thorough understanding between the workers in Japan and the workers of America.

3. To cause the appointment of an experienced and thoroughly representative labor man for service (as an adviser) at each of the principal American embassies, but in particular at our embassy in Tokio.

—Written by Paul Scharrenberg for The Annals, the publication of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

NEGRO BOY HONORED.

In December, 1882, a black boy, seventeen years old, was trying to make his way back to his home and birthplace at Union, West Virginia, from Toledo, Ohio, where he had been a laborer on public works and in coal mines, but he decided to spend Christmas in Charleston. The chief reason that impelled him to stop at the latter town was because he ran out of funds at that point. Instead of waiting for a position, he took the first job which presented itself—that of dishwasher at the Hale House. On the princely wage of $2 a week he soon was enabled to proceed on his way. The boy who found means to make his way at seventeen has succeeded in making his way ever since. During the past year he was elected by the general conference at Des Moines, Iowa, by 569 votes out of a total of 734 votes cast, a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the highest honor that can come to a minister of that faith. On Sunday, May 23, 1920, Matthew Wesley Clair, former dishwasher at the Hale House, was consecrated to that high and holy office, and he is now performing the duties of that exalted station. That black boy who had been so signally honored was never a wild, reckless lad. He was born at Union, in Monroe County, West Virginia, October 21, 1865.

FINANCING THE I. W. W.

The National Erectors' Association—a combination of wealthy employers formed for the purpose of crushing union labor—is assisting in financing the I. W. W.

This is one of the most significant revelations in the mass of amazing testimony submitted to the New York Legislative Committee which is probing corrupt combines in the building industry.

The charge was made by a representative of labor. The books of the National Erectors' Association, which had been seized by the committee, revealed the fact and the secretary of the association, testifying under oath, confirmed the accuracy of the entry.

The leaders of organized labor have known for years that the majority of the active members of the I. W. W. and the "One Big Union" were the paid emissaries of employers who were willing to expend vast sums to disrupt and discredit legitimate labor organizations. As a rule these creatures are employes of some one of the numerous private detective agencies which flourish all over the country. They deceive many honest men. Occasionally they induce one of their dupes to commit an overt act and then the newspapers are filled with blood-curdling tales about plots to establish the "dictatorship of the proletariat."

The leaders of labor have frequently warned the members of their organizations concerning the activities of these scoundrels, but it has not always been possible to secure the evidence which would justify more drastic action. It has been even more difficult to convince the public that employers would go so far in their opposition to organized labor as to finance organizations which preach revolution by force of arms.

We admit the thing seems unthinkable, but the fact is there. The evidence to support the charge has come from the employers themselves.

At the same time and from the same source we are furnished with information concerning the kind of men who are willing to do this vile work.

Among the witnesses who appeared before the New York committee was a "Captain" Foster, chief of the "Intelligence Service" of the National Erectors' Association. That means he is the association's superintendent of detectives and "under-cover" men, or spies.

He admitted, before he finally refused to answer further questions, that he was an ex-convict, that he had been dishonorably discharged from the Army, and that he had severed his connection with the police force of Louisville, Ky., because of charges of dishonesty.

Shocking? Yes, but the most serious thing about the situation is that scores of men of the Foster type—"under-cover men" of the private detective agencies—are at this moment operating throughout the country preaching hatred of American institutions, urging the substitution of force for reason in the adjustment of industrial disputes and endeavoring to undermine the workers' faith in existing labor organizations.

Is your own union infested with these "under-cover men?"—Editorial in Labor, Washington, D. C.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Gompers Invited to Mexico

President-elect Obregon and the State Department of Mexico both invited President Gompers to attend the Mexican presidential inauguration in Mexico City on November 30. It was impossible for the A. F. of L. executive to attend and he commissioned Luis N. Marones, former secretary of the Mexican Federation of Labor, to represent him.

This is probably the first time that the president of a labor movement has been invited by the chief executive of another country to attend his inauguration.

Answering the invitation of Dr. Hidalgo, of the Mexican State Department, President Gompers said:

"It is with sincere regret that I find myself so situated as to render it impossible for me to make the trip at this time. I hope to have the honor of meeting President Obregon and yourself during my contemplated visit to your city next January to attend the Pan-American Federation of Labor. In the meantime please convey to your distinguished chief my felicitations upon the auspicious occasion and my sincere hope that under his leadership peace, progress and prosperity may come to the full to the people and the Republic of Mexico."

President-elect Obregon then forwarded this telegram to President Gompers through Consul General De Negri:

"Citizen Alvaro Obregon, President-elect of Mexico, has especially commissioned me by telegraph to request you to grant us the honor and pleasure of your personal appearance in Mexico at the inauguration of his presidential term. I gladly state that it would be a high and true honor to have the president of the American Federation of Labor as the guest of the nation on such a solemn and transcendental occasion for us.

"In case it is not possible for you to accede, as I fear, by reason of the peremptory request, I beg to ask respectfully that you please name a representative the earliest date by wire, giving me his name. Wishing you health and all success, I send you my best regards."

The invitations to President Gompers are indicative of the standing of the American Federation of Labor south of the Rio Grande and is also an appreciation of President Gompers' opposition to American jingoes who have been crying for war with Mexico during the past several years.

Coal Owners Gouge; Profits Excessive

Testimony submitted to the United States Senate Committee on Reconstruction, at hearings in New York, showed that New England States and New York are each taxed $17,000,000 annually in excessive anthracite coal prices.

Coal prices were raised $1 and up to $1.60 a ton last April in "anticipation of wage increases to miners," which finally only cost the coal owners from 45 to 50 cents a ton.

Seven companies control about 75 to 80 per cent. of the entire hard coal output.

It was shown that wholesalers also juggle prices by selling to each other, taking $1 a ton profit. Most of this coal never changed hands, as the deals were "paper transactions."

W. H. Williams, vice-president of two large coal companies, testified that prices were increased $1.40 and $1.60 a ton last April "in anticipation of raises to miners," but he "could not remember" what the miners' wage advance had cost the company.

The witness said that the coal owners would be "$400,000 or $600,000 in the hole" if the miners got the additional increase of approximately 13 per cent. which they are now demanding.

"You mean you will be out that much on the net profits you are now getting?" remarked Senator Edge of New Jersey.

T. R. Schumaker, of the East Boston Coal Company, Kingston, Pa., "could not remember," when questioned, and was ordered to produce his books. He said his company's profit last year was only $2,400 and that he paid an income tax of $2,000.

"Sure about that," replied Senator Edge, adding, "Did you cheat yourself?"

"Kidding Ourselves" Says Business Paper

The American Contractor of Chicago, calls on business men to drop the cry of "government interference with business."

"Why not quit kidding ourselves?" asks this publication, which declares that "government interference with business is a very much overworked phrase and the inconsistency of some of those who make use of it would be ridiculous if general business conditions were less grave.

"The organized business of the country always favored government interference in business when that interference placed the people's money, taken through taxation, at the disposal of the business interests.

"If the Government can interfere with business and hand the railroads $600,000,000, and interfere with business to the extent of placing a billion dollars at the disposal of exporters when exporting is a real embarrassment to the nation, how silly and how selfish it is for business interests to come forward with the cry of 'government interference' when the Government attempts something in the interest of the average man and woman.

"When it is suggested that the Federal Postal Savings Bank should pay depositors 3 or 4 per cent. and lend the money accumulated in these banks to home builders at 5 per cent., what a howl against 'Government interference in business!'

"The farmers and the cotton growers are real angry because the Government refuses to interfere in business to the extent of taking care of both, and yet the farmer and the cotton grower is such a conservative individual, so thoroughly converted to 'private initiative' that if it were proposed to place the Government in control of the coal industry and deprive the robber barons of America of their power

The problem of unemployment is now the most pressing matter faced by the British Government. The latest government figures show 410,000 idle, more than half of whom are former soldiers. In London alone there are 100,000, of whom 64,000 are former soldiers, being mostly young men who had never worked before they joined the army and who are not skilled at any trade.

Wage increases totaling more than 600,000,000 crowns a year have been awarded to the State railway, post office and civil service workers by an extraordinary session of the Austrian cabinet, thus warding off a strike of 206,000 workers. In spite of this increase, the men will hardly be able to solve the problem of mounting living costs, since the cost of living has increased 43 times since the beginning of the war, while their incomes have risen only tenfold.

Japanese official statistics show that at the end of 1919, the Japanese merchant marine employed 327,600 seamen and petty officers and 41,592 masters, mates and engineers. However, the figures refer to the number of licenses issued and not to the actual number of men in active employment, which is much smaller than the statistics would show. It is believed that as many as two-thirds of the men registered as seamen are not actually employed afloat at present.

"It is very difficult to believe," says the British Citizen of London, England, "that at the present moment there is a strike in progress for the principle of collective bargaining and trade union recognition. But such is the fact. The strike is that of the Guild of Insurance Officials against the General Accident, Fire and Life Assurance Corporation, Ltd., and the object is to secure the right of the 'black-coated worker' to belong to his trade union. At this stage one is tempted to rub one's eyes to see that one is really awake and in the twentieth century rather than in the period before the flood. As antiquarians they may be interesting, but these officials must realize that antiquarian questions are best left to the realm of the academic. Their attitude is at least a half a century out of date, to put it very gently."

British weekly coal output has exceeded 5,000,000 tons for the first time in two years, according to returns received by the Foreign Information Service of the Bankers Trust Company, of New York. Production in the week of November 20, was 5,211,000 tons. There had been no previous weekly output reaching 5,000,000 tons since October, 1918. The higher tonnage is an indication that British miners have undertaken to justify wage increases granted in adjustment of the recent coal strike but conditional upon greater production. Increased production is of significant importance in Great Britain because of the relation of coal to British export trade. It has been estimated that coal exports normally amounted to one-tenth of the value and seven-tenths of the bulk of total British exports. In 1913, 94½ million tons of coal were exported. Because of decreased production coal exports in 1919 were 47½ million tons. The government has urged the raising of coal output to its pre-war rate to assist Great Britain financially through exports.

PAINLESS PARKER'S BIG PRACTICE

MY DENTAL practice has grown steadily from the beginning. It is to-day the largest in the world simply because I have supplied reliable dentistry to the people at a fair price and given a better service than they could get anywhere else. Success isn't accidental. A man has to make good.

I have gone into the highways and byways and talked good teeth to the public for thirty years, and have probably done more to send folks to dental offices than any other one man who ever lived.

I don't say these things in a boastful spirit, but give them as plain facts. I am proud of what I have done, and am thankful to the public for the support it has given the E. R. Parker System and me. I am also proud that so many sailors are numbered among my patients. Sailors' teeth examined free. I have offices in all the following places:

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

The four-topmast sailing schooner "North Bend" was launched at Coos Bay on December 27. Miss Lena Kruse, daughter of K. V. Kruse, the designer, christened the vessel. As soon as the masts are set the craft will go to the Bay Park sawmill dock and load a million feet of lumber for Callao, Peru. The craft is 220 feet over all, 43 feet beam, 14 feet depth of hold.

Collector of Customs John O. Davis of San Francisco has appointed ten additional customs guards, salary $100 a month, from the civil service lists to assist in putting a stop to the smuggling of liquor and drugs ashore from vessels from foreign shores. He asked for authority to employ twenty more guards, but word from the Treasury Department at Washington gave him but ten.

After being delayed for over two weeks on orders of the United States Government, the Mexican gunboat "Agua Prieta," in command of Captain A. C. Carter, sailed from San Francisco during the week for Guaymas. The vessel towed the motor-ship "Mayo" to the same port for the Mexican Government. The "Agua Prieta" was formerly the U. S S. "Machias" and was purchased through a broker from this country for the account of Mexico.

The steamer "Prentiss" was libeled by the Buehner Lumber Company of San Francisco in the United States courts at Los Angeles. The complainant asked that the "Prentiss" be sold and an award of $25,000 made in favor of the "Martha Buehner," which towed the "Prentiss" into port at San Pedro, after the latter had lost her propeller. The "Prentiss" now is in drydock. The "Prentiss" is said to be worth $75,000 and to have carried a cargo worth $150,000 at the time of the accident.

The Seattle Contract Company has purchased all the machinery, tools and equipment of the Ames Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company and will begin at once to dismantle the plant. The Ames company will retain title to the land upon which the plant is located on West waterway. Reports have been circulated freely during the last two months that the Ames plant would be bought and kept in operation, probably by the Barde Steel Products Company, who have large shipping interests on the coast.

Plans of the Western Pacific for the development of its terminal properties adjoining Islais Creek, San Francisco, abandoned during the war, are now being revived, it became known during the week. The company has purchased seventy-five blocks of land adjoining its 350 acres of Islais Creek property for $100,000, according to deeds filed last week. It is said the company is preparing terminal facilities to care for the increased business which is expected as a result of purchase of the Denver and Rio Grande.

The Mitsu Bishi yard at Nagasaki, Japan, is reported to be building three liners of the "Katori Maru" type for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. The new ships will be of 10,000 tons gross and 20,000 tons displacement. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha has abandoned its original plan of building ships of the "super Empress" class. The company also intends to place in the Seattle-Orient trade in 1921 the former Hamburg-South American liner "Cap Finisterre" of 14,503 gross tons. She has accommodations for 450 first, 400 second and 600 third-class passengers. She has little or no cargo space and is fitted to carry only stores, express, mail, baggage and passengers.

Sir Lewis Bayly, retired admiral of the British Royal Navy, and commander-in-chief of the British coast defenses during the war, arrived at San Francisco from the Orient on the Pacific Mail steamer "Ecuador," has been the guest of honor at several functions. The "Ecuador" was escorted in by a fleet of six United States destroyers which met the vessel at Farallon Islands. Accompanying Sir Lewis is Miss V. A. Voysey, his niece, a former resident of Hostess House, Queenstown, I reland. Sir Lewis, during the war, paid the highest tribute to the efficiency of the American Navy, when Admiral Sims reported to him for duty with his fleet of American destroyers. Admiral Bayly is the guest of Captain H. B. Price, at Yerba Buena Island, during his stay in San Francisco.

Captain Leb Curtiss, marine surveyor, has returned to San Francisco from Trinidad and reported that efforts to salve the United States Shipping Board freighter "Zaca" from the beach had been successful. The craft caught fire several months ago following a mysterious explosion in her engine room. Officers of the vessel were forced to beach the craft to quench the fire. Captain Pillsbury stated that an investigation showed that the vessel was badly damaged below decks in the vicinity of her engine rooms, but that the remainder of the freighter was not injured. The cargo of coal that the craft was transporting from Norfolk to the River Plate was removed and the vessel will be towed to an Atlantic shipyard for repairs. Captain Curtiss was sent to Trinidad by the Shipping Board to take charge of the salving of the "Zaca."

Poaching on the seal islands of Bering Sea has ceased and the animals are thriving and increasing. This is the report brought by Commander James H. Brown, who has just returned from passing the summer in charge of the Coast Guard's Alaska fleet. "Japan has joined the convention and the Japanese, who were the worst poachers, have virtually ceased their sealing in the Aleutian Islands," said Brown. "We did not see a single poaching vessel this year. Formerly, before Japan joined the sealing convention, Japanese vessels would lie outside the three-mile limit secure from molestation and bag all the seals they saw. In foggy weather, when they had a good chance, they would run in to land and take a lot of seals. We estimated this summer there are nearly 750,000 seals, and this number will perhaps be increased to 1,000,000 in a year. This year 30,000 of them were taken and skinned."

Captain A. B. Peterson, who was in command of the barkentine "Hesperian," died at sea, according to word received by the marine department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. The "Hesperian" was spoken by the "Annie M. Reed," also owned by the Rolph Navigation Company, December 17. Both ships were bound for Antofagasta, the "Annie M. Reed" arriving there December 23, under Captain Durkee, who made the report. Captain Peterson's wife and two children are aboard the "Hesperian," according to the message. The cause of death was not given and there was nothing included in the messages passed between the ships as to whether or not there had been a burial at sea or not. The "Annie Reed" made a fast run to Antofagasta, making the trip in forty-four days. The "Hesperian" left Newcastle for the same port October 18, according to the records of the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce. Officials of the company at San Francisco said they had had no notification of the death of Captain Peterson until the "Annie Reed" made port and sent out the report.

Officials of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha at Seattle deny that their company has any intention of making Vancouver its principal port on the Pacific Coast, instead of Seattle. Statements published in other coast cities to the effect that, because of provisions of the Jones bill, Japan's oldest and largest steamship company was intending to make Vancouver its principal port, were denied in toto and branded as without any basis of fact. Within the last month the Port Commission has closed a contract with the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, granting them preferential lease for five years on side of Pier B, the recently completed pier, which is the largest in the world. The explanation for the appointment of B. W. Greer & Son, Ltd., as the company's agents at Vancouver, is that the company's steamers, both passenger and freight, will henceforth call at Vancouver at stated intervals. In the case of cargo vessels these will make Vancouver a port of call both inward and outward on their way to and from Seattle. In regard to passenger steamers the new arrangement is a rather complicated one. Inward most of them will call first at Victoria, B. C., to discharge passengers, going thence to Seattle, thence to Vancouver to load and unload freight, thence to Seattle for passengers and freight, and thence to Victoria for passengers.

With the arrival of the steamer "Creole State" at San Francisco about January 15 on her maiden trip for the Pacific Mail Oriental service the Shipping Board will test the plan of Admiral W. S. Benson for chartering these vessels on the bare boat charter, it was learned to-day in a dispatch from Washington. The twenty-three combination passenger and cargo steamers which are now under construction for the Shipping Board probably will be assigned according to the results shown by the Pacific Mail steamer "Creole State." Whether the bare boat charter will be adopted as the more desirable method of operation is now under consideration by the shipping companies to which these vessels have been allocated. Besides the "Creole State" the Shipping Board has allocated twelve passenger and cargo steamers to the Pacific Coast. Five of them are to be handled by the Pacific Mail and five by the Admiral Line, while the Matson Navigation Company has been assigned two. The "Creole State" will be put on the India run of the Pacific Mail to replace the "Colusa," which will be turned back to W. R. Grace & Co., the owners, when she arrives from Calcutta on the next trip. The experiment of the "Creole State" on her first voyage to the Orient may decide the question of operating the new vessels on the bare boat charter or continue to be handled by managing directors.

EDUCATION IN SEAMANSHIP.

The school recently established by the Sailors' Union of the Pacific to enable the younger members to perfect themselves in so-called marlin-spike seamanship has not had the expected attendance.

Andrew Furuseth, who was most active in urging the establishment of the school, is keenly disappointed that members have not taken more general advantage of the opportunity to perfect their education in this respect. In writing to the JOURNAL upon the subject he makes this timely and thought-compelling comment:

According to information just received our school is in full operation, but is not patronized as well as it ought to be. I presume our younger members think that if they can pass through the existing examination for licensed officers nothing additional will be required of them. I want to warn them most sincerely that they are very much mistaken. I have no doubt that the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Department of Commerce will provide examinations in practical seamanship for all those who wish to be officers. Moreover, I do not believe that it will be a very long period of time before this will be done. Their self-interest, if not the pride in their calling, should induce all our young men to take advantage of this opportunity to learn whatever they can while idle on shore.

The United States has earnestly set out to develop a Merchant Marine personnel of its own. This personnel is to compete in ocean transportation. To do this it must be skilled. In competition victory goes to the most skilled men. As Union men we made the promise to ourselves in our declaration of purposes that we were to work for the maintenance and development of a high standard of skill in seamanship. We will not be faithful to our promise unless we are willing to do whatever we can to redeem it.

A summary of the reasons and arguments which prompted the Union to establish the school seems to be apropos. Certain parts from Furuseth's "Second Message to Seamen" tell the whole story in very clear language.

In days gone by, while the shipowner was fully liable to the shipper and the passenger no laws were needed to assure efficient and sufficient manning. Self-interest stood guard to induce safety and the shipowner insisted upon the highest possible skill. Limitation of liability and insurance has altered this situation and the safety provided by custom must now be furnished by law.

In the deck department the able seaman was always the unit towards which the Boy worked, from which the Officer advanced.

The Boy who starts out to become a real seaman must be of good physique, have good eyes, good ears and a stout heart. When he comes on the vessel everything is new and strange. He is gradually being accustomed to his new surroundings, he is learning to stand on the platform that is never still, he is learning to walk, his body is gradually acquiring the sea-habit—he is getting sea-legs. He is doing such work as he can, assisting the able seaman or the ordinary seaman in the work on the vessel. When he has learned sufficiently, and it usually takes about one year, he becomes an Ordinary Seaman. As such he is learning more about the vessel under the continually shifting conditions. His sea-legs are being perfected. He is continuing to learn more and more about the vessel's gear, the names, what it is used for, and where it is found. In daylight or darkness he must be able to find it. He is learning to use the gear, to repair it, and where possible to replace it. As he becomes more skillful he becomes more useful and after about two years as ordinary seaman he becomes by virtue of his skill an "A. B."

The work required from him is such that he needs the physical development which is not usually reached before the age of nineteen and practically all countries make this age the minimum. He must now be so accustomed to the sea that he can stand on his feet in all kinds of weather without supporting himself by his hands, because he has other use for them. His body must have acquired the faculty of automatically so corresponding to the vessel's movements that he can stand on his feet, see with his eyes, hear with his ears, use his judgment, exercise his will and make his body obey. If he has not learned this and is yet alive, he has in probability but a short time to live. He must know the vessel, her appliances, her gear and the boats. He must be able to use, to repair and as far as possible to replace the gear and appliances and to lower and manage the boats. He must by this time have acquired so much of the traditions and lore of the sea that he has a full appreciation of his duty to his shipmates, the passengers, the ship, and her cargo.

Boatswain, boatswain's mate, and quartermasters are able seamen picked to perform more special work. These ratings are usually considered "petty officers" but they are in fact just able seamen—given a special rating.

The able seaman ought to sail as such for at least one year before he be permitted to present himself for examination as an officer. Having learned to know the ship, her gear and appliances and something about what the ship will do under her power, mechanical or sail, and feeling an ambition to become an officer he will go to a Navigation School to acquire the knowledge necessary to find his position by dead reckoning and astronomical observations. When he has passed through this entire procedure—from the day of the first trip as a boy—and has finally obtained a certificate to this effect from the U. S. Inspectors, then he is in fact an Officer.

Many young mariners, particularly those who commenced their career upon the sea during the late war, have not had the full opportunity to perfect themselves in all the fine points of the calling as outlined herein. Therefore the establishment of the school.

The school exists for the sole purpose of enabling young men to use self-help—to develop and perfect themselves in their chosen calling. Success or failure of the school depends upon attendance. The service rendered is free to members and it is earnestly hoped that this hint will be sufficient to arouse a livelier interest.

WAR APPROPRIATIONS

Congressman Mondell took the wild bull by the horns the other day when he declared, amid applause from the House, that we shall never be able to make adequate appropriations for internal improvements and other constructive government works unless we reduce the enormous total of the appropriations carried in the Army and Navy bills.

This year, the Republican floor leader pointed out, we have appropriated $845,000,000 directly for military and naval purposes, more than three times as much as in any pre-war year. "It is much more than we should appropriate for the coming fiscal year," he said, "and yet the War Department is asking us for $567,000,000 more."

Congressman Mondell criticized Secretary Baker for recruiting the army far beyond the number appropriated for by Congress and declared it was the duty of Congress to prevent the Secretary from squandering the people's money by creating deficiencies in violation of law. A deficiency of from sixty to a hundred millions in the War Department is an unwelcome Christmas gift from Secretary Baker to a Congress harassed by financial troubles and beset by a business community demanding tax reduction.

This action of the Secretary lends point to Congressman Mondell's demand that Congress cut the war appropriations, not only below the bloated estimates just submitted, but below the swollen figures of the present year, so that funds may be available for the constructive activities of the government. The Wyoming Representative who last spring strongly opposed universal military training because of its cost has cut out a large task for himself in trying to save anything for other government work, in face of the voracious demands for a still greater Army and Navy.

Reports just received from Japan tell of continued efforts to merge the forty-eight local seamen's organizations of that country into one central union. Owing to the dullness in shipping many Japanese seamen are out of work, yet a number of companies are again endeavoring to substitute Chinese for Japanese workers on vessels.

American shipbuilders broke the world's pre-war record of launchings during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, according to figures given in the annual report of the Commissioner of Navigation. American ships built and documented during the year aggregated 3,880,639 gross tons.

Always demand the Union Label!

A COSTLY PIER.

Canada in the next few years will spend millions of dollars to make Vancouver one of the leading ports on the Pacific Coast. A long program looking toward that end has been prepared and will be carried out as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

One of the first items in the program is the proposed Ballantyne Pier on Burrard Inlet. It is now reported that the contract for the steel and concrete work on this pier has been let at a figure in the neighborhood of $4,500,000. Accepted specifications indicate that it will equal in construction and equipment any pier on the continent, and will cost practically $3,000,000 without the sheds. The cost of the sheds may reach another $2,000,000, and the equipment is estimated at from $200,000 to $300,000. In addition are the excavation and fill, already commenced, calling for an expenditure of some $600,000 or $700,000. Work on the steel and concrete construction, however, can commence long before the excavation and fill are completed.

The Ballantyne Pier will be 1,206 feet long and 341 feet wide, with double tracks at the outer sides and four tracks through the center. The two-story sheds, four in number, will be 500 feet long by 110 feet wide. The entire structure is to be of reinforced concrete, built upon 7-foot cylindrical columns, which will be sunk to rock-bottom, in three rows around the entire pier.

Customs offices will be located at the entrance to the pier, inside the first shed. Only the latest improved handling devices will be used, such as unloading cranes, cargo chutes, elevators, escalators, etc. All the doors and sashes will be of steel, and wire-ribbed glass will be used for all windows. The pier will be 35 feet in height at the shore end, and 45 feet high at the extreme end. These figures refer to the height of the pier at low water, the average rise and fall of the tide being 13 feet. An idea of the size of the undertaking may be gathered from the statement that the pier will have ample dockage, storage space, and equipment to load or discharge four large vessels at one time.

That whaling in the Antarctic is a profession rather than an occupation is indicated by a recent report from England. A member of the British Merchant Service Guild complained recently about a vessel leaving a British port to engage in the whaling trade in the Antarctic Ocean. He stated that the two mates on this vessel were both of Norwegian nationality, and remarked that it was hard to see British ships carrying two alien officers while so many British officers were out of employment. The matter was therefore brought to the notice of the Marine Department of the Board of Trade, who stated in reply that under Section 78 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, the vessel in question had been exempted from full compliance with the requirements of the law, on the ground that "no officers holding British certificates of competency and possessing the necessary experience of the whaling industry were available." Can it be possible that there is a scarcity of talent in so old a profession as whaling?

OLD vs. "NEW FORM" UNIONS

President Johnston of the International Association of Machinists Reviews Activities of Short Route Artists.

For the past few years the members of the trade union movement have been watching developmnts within the International Association of Machinists. It has not been infrequent that attention has been directed to this particular organization, but when this was done it always appeared to be for the purpose of bringing to the front a spirit of radicalism that seemed to hold sway. At the same time the hope was expressed that all would agree with what were supposed to be advanced ideas. While that organization has increased remarkably, still it has now been discovered that there are elements at work which would evidently take pleasure in destroying it.

President William H. Johnston, in his report to their convention, held recently in Rochester, New York, deemed it advisable to refer to this element, and his article is timely and refreshing.

President Johnson very nicely points out the failures of those organizations that have tried to progress with a different fundamental policy, and sounds a warning to the membership of the International Association of Machinists against the conducte of men in their ranks who have been advocating the One Big Union. The pertinent parts of President Johnston's report follow:

"I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to call attention to the efforts of our enemies to hinder and, if possible, disrupt our association, which has taken years to build up.

"There are many agencies at work, within as well as without the organization, seeking to create dissension and secession. Some of those who are most active profess to be radicals while in reality they are reactionaries. They criticise and condemn our form of organization, claiming that a more advanced form of organization is needed, and immediately proceed to destroy what has taken years of hard, earnest toil, effort and sacrifice to create. The apostles of destruction work incessantly in and out of season, seeking to undermine the existing labor movement, preaching what they claim to be a 'New Form' of organization, while the truth of the matter is the theory they expound is an old exploded one that has been tried again and again, and as often as tried, just so often has it failed.

"We have but to review the history of such organizations as the Knights of Labor, the American Railway Union, the Socialist Trade and Labor Alliance, the Industrial Workers of the World, the Workers' International Industrial Union, the American Federation of Railroad Workers, and lastly the One Big Union, to realize that all of them, without exception, have resulted in dividing rather than unifying the forces of labor; and although they have retarded, they have failed to stop the forward march of the labor movement; and in the last analysis represent reaction rather than progress.

"Most of the aforementioned organizations were reconized as 'industrial unions,' and came into being at a time when the trade union movement was weak. In fact, in many industries these so-called 'industrial unions' had a clear field, as many of the present trade and labor unions had not yet been organized. It seems logical, therefore, to assume that if their plan of organization was sound and more nearly met the needs of the working class, they would have multiplied and become the dominant organization. But history proves that the majority of these organizations have long since passed out of existence, while the few remaining are spending their time and energy seeking to destroy the bona fide organizations that have done so much to improve the condition of the workers.

"The so-called leaders of these rump organizations, while claiming to be class conscious, are playing the employers' game in that they succeed for a time in dividing the workers, and there is no doubt at times certain employing interests have secretly aided such organizations with the hope of so dividing the labor movement as to make it impotent.

"In their enthusiasm those who advocate the One Big Union idea think they have found a short cut to the emancipation of the working class from 'wage slavery,' and immediately they proceed to destroy existing organizations with the hope of building a more perfect union upon its ruins. While many of these men may be sincere, they are mistaken. The development of the labor movement will be along evolutionary lines rather than revolutionary. The fact that the trade unions are growing in strength, notwithstanding the disrupting tactics employed by our enemies, clearly indicates that the present day trade unions, with all their imperfections, more nearly meet the needs of the working people of our time than any form of organization previously tried."

Contract for the new Government drydock at Esquimalt has been let to P. L. Yall & Son, Montreal and Vancouver. Price is approximately $4,300,000. The dock will be 1150 by 120 feet.

The world's record for ocean crossings is probably held by Captain Arthur R. Mills. He has made 1068 crossings of the Atlantic for the American Line in forty-one years of service, steaming a total distance of 3,000,000 miles, equal to 128 times around the earth. He was decorated by France with the Legion of Honor.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

Taking advantage of the presence in town of the leading spirits of the onward movement of the Seamen's Union, it was decided to wind up their valuable performances with a mass meeting of non-union seamen.

This meeting, which had been well advertised, was also well attended. It was held in "Union Hall," 38 Union street, Brooklyn, on Monday evening, December 11, 1895. The same hall is now the headquarters of Local No. 346, International Longshoremen's Association.

That meeting was a pronounced and memorable success from every point of view, and demonstrated beyond all possible palaver, or pinhead dispute, the revival influence and moral effect exerted upon the minds of seamen in general by the presence and performances of the convention in the port of New York.

Owing to the large number of speakers to be heard, all addresses were of necessity limited to fifteen minutes. After the meeting I spent a very busy session issuing probationary books to the mob of eager applicants which assembled around the secretary's table clamoring for admission to membership.

Thus in a joint appeal to the good-will and common sense of the unorganized seamen of the port, and the country, the stalwart delegations to the first annual convention of the I. S. U. of A. quietly separated and went their several ways in peace, their departure as silent and unobserved as their arrival had been unheralded and unannounced. And standing today beneath the grateful shade of their unselfish and devoted labors, the organized seamen of America, and of the world, can well declare with loud and reverent acclaim:

"Come see the Mighty Oaks from little acorns grown!"

And now I go down the line alone, the bruised and battered relic of a sad and bygone era, a vagrant man of hopeless habits and uncouth ways, sojourning perpetually in a land of strangers. Yet still a happy, irrepressible optomist, dwelling in a Doubting Castle, without come from or go to, kith or kindred, fireside or friends, I ever glory in the honored distinction of having been counted among the favored few who responded to the sonorous roll call of the first Seamen's Convention.

Most of my fellow conspirators have now passed beyond my ken. Mr. Furuseth, like the poor, "we have always with us," Mr. Buryeson gravitated to the Pacific coast some fifteen years ago and fetched a permanent anchorage there, and is probably better known amid the sunset of the Golden Gate than remembered among the turgid multitude on the Atlantic Threshold at present.

Oscar Benninger went to the Pacific coast in 1898, second mate of the S. S. "Brixom," and never returned. He told me before leaving New York that he intended going to the Klondike to seek "a fortune or a grave." I fear the grave must have been his fortune as well as his fate. In the summer of 1899 I received one poor little crumpled letter from Oscar, mailed from some God-forsaken No Man's Land in the Alaskan wilderness. He told me of his hardships (prospects he had none), and of how he had slept in a tent the previous winter with the temperature 50 degrees below zero. I never heard from him again; as I know I certainly should had he been living. For a more faithful and loyal friend, or a more staunch and devoted Union seaman never lived than Comrade Oscar Benninger, of Fort Hamilton. Peace to his memory.

For some years Comrade George Noonan continued to conduct the business affairs of the Seamen's Union at Vancouver, B. C., and he contributed a breezy and amusing weekly column to the COAST SEAMEN'S JOURNAL at the same time.

But eventually his contributions to the JOURNAL and his communications to the Atlantic coast ceased about simultaneously, and I have heard nothing of him since.

Tom Elderkin and Dan Robertson both finally retired from the councils of the International Seamen's Union to engage in private affairs, and they have likewise passed trucks down below my horizon and disappeared from view.

But still I remain an animate fossil on the everlasting job. A time-honored and aimless vagabond, acknowledged by common consent the most inveterate beachcomber and irrepressible scalawag on the Atlantic coast for the last twenty years. But who shall venture or pretend to pass supreme judgment on the vagrant ways of a sinful old sailor, or hold his valiant spirit in contempt!

The aimless, shiftless, vagabond ways of the old confirmed windjammer were far beyond the possibility of human estimate or social appreciation.

His personality combined in a mysterious degree the courage of a lion, the timidity of a child and the faith of a saint, with the boldness of a warrior, the devotion of a martyr and the heart of a dog. And it was by the heroic self-sacrifice, unfaltering devotion and sublime faith of such wayward, but unflinching, true-hearted, lofty minded seamen that the International Union owes its birth, its present popularity and world-wide success.

Comrades: As you assemble for the twenty-fourth annual convention of the Unions of our craft, the great city will no doubt accord to you the customary honors, of speechmaking, banqueting and public acclaim, and a hundred thousand organized seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts will greet you with a hundred thousand tumultuous welcomes; but, still, in memory of another and far-away day, and in the sanctified names of a few hundred devoted and kindred souls, the founders and fervent forerunners of the multiplied thousands you now so proudly represent, kindly accept my humble salutation likewise.

No greater honor could any man crave than to have been personally identified with that noble and devoted band of true-hearted founders and loyal comrades: The old Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union. To serve them was a distinguished privilege; to have served and suffered with them is an unmitigated honor.

Comrades, in their name, I salute you!

Fraternally,

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

THE DOCILE CHINEE AGAIN

In a recent number of the JOURNAL we reported the fracas which occurred on the Mississippi River, near New Orleans, when the Chinese crew of a British ship rushed the guards in an attempt to get ashore, allee samee Melican man.

In that case, it was reported, eleven Mongolians were shot, several of them killed. A similar case occurred in New York harbor on December 14th.

In this case the Chinese crew of the Japanese steamship "Washington Maru," having been enticed by glowing descriptions of the attractions and allurements of Chatham Square, brought on board by some of their landed compatriots, revolted and took charge. Arming themselves with iron bars and such other articles of hardware as came to hand, the rebellious mutineers rushed the gangway and, after forcibly disposing of Mister Wong Tong, the chief officer, they swarmed over the side and went helbent up the street, a howling, fanatic mob.

There were thirty-five coolies in the frantic mob, all eager for jobs in laundries and chop suey joints, and all these exciting doings, we should explain, took place at Tomkinsville, Staten Island, where the "Washington Maru" lay at the American Dock Terminal.

Upon reaching the dock the wild-eyed mutineers made a grand rush for the Rapid Transit station which connects by rail with the New York ferries at St. George. A telephone call was sent in, however, to Captain Quick, of the Stapleton police force—pretty good name for a cop, if he lives up to it—and that rapid-fire official greeted the deserters at the station with a whole battalion of his finest and gave them a rousing reception.

Yielding at length to the persuasive influence of well-handled night sticks and revolver butts, the bewildered Orientals finally conceded that clubs were trumps and were escorted back to their ship in state.

The "Washington Maru" sailed before we had time to interview her crew and learn how they enjoyed their brief outing, but judging from all accounts to hand, no pains were spared in their behalf to make their visit a memorable incident, among the denizens of Tyfooshang. J. H. W.

Mr. Armand Duros, late chief steward S. S. Cuttyhunk, died in the John Sealy Hospital, Galveston, December 14, 1920. Mr. Duros came to the United States at the age of 17 from France. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lou Duros, of Kansas City, also by two sisters and two brothers, who reside in France.

COOLIE COMPETITION

The complaint of three Lascar firemen, made before the Municipal Court in the city of New York, charging the master of the British steamship "Manica" of flim-flamming them into a fictitious agreement on fradulent shipping articles, and then swindling them out of their wages, barefaced, is causing considerable discussion in local waterfront circles as being a new subject.

Yes, the subject is new, but built on an old bottom. It began several thousand years ago when old Esau came famishing out of the forest and was induced to sell his birthright (to a Jew) for a paltry mess of pottage to ward off impending starvation. It has been repeated in thousands of instances since then, especially among unfortunate seamen, ignorant of certain languages or local conditions, and in desperate need of food to sustain life, or employment to obtain food, which means the same.

Buncoing a few unsophisticated, half-starved coolies is nothing new, nor is it in any way difficult, singular or strange. John D. Rockefeller, Elihu Root or Judge Gary, placed in the same deplorable predicament, could all be buncoed just as easily as three unfortunate coolies, for necessity knows no law, and "what will a man take in exchange for his life?"

There is no institution in this world that can compete with a British ship in starving and otherwise reducing a seaman to the last extremity and then keeping him there. And in the fulminating process of this ancient and patriotic process British consuls can always be depended upon to lend their lordly superiors a willing and helping hand.

Statement of Facts

The facts in this case, which we copy verbatim from the record of the proceedings before the Municipal Court, as submitted by Attorney Silas B. Axtell, are as follows:

"The plaintiffs, three East India, or Hindu seamen, were originally members of the crew of some other ship. They had left the other ship in the port of New York about a month prior to their engagement on the S. S. 'Manica.'

"They were stopping in a boarding house at No. 19 West street, and on the day articles were signed or taken out they went with eight other men to the British consul's office, No. 25 South street" (The Church Seamen's (?) Institute), "touched a pen which was held by the consul's clerk, walked out, and went aboard the ship and worked for nearly five months, making a voyage from New York to various ports in the Mediterranean and back. On arrival in New York the other members of the crew who had signed when they did were paid, receiving the port wages of $85 for seamen, or deck hands, and $90 for firemen. These three men were firemen. They asked for their money and were told they were signed on to be paid off in Calcutta in January [1921], at 23 rupees per month.

"They asked for their wages at $90 per month and were refused. They then left the ship. Presumably the British consul had logged them as deserters.

"At the trial the three Hindus testified that they were told by the captain and consul's clerk, in so far as they were told anything, and by other seamen who were in the room when the articles were signed, that they were to get $90 per month the same as the rest. This statement was corroborated by Mohammed Abdu, a reputable Arabian boarding-house keeper on West street; and by Ishmael Ali, another Arab, who signed and made the same trip as fireman at $90 a month. Ishmael Ali could understand the language of the plaintiffs, asd did tell them, he says, pursuant to the instructions of the captain, J. A. Mordue, that they were to get $90 per month the same as the others.

"The British consular clerk, Hicks, testified that the seamen signed, or put their hand to the pen which the clerk made a mark on a written agreement, which called for wages at 23 rupees per month, and the discharge of the said seamen in the port of Calcutta, in January, 1921.

"The articles of agreement were signed on May 29, 1920, if they were signed.

"The voyage ended in November. The verdict of the jury was for the net amount admittedly due the men at $90 per month; if there was anything due them more than the 23 rupees, or $7.50 per month.

"I am certain that the court's recollection of the facts is quite as distinct as my own. The questions of fact as submitted to the jury were:

"First—Were the articles explained to the seamen as required by the Maritime Law as indicated by statutes of the United States and Great Britain?

"Second—Were the seamen induced to sign articles by fraudulent representations?

"In passing I would mention the fact that the articles, which the captain claims the men signed, were originally the articles of another ship, that the name had been changed, and that defendant's counsel failed to show that this transfer of shipping articles was in any way authorized. It was stipulated between counsel that the laws of Great Britain could be proven and used by either side by reference to Maclachlan's Merchant Shipping."

Such are the facts as stated in the appeal of Altobali, Anser Ali and Nizir Mahmed vs. Captain J. A. Mordue and Ellerman & Bucknal Steamship Company, Ltd., as submitted by counsel to the Municipal Court of the City of New York.

The jury upheld the contentions of the plaintiffs, as any honorable jury would, and ordered them to be paid in full at the rate of wages prevailing at the time they signed. Counsel for the defendants, however, have moved to have the judgment set aside, as is already indicated. Such are the usual tactics in such cases, and need not disturb us much. Those old sea swindlers would kick if they were hanging, as most of them deserve to be.

The only thing that concerns us in this connection, and the one item that should interest and arouse American citizens of all grades most at this particular juncture in Maritime history, is this: To what extent, and to what degree are these flim-flamming practices being secretly conducted in the seclusion of foreign consulates within the United States, with the sinister, deliberate design of driving the American Merchant Marine again from the seas?

This case includes a national, and international significance far deeper and more serious than the mere question of seamen's wages, or the alleged right of any man to work for whom and what he pleases, irrespective of the rights and wellbeing of thousands of other men. We are not inclined in this instance to indulge in an academic dissertation on the Rights of Man, but we would humbly submit in passing, as a friendly reminder, that every human Right has its ultimate limitations; that it ceases to be a "Right" when it becomes a national danger or a public nuisance.

The Sunday papers are constantly horrifying us with illustrated details of the deplorable, and shocking conditions now prevailing in India; and the even more distressful conditions prevailing in China where 20,000,000 miserable inhabitants are said to be starving. Shall we then, as a remedy for these alleged afflictions, permit foreign governments to perniciously and deliberately inflict the selfsame conditions upon the people of the United States in the interests of their own national commerce?

If there is any sane citizen of the United States who is eager to work for $7.50 per month, and keep it up for five months, we should like to get his number so that we can report him to the coroner after he gets through, if not a good while before.

A Soviet envoy, so we understand, is about to be deported for seeking to undermine the principles of American stability. If this is true, then why not also deport foreign consuls found guilty of conniving with their nationals for the overthrow of American living conditions, and the ultimate establishment of Coolie conditions in the United States?

The British Government and its subsidized shipowners have been banking upon the exploitation of Hindoo slavery for generations, and upon that policy has their, so-called, "supremacy of the sea" been largely founded. To our personal and sorrowful knowledge, they were exploiting it for all it was worth to the Maritime disadvantage of other nations, as well as against the United States, more than thirty years ago. And now they are evidently secretly employing it in their insidious designs to undermine the basic principles of the La Follette Law.

As between the national advantages of well paid, well fed, independent, upstanding American seamen in American ships, or cringing, crawling, rice fed, commercially subdued coolies in foreign ships, we can safely leave American sentiment and common sense to choose. But since the permanence and success of the American Merchant Marine depends in greater measure upon the exact and equable enforcement of the La Follette Law in the present crisis, regardless of national distinctions, than upon any other great factor, we would respectfully petition the Court in the above cited case to manifest its patriotism by fulfilling its solemn duty to seamen and to the country, by upholding the law.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(By Laurence Todd)

Poindexter's industrial slavery bill, passed by the Senate on December 17, will be reconsidered and killed without getting into the House at all.

This is the consensus of opinion among labor officials who have been canvassing the Senators since the trick was first turned. Andrew Furuseth of the Seamen, when he discovered that Section 2 of the bill has the effect of reducing sailors to involuntary servitude—repealing essential parts of the Seamen's Act, began a campaign in the Senate office building that has completed the work done by the railroad labor organizations and the progressives in and out of Congress. The La Follette motion, to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed, will be adopted when it comes up, and Poindexter will be beaten.

As the law now stands, an agent of the Seamen's Union can go aboard a foreign ship in any of our ports and can urge the crew to quit their employment—at the low foreign rate of pay—and go ashore, after which they can quickly secure new employment on foreign or American ships at the American wage. But when ten years' imprisonment and $10,000 fine is held over his head, the business agent will think twice before trying to induce the Lascar or Portuguese crew to better their condition and thereby to equalize labor costs between foreign and American shipping.

Senator Smoot, Old Guard floor leader in the Senate (Lodge holds the title, but Smoot does the work) saw the point when Furuseth showed it to him in the bill. He said he would vote to reconsider. Presumably he will swing the Republican majority without any serious trouble. They have enough difficulties in hand right now, without adding more.

Poindexter, when he was approached, refused to budge an inch. He wants to make strikes impossible, and he knows that unless the labor movement is smashed his political career is ended. Furuseth has served notice upon him that if he wants a fight he shall have it, and that the only amendment which organized labor will consider will be one striking out the enacting clause. There can be no compromise.

The Senate, by the way, chose the same day—December 17—that it slipped this industrial servitude measure through, to pass the Esch bill which permits the railroad companies for one year to loot the public on the cost-plus plan, in the matter of all supplies and repairs and maintenance work. That is, they are given permission to form dummy companies, as was the case with the looting of the New Haven and other roads, which shall enable the "insiders" in the railroad companies to milk these roads by extravagant payment for locomotives, cars, repairs, materials of all kinds and even the work of keeping the property in order. They will now proceed, unless the President vetoes the bill, to lease out their shops to these interlocked or dummy companies, which will refuse to pay the wages awarded by the Railroad Labor Board or to abide by the National Agreement as to working conditions and adjustment of disputes.

Repair work on rolling stock, the records obtained by the shop crafts show, costs only about 60 per cent. as much when done direct by the railroads as when let out on contract. New York Central locomotives were an instance. Twenty-seven of them were repaired in contract shops at from $16,300 to $17,000 each, with $500 more for freight on each one sent to the shop. The company's own shops estimated that they could do the work for $12,500 per locomotive.

Contracts already made by the Burlington, the Ann Arbor and other roads call for payment of the whole labor cost, plus 100 to 125 per cent. as "overhead," plus 15 to 25 per cent. on the total of these sums. In one case the contract shop gets all scrap material, and in another case the contractor receives 15 per cent. on the value of the material for handling.

These extravagant and grafting charges are borne by the public, of course, and the "insiders" in the Baldwin and other shops get the money. Now the roads will be permitted to lease their own shops and their own maintenance equipment to the "insiders," so that the grab may become wholesale and absolute.

Labor is interested, first of all, because the scheme is designed to break the unions in the shop and maintenance departments of the railroad industry. But it is interested almost as much because the wasteful method now adopted by the companies means the further deterioration of the whole transportation service, with unemployment and industrial chaos as its logical results. When business goes mad, labor is the first victim. Intelligent leadership in the railroad unions is making a desperate effort to convince President Wilson that the companies must not be permitted to commit suicide in this way. When the railroads go down they will pull with them a great part of the industrial structure of the nation.

On the other hand, it is perfectly clear that great numbers of wage workers will meet oppression and extravagance on the part of the private companies with resentment. Their resentment will be reflected in continual trouble in the shops and in the maintenance service. Men driven unwillingly to work never have produced at a high rate.

Even the Old Guard Senators begin to perceive that the warfare against labor is going too far—that their special-privilege group may suffer from its effects. Senator Freylinghuysen of New Jersey, speaking as a friend of President-elect Harding, warned the employers that "Nothing can be more short-sighted than the present tendency . . . to make war on the labor unions under the guise of a movement for the 'open shop,' which means a shop closed to union organization." On the other hand, he denounces the "radical" labor organizations, and suggests that "If through the power of combination any set of men should prevent the people from having fuel or transportation, if in order to enforce the demands which an impartial tribunal created by the Government believes unfair they imperil the safety and existence of the people at large and make starvation and freezing imminent, then the full power of the Government should be exercised to prevent them, or the Government is a failure."

While reports continue that John I. Nolan of the Molders is to be Secretary of Labor in the new Cabinet, Freylinghuysen says that "The Department should not be conducted as an adjunct to the American Federation of Labor, nor as a vehicle for the views of those who favor non-union labor entirely." Moreover, he urges that the Department be reorganized "and socialism eliminated." As to radical immigrants, he declares that "no altruistic spirit should lead us to admit those who are bent on changing our form of government at the first opportunity." In short we must admit only such immigrants as are certain to become members of the Republican or Democratic parties. Hence the Secretary of Labor, who has charge of immigration matters, must be strongly anti-radical.

President Gompers of the A. F. of L. made a strong plea before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday for the release of all the political prisoners. He said that he himself had been strongly pacifist until the war approached America, and he could conceive of his having failed to "see the light," and of his having continued to oppose all war. If he had then been locked up, he argued, he certainly should have been liberated when the emergency was past. Otherwise the fundamental liberties of America had been violated, and Americanism had lost much of its value. He added the suggestion that the nation-wide disaster of unemployment "sets an interrogation point after every claim of civilization," and makes the existence of political prisoners the more serious a cause of industrial and social unrest.

Mr. Gompers is about to start for Mexico City, where he will preside at the Third Pan-American Labor Congress, which opens its sessions January 10. One of the resolutions likely to be brought up at the start of the congress and adopted without dissent will call upon President-elect Harding to withdraw American armed forces from Santo Domingo and permit that republic to resume its own government. Two Santo Dominican delegates to the Mexico City congress of labor are now in Washington. Fourteen republics will be represented in the gathering.

U. S. GOODS CHEAPER

Just when certain employers are preparing to chorus that high wages in this country make it impossible to compete with Europe, along comes a Frenchman and discords the chant. The offender is J. A. M. de Sanchez of the French commission in the United States, who writes on the opportunities for American goods in the French market. He says:

"A list of 21 articles were made (all of which are produced in England, Belgium, Italy and the United States) and the comparative prices in francs f. o. b. Paris was obtained. It was found that the average prices of the American products were lower than those of Belgium and England, for the same products, and only about 3 per cent. higher than those of Italy. It was further found, with the exception of two of the products, the quality of the American goods was at least 10 per cent. higher than those of the other three countries."

THE WORLD'S DEBT

The National City Bank of New York states that the national debts of the world now approximate $265,000,000,000 as against $44,000,000,000 at the beginning of the great war. Interest charges are now $9,000,000,000 per annum as against about $1,750,000,000 in 1913. Per capita indebtedness has increased approximately from $27 to $150 during this time.

Analyzing this national world debt, Mr. O. P. Austin, statistician for the bank, points out that the chief increase is in the debts of a dozen countries and colonies participating in the war.

The aggregate debts of the European countries as a whole grew from $32,000,000,000 at the beginning of the war to $184,000,000,000 at the date the armistice was signed, and to $223,000,000,000 at the latest available date. The national debts of North America, including the United States and Canada, grew from $2,155,000,000 at the beginning of the war to $27,000,000,000 at the date the armistice was signed, and $29,946,000,000 at the present time, while those of South America, Asia, Africa, and Oceanica combined increased from $8,500,000,000 in 1913 to $12,750,000,000 in 1919. In round figures $220,000,000,000 has been added to the world's national indebtedness since the European war started and $200,000,000,000, or more than nine-tenths was created by the seven great countries participating in the war—Great Britain, France, Russia, the United States, Italy, Germany and Austria-Hungary.

Mr. Austin calls attention to the fact that part of this "appalling" increase in the national indebtedness is attributable to inflation due to the enormous issues of paper currency. It accounts, however, for only a small fraction of the total increase.

The debts of the newly-created nations cannot be stated since the figures have not been prepared. The discussion of national debts is not accurate, however, nor exact without recognizing the existing tremendous inflation. Thus three years or so ago, the wealth of the United States was estimated at $250,000,000,000. By assuming that the purchasing power of the dollar has shrunk to 50 cents, Representative Ackerman recently estimated our national wealth at $500,000,000,000, which would reduce our national debt to 4.9 per cent. of our national wealth, while Austria-Hungary's debt is twenty-six times its national wealth, or 2,600 per cent. thereof. Germany's national debt is more than three times its estimated national wealth, or 3,125 of the national wealth.

It is not inappropriate to remember that the Allies have talked of compelling Germany to pay an indemnity 50 per cent. greater than her present national wealth, and even to-day some of them seriously discuss making her pay an indemnity equal to her estimated wealth. The figures on the world's national debts show that any talk of extremely high indemnities to be exacted from Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, or any of the other nations with which we were at war is utter folly.

The essential thing to be done is to secure recognition by the nations of the world, that regardless of the apparent responsibility for starting the world war, the world, the United States included, is threatened with an absolute breakdown of the machinery for production and transportation which we have developed. This machinery is faulty, but capable of continuous improvement through evolution until it can function legitimately and to the advantage of the workers of all classes in every country of the world. To make it so function is the task to which a real League of Peoples of the world should devote its first and best efforts.

"We are a wonderful people! We are a lot of other things, but we don't believe in government interference with business except when we can make something at the Government's expense."

"Service Is Wanted," Justice Secondary

The Philadelphia Public Ledger declares that the public wants service and cheap goods, and that anyone who gets in the way of this demand will be flattened out.

The editorial is a blunt defense of "can't-strike" laws and no time is wasted on the claim that "the public will insist on justice," which is usually made by anti-strike advocates.

"The American people want service and goods—better, swifter, cheaper service and better, more plentiful and, hence, cheaper goods," says this publication. "Any men or set of men, be they capitalists, managers, workers or labor leaders who deliberately get in the way of this popular demand had far better put themselves in the path of the heaviest 'flier' on the Pennsylvania railroad."

The editor says workers must make out a strong case if the public is to respond—but workers must not inconvenience the public.

Between the lines is the inference that the public will not interest itself in the wrongs of workers unless they take such action that will force the public to move.

After declaring that cheapness and not justice must be the standard in production the editor makes this significant statement:

"Unionism is the sole bulwark against a revolution-breeding tyranny of frequently soulless capital" and "it is the typical American shield from the insanity of Bolshevism."

The editorial illustrates a man's attempt to have his cake and eat it.

'Rah for "Democracy."

"The supreme test of democracy" is the way one feverish press agent refers to the company "union" of the Riverside and Dan River (Va.) cotton corporation.

This "union" is organized along lines similar to the Federal Government. The house has 184 members, elected by the wage earners. The senate has 84 members, who are appointed. They are overseers and foremen. The cabinet, which has the power to veto any action by the house and senate, is composed of six officials of the company, headed by President Fitzgerald.

Under this system the workers may instruct their representatives in the house to take certain action. The measure must then run the gauntlet of small bosses in the senate and, if successful, then receive the approval of the company officials.

Labor News

Building trade unions and contractors in Denver have agreed to continue the 1920 wage rate during 1921. These workers are strongly organized, hence the absence of wage reduction talk.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has joined the list of international organizations that own their own homes. The garment workers have purchased a four-story building in New York City for $55,000 and will expend $50,000 in fitting it for the various activities of this organization.

Organized miners of Illinois have invested $125,000 in the Central States Co-operative Wholesale Society. The society retails to the numerous co-operative stores in Illinois and adjacent States. Its volume of business annually totals millions of dollars. The headquarters of the society is at East St. Louis, Ill., where it owns large warehouses, side tracks and other equipment.

The United States Supreme Court has upheld lower Federal courts in quashing indictments against several members of the mob that deported 1,150 workers from Bisbee, Arizona, in July, 1917. The Federal courts held that the indictments interfered with the police powers of Arizona and that Federal statutes did not apply. Arizona courts have dismissed indictments against the mobbers and the Supreme Court's decision closes Federal courts to the victims.

A wage reduction of 35 per cent. for its unorganized employes is announced by the Wolverine Brass Company of Grand Rapids, Mich. The company justifies its act by the claim that the price of lumber and pork has been reduced. The workers agree that the price paid to farmers for their pork has been reduced, but retailers seem to be unaware of this fact. The workers ask the company if its reference to lumber implies that they shall eat sawdust the coming winter.

In urging higher wage standards for employes of the forest service, Chief Forester Greeley says, in his annual report, that resignations last year have threatened to demoralize the service. "The real injury from low salaries is not to employes of the government, who can take care of themselves by seeking other positions but to the Government itself." The report states that capable woodsmen can no longer be secured at pre-war rates, and that filling their places with unseasoned men may be responsible for fire losses greater than the cost of capable men.

The recent announcement by officials of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union that wage reductions would be resisted, and that manufacturers have other ways to economize, recalls a report on the price of shoes made last year by the Federal Trade Commission. In a report to Congress the commission stated that the larger packers control the hide supply and have taken excessive profits and passed increased costs to subsequent steps in manufacture and distribution; that the tanner has taken exceptional profits; that the manufacturer of shoes has taken unusual margins, and that the price charged by the retailer is not justifiable, each factor in the industry adding to the burden he had to bear before he passed it on to the next

SEAMEN, have you got a copy of Axtell's new book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen"? It deals with income tax, how to become a citizen, contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and amendments, the famous Thirteenth Amendment, declaring that men shall not be compelled to do involuntary servitude under the laws of the United States; a history of the great fight made by organized seamen of America for liberty, how that liberty was obtained and is now expressed in our statutes and is buttressed by the foundation of our Government itself, the Constitution of the United States. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States. It contains a complete digest of the Statute of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other; the subject of wages, overtime, salvage, personal injury, discharge in foreign ports, wrongful and proper; questions of discipline; rights and duties of consuls are fully set forth in this little volume of one hundred pages.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,
> FRANK MANNING,
> Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Home News

A portion of the Port Arthur Canal Co.'s sheds at Port Arthur, Tex., was wrecked by a tornado Nov. 27. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

Reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission from practically all the large railroads indicate that the roads as a whole fell considerably short in October of earning that month's pro rata share of a year's income that will provide 6 per cent. interest to stockholders. Under the Cummins-Esch law the roads have a free hand in spending money, and if their income is not sufficient the law provides that the Government shall make good the deficit to stockholders.

"Prices of cattle as well as wholesale prices of beef, in all grades up to the prime grades, are lower today than since 1911, yet the consumer is paying virtually war-time prices for these grades of beef," declared Frank B. McClain, State fair price commissioner of Pennsylvania. "If there ever was a class of merchants," said the commissioner, "who justly could be charged with extorting almost criminal profits from the public, it is the retail meat dealer of today."

In his annual report Secretary of the Treasury Houston recommends an increase from 4 per cent. to 6 per cent. in the tax on incomes of $5,000 or less. Under the present law an unmarried man must pay a 4 per cent. tax on income above $1000 annually, and a married man 4 per cent. on income above $2,000 with $200 exemption for each child. It is now proposed to raise this tax to 6 per cent. Additional taxes are recommended for amusements, tobacco and candy.

Between 300,000 and 400,000 children were deprived of schooling last year as a direct result of the shortage of teachers, according to estimates by P. P. Claxton, Federal commissioner of education, in his annual report. No relief for the situation is seen by the educator, who added that while from 110,000 to possibly 150,000 new teachers would be needed during the coming year, "we shall have at the outside 30,000 prepared teachers to fill the vacancies, or a deficit of at least 80,000."

Institution of judicial proceedings against five organizations of farm implement manufacturers and dealers, and reopening of the Government's anti-trust prosecution of the International Harvester Company has been recommended by the Federal Trade Commission. In a report to the Senate, the commission asserted that during 1916-18, inclusive, more than 200 concerns manufacturing farm implements combined to fix prices, and that dealers cooperating had made agreements supporting the practice.

The Senate Committee on Reconstruction makes these recommendations to relieve the housing shortage: "Amendment of the transportation act to check issuance of 'exparte' orders by the Interstate Commerce Commission; abolition of the 'cost plus' contract system and establishment by States and cities of trade schools for building apprentices; creation of a Federal consulting bureau; revision of the tax system to encourage investment in homes and to grant for a limited period tax exemption to real estate mortgages."

Domestic and Naval

The motor schooner "Kirketind" has been renamed the "William Donovan," and will be converted into a coastwise lumber carrier with sail power only.

The British tank steamer "Euplectela," 3,783 tons gross, 2,360 net, carries 5,740 tons dead weight on 25.4 feet draft, built at Newcastle in 1894, and owned by the Anglo Saxon Petroleum Company, London, is reported sold to Spanish owners for about £40 per ton deadweight.

The Norwegian steamship "Kalfond," 1,210 tons gross, 748 net, carries about 1,800 tons dead weight, built at Dundee in 1900, and owned by the Breifonds Damps. Akties (Sigval Bergesen, manager), Stavanger, is reported sold to Greek owners for about £40,000.

The Dutch marine insurance companies Orion and Bato have gone into liquidation and further failures are expected. The first-named company owes Fl. 40,989 and the latter Fl. 81,066. The Dutch company de Ijsel has stopped writing and is expected to liquidate.

It seems that even coal is now receiving the attention of cargo thieves. According to a report printed in the Rotterdam Courant, thousands of tons of German coal barged down the Rhine have been stolen and covered with stones in order to hide the thefts.

A report from the headquarters of the Shipping Board in Washington stated that there are 125 large steamers tied up on the Atlantic seaboard. Of this number fully eighty-five are of the Great Lakes type, which are employed in the coastwise business and in the Atlantic, Gulf and West Indies limits.

In view of the good progress made in securing subscriptions to the stock of the Kennebec Navigation Company, the latter concern has secured an extension until February 1, 1921, of its option on the steamers "City of Bangor," "City of Rockland," "Wiwurna" and "Catherine" of the Eastern Steamship Lines.

The steamship "H. F. Dimock," 2,625 tons gross, 1,786 net, carries about 2,000 tons dead weight, 13½ knots speed, built 1884, and the steamship "Herman Winter," 2,625 tons gross, 1,768 net, carries about 2,000 tons dead weight, 14 knots speed, built 1887, are reported sold by public auction at Mobile, Alabama, to C. L. Dimon, New York, for $87,500.

It is announced in Strasbourg that the suppression of the surtax on goods in transit through Antwerp by water to Strasbourg applies not merely to goods destined for consumption in Alsace-Lorraine, but to all goods imported into France by way of Strasbourg. This means that the whole of Eastern France can be provisioned via Antwerp without payment of the surtax, provided the goods are sent by way of the Rhine and the port of Strasbourg.

After much uncertainty and anxiety on the part of the Globe Line, her owners, the "Mount Rainier" finally reached Buenos Aires. She was under sail all the way, as her Diesel engines were out of commission when she left Key West. The "Mount Rainier" is the ship as to which the sensational statement was made to the Walsh Investigating Committee that her captain had stolen her and intended to sell her on the west coast of Africa.

News from Abroad

A significant sidelight on the state of British shipbuilding is afforded by the decision of Renwick & Dalgleish, Ltd., to indefinitely postpone the opening of their new shipyard at Hebburn, on the Tyne. The yard covers a big site, is well laid out, and admirably equipped on modern lines, but shipowners are not placing orders.

An increase of 110 per cent. is reported in the cost of tobacco to British consumers over 1914 costs. This, however, includes a 122 per cent. jump in duty. A selling price of 10 shillings, 8 pence per pound for ordinary tobacco represents about 8 shillings in tax. Wholesale profits are estimated to have been about 4½ per cent. on turnover and the retail profits range from 22½ to 33 1/3 per cent.

In an effort to meet current expenses a law is now going through the Chilean Congress which provides for the emission of from 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 pesos of additional paper money; to be redeemed in five years' time. Hence a depreciation in exchange has been under way, brought about not only by unfavorable foreign trade conditions, but also by a lack of confidence in the paper currency.

The Finnish steamship company Undenkompagni Valtameri Laiva announces the establishment of a regular service between Finland and New York. The company has recently acquired the steamship "Valtameri," which will make four round voyages per annum without calling at intermediate ports. She will carry a general cargo and about 100 passengers. The company has a capital of 10,000,000 Finnish marks.

All foreigners who reside or stay in Riga, with the exception of those belonging to the following categories, must pay a tax for the benefit of the city: Members of foreign diplomatic missions in Latvia; members of foreign relief missions; military persons who stay in Riga by order of their Government; persons ordered by the Government of Latvia or communal institutions to reside in Riga—professors, engineers, financiers, or other experts; persons who live continually over three months during a year in Latvia and who are registered to pay income tax, and persons under 18 years who have no income. A foreigner may depart only after having paid taxes and by proving it with a receipt.

As an indication of the extraordinary change of the shipping business of the port of Hamburg in the last seven years, it is interesting to note that in 1913 there were 116 German lines using the port and 51 foreign companies; to-day there are only six German lines and 37 foreign lines. Many foreign nations have been in a hurry to install their interests in a port where they were led to believe there would be plenty of business owing to the disappearance of the great German lines, and the result has been that there is now, if anything, more tonnage than the business of the port warrants. But the marked development of trade at this point in Germany leads to the conclusion that cargoes will very soon catch up with the supply of ships. Non-German shipping companies now represented at Hamburg are as follows: British 9, Scandinavian 5, French 4, and American 4.

Established 18[illegible]

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

FOR THE SEAFARING PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.
Official Paper of the International Seamen's Union of America.

SEAMEN'S ACCIDENT INSURANCE

Text of New Federal Seamen's Compensation Act

Immediate passage by Congress of bills now pending to extend accident insurance to seamen and longshoremen was urged at the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Association of Labor Legislation, just held at New York.

The bills, recently introduced in Congress, provide a uniform Federal Compensation plan for all American seamen and deal with longshoremen (in a separate measure) by restoring to them the protection of existing State Compensation laws.

The bill published herewith is known as the Federal Seamen's Compensation bill. It was drafted by the American Association for Labor Legislation upon the request of many interested parties.

Sixty-sixth Congress, Third Session. S. 4708. In the Senate of the United States. December 23, 1920.

Mr. Johnson of California introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill to provide compensation for seamen injured and the dependent of seamen killed in the course of employment, to create a Federal seamen's insurance fund, and for other purposes.

Whereas the success of the American merchant marine and the prosperity of the commerce of the United States depend in a large measure upon the well-being of masters and crews of American vessels; and

Whereas justice demands that the men themselves when injured and the families of those who lose their lives in the service be put on as favorable a footing as land workers; and

Whereas all the great maritime nations of the world provide compensation for the masters and members of the crews of their merchant vessels; therefore

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, ARTICLE I.

Short Title and Definitions.

Section 1. That this Act may be cited as the Federal Seamen's Compensation Act.

Sec. 2. That when used in this Act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(a) The singular includes the plural and the masculine includes the feminine and neuter.

(b) The term "seaman" includes any person employed by the shipowner to serve normally on board a vessel, including the master, pilot, apprentices, musicians, stewards, and servants, but does not include persons employed in loading, unloading, repairing, refitting, or otherwise, and who are not engaged as members of the crew. It does not include (1) an officer or member of the crew of a vessel lawfully under a foreign flag, or (2) a person commissioned or enlisted in the Army or Navy, or (3) a member of the Coast Guard and Revenue Cutter Service of the United States, or (4) a person employed on a vessel of war or vessel of the Coast Guard or Revenue Cutter Service of the United States.

(c) The term "employer" means a person, partnership, association, or corporation, including the United States, any Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, or a corporation whose capital stock is wholly or partly owned by the United States, employing one or more seamen, and in the case of persons compensated by a share in the proceeds of a voyage or the earnings of a vessel, the owner pro hoc vice.

(d) The term "injury" means an injury sustained by a seaman in the course of employment, and includes injuries caused by the willful act of a third person directed against a seaman because of his employment, but does not include injuries caused to the seaman by his willful intention to injure himself or to injure another. If an exemption is claimed under this subdivision, the burden of proof shall be on the person or fund claiming it.

(e) The term "earnings" includes (1) gratuities received in the course of the employment from persons other than the employer, and (2) reasonable value of board, lodging, fuel, and other advantages, which can be estimated in money, which the seaman receives from the employer as a part of his remuneration. The commission may from time to time fix the weekly value of such items.

(f) The term "weekly earnings" shall be computed in such manner as is best calculated to give the average weekly earnings of the seaman in the period during which he has been employed during the twelve months preceding his injury; but where, by reason of the shortness of the time during which he has been in the employment, or of the terms of the employment, it is impracticable so to compute fairly the rate of remuneration, regard may be had to the average weekly earnings which, during the twelve months previous to the injury, were being earned by a person in the same or a similar grade, employed at the same or similar work, by the employer of the injured seaman, or, if there is no person so employed, by a person in the same grade, employed in the same class of employment and in the same district, but if a workman at the time of the injury is regularly employed in a higher grade of work than formerly during the year and with higher wages, only such higher wages shall be taken into consideration in computing his average weekly wages.

(g) The term "child" includes stepchildren, adopted children, posthumous children, and illegitimate children acknowledged by the employe, but does not include married children unless wholly dependent on him. "Grandchild" means a child as above defined of a child as above defined. "Brother" and "sister" include stepbrothers and stepsisters, half brothers and half sisters and brothers and sisters by adoption, but do not include married brothers nor married sisters unless wholly dependent on him. "Child," "grandchild," "brother," and "sister" include only persons who at the time of the death of the deceased seaman are under eighteen years of age or over that age and mentally or physically incapable of self-support.

(h) The term "parent" includes step-parents and parents by adoption, parents-in-law if dependent on the injured seaman, and any person who for more than three years prior to the death of the deceased employe stood in the place of a parent to him.

(i) The term "widow" includes only the decedent's wife living with or dependent for support upon him at the time of his death; or living apart for justifiable cause and by reason of his desertion.

(j) The term "widower" includes only the decedent's husband, who, at the time of her death, lived with her and was dependent for support upon her.

(k) The terms "adoption" or "adopted" mean legal adoption prior to the time of the injury.

(l) The term "fund" means the Federal seamen's compensation fund.

(m) The term "commission" means the United States Employes' Compensation Comsion.

(n) The term "physician" includes "surgeon."

(o) The term "dependent" means dependent at the time of the injury.

ARTICLE II.

Compensation.

Sec. 201. Every seaman when employed by an employer subject to this Act who, after July 1, 1921, suffers injury shall, except as provided herein, be entitled to receive compensation as provided herein:

(a) Immediately after an injury sustained by a seaman and during the resulting period of disability the seaman shall receive all necessary medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies.

(b) During the first three days of disability the seaman shall not be entitled to compensation except as provided in the preceding paragraph.

(c) If the injury cause total disability the disabled seaman shall receive during such disability a weekly compensation equal to 66⅔ per centum of his weekly earnings.

(d) If the injury cause temporary partial disability the disabled seaman shall receive during such disability a weekly compensation equal to 66⅔ per centum of his loss in earning capacity.

(e) If the injury cause permanent partial disability the disabled seaman shall receive 66⅔ per centum of his weekly earnings, and there shall be paid to the seaman for the period named in the schedule compensation as follows:

Thumb: For the loss of a thumb, sixty weeks.

First finger: For the loss of a first finger, commonly called index finger, forty-six weeks.

Second finger: For the loss of a second finger, thirty weeks.

Third finger: For the loss of a third finger, twenty-five weeks.

Fourth finger: For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, fifteen weeks.

Phalange of thumb or finger: The loss of the first phalange of the thumb or finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger, and compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire thumb or finger. Where the injury results in the loss of more than one finger, compensation therefor may be awarded for the proportionate loss of the use of the hand thereby occasioned: Provided, however, that in no case shall the compensation awarded for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

Great toe: For the loss of a great toe, thirty-eight weeks.

Other toes: For the loss of one of the toes other than the great toe, sixteen weeks.

Phalange of toe: The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of said toe, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amount specified. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe. Where the injury results in the loss of more than one toe, compensation therefor may be awarded for the proportionate loss of the use of the foot thereby occasioned: Provided, however, That in no case shall the compensation awarded for more than one toe exceed the amount provided in this section for the loss of the foot.

Hand: For the loss of a hand, two hundred and forty-four weeks.

Arm: For the loss of an arm, three hundred and twelve weeks.

Foot: For the loss of a foot, two hundred and five weeks.

Leg: For the loss of a leg, two hundred and eighty-eight weeks.

Eye: For the loss of an eye, one hundred and twenty-eight weeks.

Loss of use: Permanent loss of use of a hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange. The loss of 80 per centum of the vision of the eye shall be considered to be the equivalent of the loss of the use of the eye, and the loss of binocular vision shall be considered to be equivalent to the loss of one eye.

Partial loss and partial loss of use: For the partial loss or the partial loss of the use of a hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange compensation therefor may be awarded for the proportionate loss or proportionate loss of the use of such hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange.

Amputations: Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a hand. Amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a foot. Amputation at or above the elbow shall be considered as the loss of an arm. Amputation at or above the knee shall be considered as the loss of the leg.

The compensation for the foregoing specific injuries shall be in lieu of all other compensation, except the benefits provided in this Act.

In case of an injury resulting in serious facial or head disfigurement the commission may, in its discretion, make such award or compensation as it may deem proper and equitable, in view of the nature of the disfigurement, but not to exceed $3,500.

Other cases: In all other cases in this class of disability, the compensation shall be 66⅔ per centum of the difference between his weekly wages and his wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise, payable during the continuance of such partial disability, but subject to reconsideration of the degree of such impairment by the commission on its own motion or upon application of any party in interest.

(f) The weekly compensation for total disability shall not be more than $25 nor less than $10, unless the seamen's weekly earnings are less than $10, in which case his weekly compensation shall be the full amount of his weekly earnings. The weekly compensation for any partial disability shall not be more than that proportion of $25 which his disability bears to total disability. In the case of persons who at the time of the injury were minors and who were not physically or mentally defective, the commission shall, on any review after the time when the weekly wage-earning capacity of such persons would probably, but for the injury, have increased, award compensation based on such probable weekly wage-earning capacity. If a seaman who has previously incurred permanent partial disability incurs a subsequent permanent partial disability such that the compensation payable for the disability resulting from the combined injuries is greater than the compensation which, except for the preexisting disability would have been payable for the latter injury, the seaman shall receive compensation on the basis of the combined injuries.

(g) If death results from the injury within six years, there shall be paid to the following persons for the following periods a weekly compensation equal to the following percentages of the deceased seaman's weekly earnings, subject to the modification that no compensation shall be paid where the death takes place more than one year after the cessation of disability resulting from such injury, or, if there has been no disability preceding death, more than one year after the injury—

1. To the widow, if there is no child, 35 per centum. The compensation shall be paid until her death or remarriage. In case of marriage, there shall be paid to her a lump sum equal to one hundred and four weeks' compensation.

2. To the widower, if there is no child, 35 per centum, if wholly dependent for support upon the deceased at the time of her death. This compensation shall be paid until his death or marriage.

3. To the widow or widower, if there is a child, the compensation payable under clause (1) or clause (2) and in additioin thereto 15 per centum for each child, not to exceed a total of 66⅔ per centum for such widow or widower and children. The compensation payable on account of any child shall cease when he dies, marries, or reaches the age of eighteen, or if over eighteen, and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support.

4. To the children, if there is no widow or widower, 25 per centum for one child and 15 per centum additional for each additional child, not to exceed a total of 66 per or each additional child, not to exceed a total of 66⅔ per centum, divided among such children share and share alike. The compensation of each child shall be paid until he dies, marries, or reaches the age of eighteen, or if over eighteen and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support.

5. To the parents, if one is wholly dependent for support upon the deceased seaman at the time of his death and the other is not dependent to any extent, 25 per centum; if both are wholly dependent, 20 per centum to each; if one is or both are partly dependent, a proportionate amount in the discretion of the commission. The above percentage shall be paid if there is no widow, widower, or child. If there is a widow, widower, or child, there shall be paid so much of the above percentage as, when added to the total percentage payable to the widow, widower, and children, will not exceed a total of 66⅔ per centum.

6. To the brothers, sisters, grandparents, and grandchildren, if one is wholly dependent upon the deceased seaman for support at the time of his death, 25 per centum to such dependent; if more than one are wholly dependent, 40 per centum, divided among such dependents share and share alike; if there is no one of them wholly dependent but one or more partly dependent, a proportionate amount, in the discretion of the commission. The above percentages shall be paid if there is no widow, widower, child, or dependent parent. If there is a widow, widower, child, or dependent parent, there shall be paid so much of the above percentages as, when added to the total per centage payable to the widow, widower, children, and dependent parents, will not exceed a total of 66⅔ per centum.

7. The compensation of each beneficiary under clause 5 may continue until such depedent parent dies, marries, or ceases to be dependent, and the compensation of each beneficiary under clause 6 shall be paid until he, if a grandparent, dies, marries, or ceases to be dependent, or, if a brother, sister or grandchild, dies, marries, or reaches the age of eighteen, or, if over eighteen and incapable of self-support, becomes capable of self-support.

8. Upon the cessation of compensation under this Act to or on account of any person for any reason other than the payment of a lump sum in settlement, the compensation of the remaining persons entitled to compensation for the unexpired part of the period during which their compensation is payable shall be that which such persons would have received if they had been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the decedent's death.

9. In case there are two or more classes of persons entitled to compensation under this section and the apportionment of such compensation, above provided, would result in injustice, the commission may, in its discretion, modify the apportionment to meet the requirements of the case.

10. If there be no guardian if a minor dependent to whom compensation is payable, the amount payable on account of such minor dependent may be paid to any surviving parent or to such other person as the commission may order and direct, and the commission may require any person other than a guardian to whom it has directed compensation for a minor dependent to be paid to render as and when it shall so order accounts of the receipts and disbursements of such compensation and to file with it a satisfactory bond in a sum sufficient to secure the proper application of the money received by such person.

11. In computing compensation in fatal cases the weekly earnings of the deceased shall be considered to have been not more than $37.50 nor less than $15, but the total weekly compensation shall not exceed the actual average weekly earnings of the deceased.

12. Payment of benefits in case of death in good faith to a person subsequent in right to another or others shall protect and discharge the fund unless and until such person or persons prior in right shall have given him notice of his or their claim. In case the fund is in doubt as to the respective rights of rival claimants, it may apply to the court to decide between them.

Such proceedings may be instituted in any district in which any one of the claimants is found and process shall be served in the usual manner upon such of them as may be found in that district, and process shall be served upon those not found therein by notice sent by registered mail to their last known place of residence and, in addition, by the publication of such notice in some newspaper of general cvirculation published in the district where the procedings are instituted not less than four times in two consecutive weeks.

(h) In case of death or of permanent total or permanent partial disability, if the weekly payment to the beneficiary is less than $2 a week, or if the beneficiary is or is about to become a nonresident of the United States, or if the commission determine that it is for the best interest of the beneficiary, the liability for compensation to such beneficiary may be discharged by the payment of a lump sum equal to the present value of all future payments of compensation computed at 4 per centum true discount compounded anuually or by the purchase of an equivalent annuity. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the Survivorship Annuitants Mortality Table, and the probabilities of remarriage according to the remarriage tables of the Dutch Royal Institution, and interest at 3½ per centum per annum.

(i) Compensation to aliens not resident, or about to become nonresidents, of the United States or Canada, shall be the same in amount as provided for residents, except that dependents in any foreign country shall be limited to surviving wife and child or children, or if there be no surviving wife or child or children to surviving father or mother or grandfather or grandmother, whom the employe has supported, either wholly or in part, for the period of one year prior to the date of the accident, and except that the commission may, at its option, or upon the applicationo of the fund, commute all future installments or compensation to be paid to such aliens by paying or causing to be paid to them one-half of the commuted amount of such future instalments of compensation as determined by the commission.

(j) If death results from the injury within six years, burial expenses not to exceed $200 shall be paid. Such sum shall be paid to the dependents or to the personal representatives of the deceased if they or he shall have actually paid the said expenses, but if such expenses have not actually been paid they shall be paid directly to such person or persons as shall have furnished the burial under circumstances entitling them to recover the cost thereof from the estate of the deceased.

(k) A seaman who as a result of injury is or may be expected to be totally or partially incapacitated for a remunerative occupation, and who, under the direction of the Federal or an appropriate State Board for Vocational Education, is being rendered fit to engage in remunerative occupation, shall, upon application to the fund, receive additional compensation necessary for his maintenance, but such additional compensation shall not exceed two-thirds of his earnings, or $20 a week.

Sec. 202. Any assignment of a claim for compensation under this Act shall be void, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

Sec. 203. Claims of attorneys for service under this Act shall be a lien on compensation only if approved by the commission.

Sec. 204. Nothing in this Act shall limit or affect the existing right of an injured seaman to transportation, earnings, care, and cure, but a seaman shall not be entitled to medical benefit under this Act while he is receiving, or would, except for his own refusal, be receiving, the equivalent thereof as cure, and that he shall not be entitled to any cash benefit while entitled to earnings provided that he shall receive any part of the medical benefit under this Act to which he is not entitled to receive as cure.

Sec. 205. The right and remedies herein granted for injury shall exclude all other rights and remedies of an injured seaman, his personal representative, dependents, or next of kin at common law, in admiralty or otherwise, against his employer or his vessel on account of such injury; but nothing in this Act shall be construed to relieve an employer from criminal prosecution for failure or neglect to perform any duty imposed by law.

Sec. 206. Any sums paid to a seaman, or in case of death to his dependents, peronal representatives or next of kin, by an employer by reason of the judgment of any duly authorized public official in any foreign country, on account of an injury, shall be credited on ac-

Blacklist is Based on Greed

Defenders of steel oligarchy "explain" this trust's refusal to sell its products to contractors who employ union labor.

"Steel owners have taken a leaf out of organized labor's book," they say. "Labor often refuses to work with non-unionists."

There is no comparison between the motives or the methods of organized labor and Garyism.

The blacklist operates secretly. The leader of this sinister band in the employ of steel is now under indictment in New York City because he refuses to acquaint a lawful commission with his trust connections.

The strike is open. It is subject to the white glare of publicity.

The steel trust bases its blacklist on a desire for cheap labor, which means more profits.

The unionist strikes to hold his living standards. The fact that steel prefers non-unionists justify his fears that he can not hold his gains and work with those who decline to aid him in maintaining wage scales and working conditions.

To the steel owner, less profits do not mean less milk and warm clothing for his babes and family, but that's what less wages mean to the worker.

To say there is similarity between steel's quest for profits and the unionist's refusal to work with non-unionists is to ignore morals, ethics and elemental justice.

To Garyism labor power is but a thing, merchandise, a commodity, as are ships, blast furnaces and railroads.

This is the far-flung cry of the Egyptian task master, the Roman slave holder and feudal lord.

Against this theory the unionist hurls his challenge of manhood: Labor power is inseparable from life.

A complete man must have intellect, will, spirit and physical strength. These, co-ordinated, mean labor power. He who controls labor power owns the man.

To live, to be free, workers must control their labor power, themselves. To permit others to do so is to surrender every aspiration for a complete life.

Steel and its kind demand this control, although they are less frank than the ancients.

Organized labor denies this control, and around the difference can be traced the opposition of Garyism to trade unionism.

Agitate! Educate! Organize!

Opinion "Molder" is Blind to Facts

"There are few literate Americans so poorly informed," writes President Gompers in American Federationist, current issue, on the charge made by Frank Munsey, eastern newspaper publisher, that "the growing menaces of our country" are "organized labor, bolshevism, socialism and I. W. W.ism."

"It is almost impossible to deal with such utterances in a spirit of moderation," says President Gompers. "It is difficult to resist the use of the only kind of language that could possibly make an impression on a mind so closed to truth and so blind to all the great acts of the hour.

"Mr. Munsey's misstatements are so glaring and so bold that one wonders whether he is merely deceiving others or whether he is only deceiving himself.

"Can it be that he actually believes American trade unionism, bolshevism, socialism and I. W. W.ism to be identical? Can it be that he is so profoundly ignorant of the differences between the constructive and evolutionary philosophy of the American trade union movement and the revolutionary and destructive theories of fantastic aggregations which he couples in the same breath with organized labor?

"It is gratifying at least to know that if these are the views of Mr. Munsey, there are few literate Americans who are so poorly informed, and still fewer who make bold to so publicly betray their lack of information.

"Perhaps, since that is the case, it may be as well to let the public be the judge, merely adding here that he has now successfully carved his niche alongside the niches occupied by Gary and the types of reactionary industrial autocrats who believe they have the mandate for oppression, repression and mastership of the masses of our people."

"There is a philosophy in the spirit of freedom and justice not yet understood by Mr. Munsey and his prototypes."

Oppose Compulsion

"Doubtful value or expediency" is the reference to compulsory arbitration laws by W. F. Woodward, chairman of the Oregon State Board of Conciliation, in his annual report.

"The application of force does not tend to allay distrust or promote good feeling," he says. "In so far as may be possible in all these issues which may arise, the spirit of reasonableness, the voluntary approach from each side, through and to a medium dispassionate, sympathetic and anxious to serve, wherein judicial status, legal phraseology and technicalities are, as far as may be possible, discarded, lends itself more quickly to a spirit of all the parties concerned in the questions at issue, as well as the body which weighs the merits and demerits of the questions raised, which promotes a spirit of good feeling.

"To be sure, witnesses are sworn, there is much documentary matter presented and some forms incident to courts which make for courtesy and orderly procedure are observed. But other than these, the hearings of the Board of Conciliation on all questions have been marked by an informality which has hastened final decision with a degree of resultant satisfaction, which is attested by the fact that rehearings have been asked for in but two instances."

The history of the labor movement will repeat is successes oftener and its failures seldomer whenever the laborer learns to accept experience as a gift from the past instead of insisting upon purchasing it with his own good will.

World's Workers

Cable dispatches from Berlin announce the death of Carl Legien, president of the German Federation of Trade Unions. Deceased was 60 years of age. In 1912 he visited the United States and toured the country under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor. He was secretary of the International Trade Union Secretariat, which later developed into the International Federation of Trade Unions. He was president of this organization when the world war started.

Refusal of the Norwegian government to accept voluntary arbitration to adjust grievances caused a strike on the Norwegian State railroads. The strike is complete and comprises all workers except station masters. It is estimated that more than 12,000 employes are directly affected. The strikers are distributed among three organizations, two of which are affiliated with the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions. The government is maintaining mail service with the aid of motor cars.

Objectors to the recent strike settlement among the Yorkshire Miners' Association were put in a ridiculous light because of the resignation of Herbert Smith, president of that organization. The resignation was submitted to a referendum vote, with the following result: Against resignation, 2667; for resignation, 46. It is stated that about one-fiftieth of the membership voted, but the result indicates the strength of a group that talks "revolution" and who can be depended to cast their ballot at every election.

In statistics printed by the municipal bulletin of Milan, Italy, it is shown there is an increase of 276.5 per cent in the cost of living from 1914 to 1920. Had the pre-war standard been maintained, the increase would be 341.18 per cent., says the bulletin. In 1914 the cost for maintaining a workman's family of five persons (man, wife, one child over 10 and two under 10), was 41 lire, or $7.79 in American money. In 1920 the cost of bare necessities had risen to 155 lire, or $19.45, and the cost of maintaining pre-war standards to 181 lire, or $34.39.

A central arbitration board has been created by the parliament of Sweden. The board consists of seven persons—three appointed by the government, two by the council of the Employers' Association and two by the Workmen's National Council. The object of the board is to render it easier for workmen and employers to have collective agreements correctly interpreted, thus obviating recourse to lockouts and strikes. Appeals to the board are to be voluntary, and the decision of the board will be final.

A definitive German text of the draft conventions and recommendations adopted at the first International Labor Conference held in Washington, 1919, will be published by the International Labor Office in the near future. An authoritative translation has been made necessary owing to the fact that the Swiss, German and Austrian Governments have each issued translations, which do not agree with each other on certain points. A commission, including a representative of the International Labor Office, was appointed by the three governments which has held seven meetings, and which has now agreed upon a German text.

PAINLESS PARKER'S GUARANTEE

By Painless Parker

THE size of my practice is a guarantee of the reliability of my dentistry. It is a great satisfaction to go to places where you have confidence in the management. You particularly cannot afford to have dental work done on the hit-and-miss plan. Dental work should never be left to chance. Poor dentistry is responsible for much poor health.

In our twenty-eight offices we treat a hundred thousand patients a year. Every possible thing is done to give every patient satisfaction. We don't feel satisfied until the patient is. We not only do fine work, but ask moderate prices for it.

The E. R. Parker System is the only way ever invented to raise the standards of dentistry and lower prices at the same time. Sailors' teeth examined free in any of my offices in the following cities:

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

The Moore Shipbuilding Company launched the "M. F. Elliott" at the Oakland yards on Jan. 10. The "Elliott" is a tanker of 75,000-barrel capacity and was built for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

The Japanese firm of Mitsui & Co. has arranged with the harbor authorities of Seattle for the use of the port commission docks for loading and discharging for a period of three years, with option to extend to six years.

Three concrete tankers built by the Shipping Board are being advertised for charter. They are the "Palo Alto," "Peralta" and the "Latham," all of 6500 deadweight tons and of class A-1E experimental. They are capable of developing ten and one-half knots. The "Latham" is at Galveston, but the remaining two are at San Francisco. The "Peralta" was previously reported sold to the Lincoln Steamship Company of New York. The Shipping Board, however, includes her in the list of three as open for charter, without explanation.

Two charters coming in a season of depression in shipping, were announced by parties concerned. The schooner "Taurus," 514 tons, was chartered by W. R. Grace & Co. from the Charles Nelson Co., to carry lumber from the north to Callao. The "Taurus" was formerly reported to have been chartered by J. J. Moore for a run to Australia, but this was canceled. The other charter was the motorship "Oronite," 1325 tons, by the Vacuum Oil Company, from A. F. Thane, to carry petroleum products in barrels and cases from San Francisco to Australia. The loading will begin in a few days.

The steamship "Queen," en route from San Francisco to Seattle, returned to San Francisco in tow of the tug "Hercules," after a 24-hour battle with heavy seas off Point Arena in which the lives of 200 passengers and crew were endangered. Breaking a crankshaft at the height of the northwest gale, the vessel tossed about helplessly until the steamer "Admiral Dewey," summoned by wireless, came to her rescue. The "Dewey" managed to get a line on the "Queen" and towed her for 25 miles until the line parted. The "Dewey" then stood by until the vessel was reached by the tug "Hercules," which towed her to San Francisco.

Negotiations for the purchase of two of the twelve German sailing ships which have been lying in the harbor of Santa Rosalia, Mexico, for the last six years are now under way between the Robert Dollar Steamship Company and the British Government. The vessels involved in the transaction are the barks "Hans," 2868 tons, and the "Thielbek," 2646 tons. According to Andrew Moran, an official of the Dollar company, representatives are now surveying the vessels in the Mexican port. Some time ago the Robert Dollar company was asked by the British Minister of Shipping to take charge of the German sailing ships allocated to Great Britain by the treaty of Versailles. Moran stated that the vessels will be towed here for reconditioning.

The Golden Gate Ferry Company, which plans to operate an automobile ferry between the foot of Laguna street in San Francisco and Sausalito, has been authorized by the State Railroad Commission to sell $1,000,000 in stock to secure funds with which to purchase the necessary boats and build required slips. The company plans to build two side-wheel steamers, capable of carrying eighty automobiles, at a cost of $650,000. These boats are expected to make the trip of 4½ miles in about 18 minutes. The Sausalito terminal is to be placed about 1200 feet south of the Northwestern Pacific ferry slip. The terminals at both sides of the bay are to cost $116,000. It is estimated by the company that operating expenses will be $262,000 a year, and income is estimated at $476,383 a year.

Resolutions for submission to the Pacific Coast Association of Port Authorities at its San Francisco meeting, January 17, indicative of the policy of uniform port charges favored by ports in this section, were adopted at a conference of the northwest section of the association at Seattle on January 7. The resolutions recommend uniform port charges for all Pacific Coast ports, subject to local conditions; handling of cargoes from ship hold to pile on wharf under one supervision, eliminating duplicate handling by dock operators from ship's sling to place of rest; absorption by the carrier of all wharfage, handling, loading and terminal charges, and extension from ten days to a period of one year of the time for application for through rates and privileges on all import cargoes.

The United States mail boat, "Pulitzer," with at least seven men on board, has been missing since December 15, and may have been lost in the Straits of Shelikof, Alaska, Secretary Payne was advised by Governor Riggs of Alaska. Both the Navy Department and the Coast Guard Service have been asked by Secretary Payne to send out searching vessels. The Government says the straits constituted one of the roughest stretches of water along the Alaskan coast, but that there was a possibility that the crew had landed at some Indian village and had not been able as yet to communicate with the outside world. The "Pulitzer" may have had some few passengers on board, the Governor's message said. The vessel plies regularly between Seward and Unalaska, a distance of 200 miles, and was last reported seen at Uyak, on Kodiak Island, just entering the Straits of Shelikof on December 15. She was due at Unga, December 18. Small boats attempting to navigate the rough waters of the straits on their way to Uyak reported they had seen no trace of her. The vessel was provisioned for about a week's cruise, it was said.

With the consignment of five more of the vessels owned by the United States Shipping board to Southampton Bay scheduled for this week, the new additions to the official marine "boneyard" of the Government will total nineteen freighters. The value of the vessels are estimated in excess of $40,000,000—the cost of their construction. The five freighters to be laid up this week are the "Fort Wayne," "West Ira," "West Cadron," "West Kebar" and the "West Honaker." The latter two crafts are new vessels built at the plant of the Los Angeles Drydock and Shipbuilding Company. The other three steamers were operating in the Oriental service for private owners under the managing agency agreement. A plan to permit families in the vicinity of Martinez to use the tied-up freighters for homes failed, due to the action of the Shipping Board in refusing sanction. It is stated that with the change in the administration at Washington, an investigation will be started to seek some plan whereby the nineteen vessels can again be placed in service.

Congestion of ships at both ends of the Panama Canal has become so acute that the Government will inaugurate a night quarantine service, according to word just received. Recently more than two score ships have been held at Balboa and Cristobal waiting to proceed through the waterway. The coal embargo at Panama, which had been in effect for the last four months, has also been lifted. During the period of the embargo vessels were supplied only with enough fuel to carry them to the nearest coaling port. In reference to the night quarantine service, the report states that vessels from ports not subject to a yellow fever qaurantine which pass the breakwater at Cristobal harbor before 10 o'clock at night will be boarded and passed by health officials, unless such inspection is definitely refused by the agent of the ships prior to the arrival at the canal. The same rule will apply to vessels arriving at Balboa on a line between San Jose and No. 2 buoy. The new quarantine practice was put into effect by Jay J. Morrow, acting governor of the canal zone.

A number of navy yard mechanics made the trip out to the Farallone Islands this week on the tug "Navigator" to install a new radio compass station to replace the plant recently destroyed by the heavy storm that visited the coast. Workmen attached to the yard radio station have in the past few months done much work on the California coast in the installation of the new radio compass stations, through which the ships of the Navy may obtain their bearings under any weather conditions, and the station at the Farallone Islands is considered one of the most important on the western seaboard. The operation when applied to the radio compass is as follows: The ship desiring bearings calls the compass station by wireless. The instrument at the station is adjusted so that the exact direction from which the call proceeds is noted. Consulting a chart, the angle of the direction from which the signal comes is figured out in degrees on a north-and-south basis. The degree reading is then wirelessed the ship. The commander usually has a good idea of how far out from the shore he is sailing, and can then on a chart lay down the angle existing between the ship and the station, and thus determine his approximate position. In a case where he can get in touch with two or more compass stations at the same time, the angle readings from each station can be plotted out, and the intersection point of the directions shown by the readings from the different stations determine the exact position of the ship. The time required to get a reading in this manner is from three to six minutes. Mare Island radio officials have proposed that an electro-magnetic cable be laid through the Golden Gate, which the ships might follow absolutely by the use of instruments upon the vessels. Plans for the proposed cable have been prepared by Commander H. M. McCormack, U. S. N., radio officer here, but no appropriations have been made available for the work. Such a device, it is said, would be invaluable to merchant ships as well as to the Navy, and it is possible that the next few years will see its installation.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1921.

VALEDICTORY.

The world does move!

Last week the JOURNAL came out in a new dress, i. e., book paper finally had to make way for the more inexpensive newsprint paper. And next issue the JOURNAL is to have a new editor.

After eight years of service as editor-in-chief the present incumbent has been retired. By a majority of 44 the members of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, who were sufficiently interested to express their choice for that particular job on the ballot, have decided to employ new talent. Well, these few words are written only to assure the readers of the JOURNAL that there is not a trace of rancor or bitterness in the heart of ye editor for having been relieved of the grave responsibility which that position carries with it.

It has been a genuine pleasure to work for the men who earn their livelihood upon the water. It was an honor to be the pupil of Walter Macarthur and it has been a real privilege to be enabled in the columns of this paper to expound the policies of that grand old man—Andrew Furuseth.

The whole history of the seamen's movement for collective self-help, better known as "unionism," has been inspiring, but the last eight years have been particularly so. During those eventful years the La Follette Seamen's Act was placed upon the statute books of America and American seamen were made free men. In the same period the membership of the International Seamen's Union of America has increased from less than 20,000 to 115,000. Wages and working conditions have improved approximately one hundred per cent. An International Seafarers' Federation was organized and the seamen of the world have endorsed the principles of the American Seamen's Act. On the Pacific Coast a Seafarers' Council has been formed and closer fraternal relations have been established between the licensed officers' associations and sailors', firemen's and cooks' unions.

In all of these momentous matters the JOURNAL has taken a direct and prominent part. So if results count for anything the retiring editor can have no reason for regrets.

No doubt, some of the younger generation of seamen have at times considered the editorial policy of the JOURNAL as old-fashioned. And ye editor rather proudly pleads guilty to that charge.

With voice and pen the present editor has demanded that agreements with employers are not mere scraps of paper. With still greater emphasis the O. B. U.'s and the I. W. W.'s have been denounced and their disruptive methods dissected. The many attempts by certain workers ashore to inveigle the seamen's union into ill-advised strikes and to enforce questionable boycotts on shipbuilders through the seamen's unions, have been vigorously opposed year in and year out. The columns of the JOURNAL have never been closed to any sort of constructive criticism but attacks, sneers or slurs at any religion or religious institutions have been denied publication. Seamen's "rights" have always been championed, but no effort has been spared to drive home the truth that rights and privileges cannot be maintained without the corresponding assumption of duties and responsibilities.

Perhaps this policy has not always been the most diplomatic or popular but it has been sincere and true to the high ideals of the pioneers who established this little paper more than thirty-three years ago. And if the writer were compelled to live the last eight years over again he would surely not do any different than the record shows.

To the host of good and forbearing friends in and out of the seamen's union movement who have made the retiring editor's life pleasant by helpful criticism and an occasional word of encouragement a debt of gratitude is hereby acknowledged.

Au Revoir!

ATTACKING THE INITIATIVE.

Due largely to the warning which California newspapers sounded, the attempt to break down the Initiative provision of the State Constitution, by requiring a 25 per cent. petition to initiate a measure affecting taxation, was defeated on November 2nd last, with a majority of 123,598 against it.

The vote opposing this measure approached half a million,—421,945; while the vote supporting it was only 298,347. This majority would have been greater had not a large number of voters, who have the utmost faith in the initiative, been led to believe that in voting for No. 4 they were voting against radical land reforms. Even so; the people of California have again gone on record, by an overwhelming majority, in favor of the Initiative in State government.

As will be recalled, the Initiative, Referendum and Recall were adopted by the people of California in 1911 by a vote of three to one. Because of this, government "of the people, by the people, for the people" became a reality in California, and the enemies of such government, believing in the "divine right" of the "powerful few," have never ceased to attack this provision, and every session of the Legislature, and recurring elections have seen attempts to break down and destroy these provisions, particularly that of the initiative.

In the last session of the Legislature the attempt was made to pass the very same amendment that the people so overwhelmingly defeated on November 2nd. It is reported that another attempt will be made in the present session.

The plan this time is to have all matters affecting taxation excluded from initiative prerogative on the ground that legislative measures affecting taxation are not subject to the referendum. Of course the thing that is sought is control of taxation, for control of taxation is control of State government.

The argument given is misleading and contains as little logic as any of the other proposals to take away from the people a fundamental and inherent right of self-government, and particularly in questions of taxation, the most important function of government.

To attack the Initiative, therefore, on this ground is but another disguised attempt to deprive the people of control of taxation. Surely no member of the present Legislature would vote for such a measure in the face of the overwhelming expression of the people which was registered at the last election.

HARMONY IN JAPAN.

Harmony has been reached among the organizations of seamen in Japan recently, so that out of 48 separate societies, 37 have decided to join the Yuaikai (the national federation of labor) and to form a branch of that society for seamen. The entire membership of the seamen's societies now numbers 60,000. At first there was an opposition to the idea of making the Yuaikai the center of the federation, but the objection was removed and the decision to amalgamate was reached on November 8, last.

The new federation of seamen will include 13 societies in Yokohama, 11 in Kobe, 5 in Osaka, 5 in Kyushu and other groups throughout the country, totaling 37 societies out of 48, the remaining 11 societies either having disbanded or disappeared. The membership of the federated societies will include about 20,000 sailors, about 30,000 from the engine room and about 10,000 from the stewards' department, totaling 60,000.

The presidents of the 37 societies and the chiefs of different sections of the societies met in a conference in Yokohama, on November 11, to perfect the affairs of the federation.

The Seamen's Federation of Japan will have its principal headquarters in Yokohama, which is near Tokyo, the capital, with branches in Kobe, Moji (or Wakamatsu), Otaru in Kokkaido, Dairen in Manchuria, Keelung in Formosa and other important points. It is expected, according to the Asahi, a Japanese newspaper, that the federation will work for the equalization of seamen's wages, so that low scale steamship companies will hereafter find it difficult to secure their crews.

Here's success to the new Japanese Seamen's Federation!

There may be much to arbitrate, but there never will be anything arbitrated between the strong and the weak.

LABOR AND THE CHURCHES.

One of the remarkable and encouraging developments of the times is the manner in which the churches are coming to the aid of labor in the war which has been declared by the employers of America.

Following the activities of the Interchurch World Movement in investigating the steel strike, the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare Council has issued a statement in which it declares that the attitude of employers against union labor "threatens the whole structure of industrial peace and order." The statement reads in part as follows:

The "open-shop" drive of certain groups of American employers is becoming so strong that it threatens not only the welfare of the wage earners but the whole structure of industrial peace and order. Employers sometimes favor the "open shop" because they do not want to be limited in the employment of men to union members. But the present drive is not of that kind. The evidence shows that in its organized form it is not merely against the "closed shop," but against unionism itself and particularly against collective bargaining. Of what avail is it for workers to be permitted by their employers to become members of unions, if the employers will not deal with the unions? The workers might as well join golf clubs as labor unions if the present "open-shop" campaign is successful.

The "open-shop" drive masks under such names as "The American Plan" and hides behind the pretense of American freedom. Yet its real purpose is to destroy all effective labor unions, and thus subject the working people to the complete domination of the employers. Should it succeed in the measure that its proponents hope, it will thrust far into the ranks of the underpaid body of the American working people.

The bishops of the National Catholic War Council, who issued the program of social reconstruction, said: "It is to be hoped that this right—the right of labor to organize and to deal with employers through representatives—will never again be called into question by any considerable group of employers." The archbishops and bishops of the United States in their pastoral letter proclaimed again "the right of the workers to form and maintain the kind of organization that is necessary and that will be most effectual in securing their welfare."

The unions were necessary even during the war, when working people found their labor in great demand. They are still more imperative now, and they must keep their strength and grow. Otherwise we shall see a repetition of the old bad days when the workers were utterly dependent upon their employers.

There is great danger that the whole nation will be harmed by this campaign of a few groups of strong employers. To aim now at putting into greater subjection the workers in industry is blind and foolhardy. The radical

During the war the national war labor board recognized and protected a genuine kind of "open shop," one which assured the non-union man freedom and the members of the union the right of collective bargaining. That is not the kind of "open shop" for which the drive is now being made.

Greetings and all good wishes to the delegates assembled at the Philadelphia convention of the International Seamen's Union of America, one hundred and fifteen thousand strong! My, how we have grown!

Chester H. Rowell of California, one of the Shipping Board Commissioners recently appointed by President Wilson, has resigned to become a member of the State Railway Commission of California.

The Senate Committee on Commerce has reported favorably the House bill providing for medals for heroic men of the American merchant marine during the war.

Approximately 200 steel cargo boats have been laid up by the Shipping Board to date as the result of the decline in freights, and more are to come, according to Admiral Benson, chairman of the Board.

DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

(By Andrew Furuseth)

"Based upon these principles, it is among our objects; to use our influence individually and collectively for the purpose of maintaining and developing skill in seamanship."—Preamble of Constitution.

It would be perfectly true to say that during the last 50 years the shipowners of the United States have followed a policy, the inevitable result of which was the destruction of skill in seamanship. In some mysterious way they evidently came to the conclusion that a seaman may be an unskilled man, and that profitable management consisted in having one or two, or in a large vessel perhaps four, skilled men, the rest to be unskilled but good "driving stock." In addition to this, it was thought profitable to get rid of the seamen while the vessels were lying in harbors, and to do as much of harbor work, by contract, as was fairly possible.

The result of this policy, which was fairly consistently followed on the Atlantic and the Lakes, was to create a personnel, especially in the steamers that were expected to do cleaning, scraping and painting, but who were not expected to do any work for the real upkeep of the vessel, her gear, or appliances. If a heavy line or a wire designed for mooring or towing purposes came on board a vessel, it usually came on board with an eye spliced in. The sailors were not supposed to know how to take soundings with a handlead. Shipowners appearing before committees of Congress were so accustomed to this idea of the seaman being unskilled that they were astonished when it was assumed that an able seaman should heave the lead and report the soundings correctly.

On the Pacific Coast the situation was different. The sailors were expected to be able to do any work in the handling of the ship's gear, or her appliances, and in the handling of cargo. If the sailor could not do this he made sometimes only half a trip, never more than one trip in the same vessel. As a result there developed on the Pacific Coast a highly skilled body of sailors. When in 1893 the sailors were locked out on the Pacific Coast a large number of them went deep water. The mate of a vessel which had shipped a full crew of coasting men was so astounded at their skill and the speed with which they worked in reefing off the running rigging and in bending sails, that he said, "I have a crew of boatswains." As the sailing vessel gradually passed away on that coast and small freight steamers took their place, the skill and speed with which the work was done was such that those vessels could transport cargo or freight at 30 or a higher percentage, of less cost than the same kind of work could be done on the Atlantic, and this in spite of the fact that wages were at least 50 per cent. higher.

Do shipowners of the United States really and truly desire to develop an American Merchant Marine and a sea power for America? If they do, they must be willing to create the unavoidable condition. There must first of all be developed masters who are highly skilled seamen and navigators and who know enough of national and international law to protect the ship; second, officers who can keep the vessel, her gear and appliances, in perfect working order; third, there must be able seamen who know their work and who are willing to do it. There must be engineers who can keep the engines in working order, and they must have with count of compensation payable hereunder for the same injury.

Sec. 207. Any seaman or any other person entitled to compensation under this Act shall, as a condition of receiving compensation under this Act for an injury, assign to the fund all causes of action in respect thereto against any person or thing other than the employer or vessel owned by him. The commission may prosecute or compromise any cause of action assigned to the fund and shall pay into the fund any amount recovered thereby.

ARTICLE III.

Procedure.

Sec. 301. The commission shall administer the Act and for this purpose (a) shall obtain necessary statements and other information; and (b) shall cause to be printed and furnished free of charge to any employer or seaman such blank forms as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this Act; and (c) shall assist disabled seamen to obtain appropriate training, education, and employment, to the end that they may be restored to industry and may co-operate with the Federal or any appropriate State Board for Vocational Education; and (d) may make necessary rules, regulations, and orders, including regulation of procedure before it or its deputies, and neither the commission nor its deputies nor any State commission or commissioner authorized by it shall be bound by common law or stautory rules of evidence, but may make investigation in such manner as in its judgment is best calculated to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties and to carry out justly the spirit of this Act; and (e) shall decide all questions arising under this Act.

Sec. 302. The commission may appoint—

(a) One or more deputy commissioners at such ports of the United States as it may deem necessary and may fix the limits of the jurisdiction of each deputy commissioner and fix his salary which shall not exceed $6,000.

(b) The commission may delegate to any deputy commissioner, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as it may from time to time prescribe, any of the powers, functions, or duties conferred or imposed upon the commission under the provisions of this Act, except in respect to the fund, and the deputy commissioner to whom such delegation is made may exercise the powers, functions, or duties thus delegated upon the commission under the provisions of this Act.

(c) The commission may authorize any State commission administering a workmen's compensation act to hear and determine claims for compensation under this Act, and in respect to such claims the State commission shall have the same powers as a deputy and its award shall be subject to appeal in the same manner as an award of a deputy.

Sec. 303. The commission, or any deputy commissioner by authority of the commission, shall have power to issue subpoenas for and compel the attendance of witnesses within a radius of one hundred miles from the place where a hearing is being held to require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses upon any matter within the jurisdiction of the commission.

Sec. 304. No person shall be required to attend as a witness before the commission or a deputy commissioner unless his lawful mileage and fee for one days attendance shall be first paid or rendered him.

Sec. 305. The witness fees and mileage shall be computed at the rate for witnesses in the court having jurisdiction on appeal, and fees and mileage for serving the petition or other papers shall be computed at the rate allowed for service of summons from such court in civil suits. Costs incurred may be taxed against either party, or apportioned between the parties, in the discretion of the deputy commissioner or of the court, as the case may be, and as the justice of the case may require.

If the commission or the deputy commissioner before whom any proceedings are brought determine that such proceedings have been brought, prosecuted or defended without reasonable ground, the whole cost of the proceedings shall be assessed upon the party who has so brought, prosecuted or defended them.

Sec. 306. In case of disobedience to a subpoena, the commission or the deputy commissioner issuing it, may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on, may in case of contumacy of refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any officer, agent, or employe of any corporation or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before the commission or the deputy, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Sec. 307. (a) Every injured seaman, and, in the case of death, a person entitled to compensation or some person on his behalf, shall as soon as possible after the injury give notice to the employer and to the commission or to a deputy commissioner. Notice shall be given by delivering it personally to the employer or to his agent and to a deputy commissioner, or by depositing it in the mails in an envelope properly stamped and addressed to the last known address of the employer or of his agent in the port at which the seaman is discharged and to the commission or to the deputy commissioner at such port.

(b) The notice shall state the name and address of the seaman, the time, place, nature and cause of the accident and the nature of the injury, and shall be signed by the seaman or by a person on his behalf, or, in the event of his death, by a person entitled to compensation or by a person on his behalf, and shall contain the address of the person signing the notice.

(c) Unless notice is given within the time specified, except as provided herein or unless the employer or a superior of the seaman has actual knowledge of the injury, no compensation shall be allowed; but the commission may allow compensation if notice is filed within one year after the injury.

(d) Every employer to whom such notice is given shall immediately notify the commission in a manner to be determined by regulation of the commission.

Sec. 308. No compensation under this Act shall be allowed to any person unless he or some one on his behalf shall, within the time specified in this section, make a written claim therefor. Such claim shall be made by delivering it at the office of the deputy commissioner—

(a) Within whose jurisdiction the injury happened; or

(b) If the injury happened at sea, and not in any port, whose jurisdiction covers the port in which the voyage ends; or

(c) In whose jurisdiction the claimant is domiciled.

The claim may also be made by depositing it in the mail properly stamped and addressed to the commission or to the appropriate deputy commissioner.

Every claim shall be made on forms furnished by the commission and shall contain all the information required by the commission. Each claim shall be sworn to by the person entitled to compensation or by the person acting on his behalf, and, except in case of death, shall be accompanied by a certificate of the seaman's physician stating the nature of the injury and the nature and probable extent of the disability.

All original claims for compensation for disability shall be made within sixty days after injury. All original claims for compensation for death shall be made within one year after the death. For any reasonable cause shown, the commission may allow original claims for compensation for disability to be made at any time within one year after injury. For any reasonable cause shown, the commission may waive the provisions of this section.

Sec. 309. The master of every vessel with a crew of five or more men shall post and keep posted in such part of the vessel as to be accessible to the crew a printed or typewritten notice in a form to be prescribed by the commission, which shall contain the provisions of this Act in respect to notice and claim for injury.

Sec. 310. The time within which claim for compensation must be made shall not run against an employe while he is entitled to wages under maritime law.

Sec. 311. (a) The deputy commissioner having jurisdiction shall, upon presentation of the claim by the beneficiary and upon the completion of any regulation or hearing provided by the regulation of the commission, determine and make a finding of facts thereon and deny or fix the amount of compensation which shall be paid from the fund unless an appeal is taken from the claimant to the commission as herein provided. Notice of the hearing shall be given to a representative of the fund as determined by a regulation of the commission, and the claimant may appear at any hearing before the commission in person or by counsel.

(b) Any claimant may appeal to the commission from the determination of the deputy commissioner within thirty days and the commission shall after consideration of the claim and after any other investigation or hearing ordered by it, make a finding of facts and affirm, make, or deny the award, or increase or decrease compensation.

(c) The commission may direct the deputy to certify to it the papers in any case pending before him and he shall thereupon suspend consideration thereof and the commission shall then proceed as in the case of an appeal by claimant.

Sec. 312. The jurisdiction of a deputy commissioner shall be continuous, and he may on his own motion or application of the beneficiary or of the fund by order diminish or increase the compensation previously awarded, or, if compensation has been refused or discontinued, award compensation. An appeal shall be allowed from any order of the deputy commissioner modifying or ending an award, as from the original award.

Sec. 313. (a) Any claimant who is dissatisfied with any award of a deputy commissioner or of the commission may file an action in the district court of the United States in the district in which the deputy commissioner was sitting when he made the original award. The suit shall be against the fund and service may be made on any deputy commissioner or on the commission or such other officer of the fund as may be provided by regulation of the commission.

(b) In such suit the findings of fact and the award of the deputy commissioner and of the commission, if the case has been appealed to the commission and the transcript of the testimony taken before the deputy commissioner, shall be filed in the clerk's office of such court, and the findings of facts shall be conclusive. The transcript of testimony so filed may be offered in evidence by either party in such suit.

(c) If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the deputy commissioner, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before him and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The deputy commissioner may modify his findings as to the facts, and make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive, and his recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order, with the return of such additional evidence.

(d) No deposit or bond for costs shall be required of the claimant.

(e) An appeal may be taken on questions of law only by writ of error to the circuit court of appeals in the circuit in which the decree was rendered, and the decision of said court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code. On writ of error taken by a claimant no security of the cost shall be required, and the payment of compensation shall be continued unless the district court shall order a stay.

Sec. 314. After the injury the seaman shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or one designated by the commission. The seaman may have a duly qualified physician, designated and paid by him, present, to participate in such examination. For all examinations after the first the seaman may in the discretion of the commission, be paid his reasonable traveling and other expenses and loss of wages incurred in order to submit to such examination. If the seaman refuses to submit himself for or in any way obstructs any examination, his right to claim compensation under this Act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases. No compensation shall be payable while such refusal or obstruction continues, and the period of such refusal or obstruction shall be deducted from the period for which compensation is payable to him.

In case of any disagreement between the physician making an examination on the part of the commission and the seaman's physician, the commission shall appoint an impartial physician, duly qualified, who shall make an examination.

Sec. 315. Where an injured seaman is discharged or left behind in an American territory or possession, or in a foreign country, depositions respecting the circumstances and nature of the injury may be taken upon the application of either party and with such notice to the opposing parties as the nature of the case may permit before the governor or his deputy, or any judge or magistrate in the American territory or possession, and by any American consular officer in the foreign country, and if so taken one copy shall be given to the seaman and one shall be transmitted by the person by whom they were taken to the commission, and such depositions or certified copies thereof shall in any proceedings under this Act be admissible in evidence.

ARTICLE IV

Federal Seamen's Compensation Fund

Sec. 401. There is hereby created in the Treasury a separate fund to be known as the Federal seaman's compensation fund and to be composed (a) of all payments into the Treasury to the credit of the fund, (b) of property and securities acquired by and through the use of moneys belonging to such fund, and (c) of interest earned upon moneys belonging to such fund and (d) of interest earned upon moneys belonging to such fund and deposited or invested as provided by this Act. The fund shall be maintained for the purpose of securing the payment and furnishing of the compensation provided by this Act. The fund and its accretions are hereby permanently appropriated for the payment of such compensation and for the payment of expenses as provided in this Act.

Sec. 402. The fund shall be administered by the commission. The Treasurer of the United States shall be the custodian of all moneys and securities of the fund, which moneys and securities shall be deemed not to be money or property of the United States, but to be held in trust for the fund; he shall give a separate and additional bond in the amount to be fixed and with securities to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Treasury, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his duty as custodian of the fund.

Advances to disbursing officers out of the fund shall be made on the order of the commission or a majority thereof.

Sec. 403. The Treasurer shall deposit the money of the fund in banks designated by the commission, which banks shall give bonds to guarantee such deposits in an amount to be fixed and with securities to be approved by the commission, and as to such deposits the Treasurer shall not be liable either personally or on his bond. Any portion of the fund which, in the opinion of the commission, is not needed for current requirements shall be invested by the Treasurer in such manner as the commission may determine.

Sec. 404. Neither the commission nor the United States shall be liable or responsible for the payment or furnishing of compensation beyond the extent of the fund.

Sec. 405. The commission shall have power to—

(a) Receive and receipt for payments required to be made into this fund by employers;

(b) Reinsure any risk or any part thereof;

(c) Sue and be sued under the name of "The Federal seamen's compensation fund" in any court in any action arising out of any act, obligation, or omission done, entered into, or omitted in connection with the administration, management, or conduct of the business or affairs of the fund, except that any claim in respect to compensation shall be settled as provided in this Act;

(d) Appoint such counsel, officers, experts, clerical and other employes as shall be necessary and fix their salaries and duties; but all such appointments, except counsel, shall be made from lists furnished by the United States Civil Service Commission, and the civil-service law shall apply as far as possible to all persons so appointed;

(e) Do any and all things reasonably necessary or convenient for the proper administration of the fund and the conduct of its business.

Sec. 406. The commission may delegate to any of the persons in its employment, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as it may from time to time prescribe, any of the powers, functions, or duties conferred or imposed on the commission under the provisions of this Act in connection with the administration and management of the fund, and the persons to whom such delegation is made may exercise the powers and functions and perform the duties delegated with the same force and effect as the commission might have done.

Sec. 407. The expense of administering the fund and of this Act, including salaries and traveling and other expenses of the deputy commissioners and other officials and employes, except the salaries and traveling and other expenses of the commissioners, shall be charged to and paid from the fund, and shall not be otherwise appropriated for by Congress.

Sec. 408. Every employer subject to this Act shall pay annually, or at periods fixed by the commission, into the insurance fund the premium determined and fixed by the commission for the seamen employed by him in an amount to be determined under the classifications, rules, and rates made and published by the commission; and a receipt or certificate certifying that such payment has been made shall be immediately mailed to such employer by the commission, which receipt or certificate, attested by the seal of the commission, shall be prima facie evidence of the payment of such premium. The commission may by regulation provide that premiums for the several classes of seamen as grouped according to hazard may fall due on different dates so as to distribute the business of the fund as evenly as possible throughout the year.

Sec. 409. (a) The commission shall classify seamen with respect to the degree of hazard in their employment and shall determine the risks of the different classifications and shall fix the rates of premium for each of such classifications sufficiently high to provide for the payment of compensation according to the schedules established by this Act and for the maintenance of adequate reserves and surplus by the fund to the end and that such fund may be kept at all times in a solvent condition.

(b) It shall be the duty of the commission, in the exercise of the powers and discretion conferred upon it, ultimately to fix and maintain, for each class of seamen, the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent insurance fund and the creation and maintenance of a reasonable surplus, after the payment of legitimate claims for compensation that it may authorize to be paid from the fund and the expense of administration thereof. In order that such object may be accomplished, the commission shall observe the following requirements in classifying seamen and fixing the rates of premiums for the risks of the same:

1. It shall keep an accurate account of the money paid in premiums by each of the several classes and the disbursements on account of compensation to employes thereof, and it shall also keep an account of the money received from each individual employer and the amount disbursed from the fund on account of compensation to the seamen of such employer.

2. Ten per centum of the money that is paid into the fund shall be set aside for the creation of a surplus until such surplus shall amount to the sum of $50,000, after which time the sum of 5 per centum of all the money paid into the fund shall be credited to such surplus fund until such time as, in the judgment of the commission, such surplus shall be sufficiently large to guarantee a solvent insurance fund.

3. In the event that the amount of premiums collected from any employer at the beginning of any premium period is ascertained and calculated by using the estimated expenditures of wages for the period of time covered by such premium payments as a basis, an adjustment of the amount of such premium shall be made at the end of such period, and the actual amount of such premium shall be determined in accordance with the amount of the actual expenditure of wages for such period.

Sec. 410. (a) If an employer shall default in any payment required to be made by him to the fund, the amount so due shall be collected by an action at common law or in admiralty, in the name of the fund as plaintiff, and it shall be the duty of the commission forthwith to cause to be brought against each such employer a civil action in the proper court for the collection for such amount so due, and the same when collected shall be paid into the fund, and such employer's compliance with the provisions of this Act requiring payments to be made to the fund shall date from the time of the payment of such money so collected.

(b) Any employer so in default after notice of default, and while such default continues, may be enjoined on the application of the commission by any district court having jurisdiction from carrying on his business, and any vessel owned by him shall be refused clearance by the collector of any port on application of the commission.

Sec. 411. (a) There shall be for the region composing the jurisdiction of each deputy commissioner an advisory committee of the fund to consist of not more than nine and not less than three members, who shall be elected for terms of three years by the employers subject to the Act in the region, at times and in a manner to be fixed by the commission by regulation.

(b) The committee shall meet regularly at least every three months, at a date to be fixed by the commission, and shall advise the commission in respect to any matter concerning the fund or its management.

(c) At one such meeting, to be known as the annual meeting, which shall be held as near the end of the fiscal year as possible, the annual accounts of the fund for the past fiscal year, a statement of its probable expense in the current fiscal year, and of the classes and premiums fixed by the commission, shall be laid before the advisory committee by the commission.

Sec. 412. There shall be a national advisory committee, which shall consist of a representative elected annually by each advisory committee, which shall meet annually in the District of Columbia on a date to be fixed by the commission by regulation, but which shall be not less than two or more than three months after the annual meeting of the advisory committees. The committee shall consider any matter referred to it by the commission or any advisory committee or brought up by its own members.

Sec. 413. The expenses of the advisory committee and of the national advisory committee, including traveling and hotel expenses of their members, shall be paid as other expenses of the commission, and the commission shall designate from its employes secretaries of the advisory committees and of the national advisory committee.

Sec. 414. Premiums in respect to seamen employed by any corporation in which the United States owns 51 per centum or more of the stock shall be payable in the same way as other expenses of operation of such corporation are paid. Premiums in respect to seamen subject to this Act and employed by the United States, any Territory, District, or any political subdivision thereof shall be paid as are other expenses of operation of the vessel for the service of which such seamen are employed.

ARTICLE V

Miscellaneous

Sec. 501. (a) Every employer shall furnish the commission, upon request, all information required by it to carry out the purposes of this act. In the month of June of each year, every employer subject to this act shall prepare and mail to the commission at its office a statement containing the following information: The number of seamen in his employ during the preceding year from July 1 to June 30, inclusive, classified as required by the commission; and the aggregate amount of wages paid to such seamen. Such information shall be furnished on blanks to be provided by the commission and it shall be the duty of the commission to furnish such blanks to employers free of charge. Every employer receiving from the commission any blank, with directions to fill out the same, shall cause the same to be properly filled out so as to answer fully and correctly all questions therein propounded, and to give all information therein sought, or if unable to do so, he shall give to the commission in writing good and sufficient reasons for such failure. The commission may require that the information herein required to be furnished be verified under oath and returned to the commission within the period fixed by it or by law. Any employer who shall fail or refuse to furnish to the commission the annual statement herein required, or who shall fail or refuse to furnish such other information as may be required by the commission under authority of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of $500.

(b) All books, records, and payrolls of employers subject to this Act showing or reflecting in any way upon the amount of the wage expenditures of such employers shall be open during regular office hours for inspection by the commission or any of its authorized deputies, auditors, inspectors, or assistants for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the wage expenditure, the number of persons employed, and such other information as may be necessary for the uses and purposes of the commission in its administration of this Act.

(c) Any employer who knowingly misrepresents to the commission the amount of pay roll upon which the premium under this Act is based shall be liable to the fund in a penalty equal to ten times the amount of the difference between the premium paid and the amount the employer should have paid.

(d) The information contained in the employers' reports to the commission shall be for the exclusive use and information of the commission in the discharge of its official duties, and shall not be open to the public nor be used in any court in any action or proceeding pending therein unless the commission is a party to such action or proceeding; but the information contained in said report may be tabulated and published by the commission in statistical form, for the use and information of other departments and the public. Any person in the employ of the commission who shall divulge any information secured by him in respect to the transactions, property, or business of any employer to any person other than the members of the commission while acting as an employe of the commission shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500 and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding any appointment or employment with the commission.

Sec. 502. Nothing in sections 4283-4289, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, nor in section 18 of the Act entitled "An Act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade and for other purposes," approved June 26, 1884, nor in section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1886, nor in the Act entitled "An Act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading and to certain obligations, duties and rights in connection with the carriage of property," approved February 13, 1883, shall apply to any provision or any other liability imposed by this Act.

Sec. 503. (a) Penalties incurred by any person under this Act shall be collected in a civil action by the commission and shall be paid into the fund and become a part thereof.

(b) The commission may recover in one action all penalties or portions of penalties under the provisions of this Act incurred by the same defendant prior to the time when such action is brought, and successive actions may be brought for the recovery of all penalties or portions of penalties subsequently incurred.

Sec. 504. If this Act is repealed or adiudged unconstitutional by the courts, the period intervening between the time the injury is sustained and the time of such repeal or final adjudication of unconstitutionality shall not be computed as a part of the time limited by law for the commencement of any action against the employer relating to such injury; but the amount of any compensation paid or furnished under this Act on account of such injury shall be deducted from any judgment for damages on account thereof.

Sec. 505. (a) Any employer, or any person on behalf of any employer, who deducts from the earnings of any seaman any part of the premium payable to the fund or fails or refuses to pay premiums to the fund, or willfully misrepresents any facts in regard to his premium payable to the fund, each month of delay in paying premiums to constitute a new offense; or

(b) The master of any vessel who fails to post or keep posted the notice required by this Act; or

(c) Any person who, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or another any benefit or payment under this Act, willfully makes a false statement or representation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or in case of any offense subsequent to the first, such fine and imprisonment of not over six months, at the discretion of the court.

(d) Any person who fails to perform any duty imposed upon him, or does anything forbidden by this Act or by the regulations of the commission, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100, except as otherwise provided herein.

The Attorney-General of the United States shall prosecute actions under this section, and all fines recovered hereunder shall be paid into the fund and become a part thereof.

Sec. 506. Any compensation which has been paid to a person not entitled thereto may be recovered in civil action at the suit of the com-

(By Laurence Todd.)

Brilliant success has been scored by the new liberal alliance, speaking for labor at the Capitol, in the defeat of the Esch bill, which would have turned the railroad shops over to dummy companies running on an anti-union basis and charging fabulous prices for their work, which the public would be compelled to pay.

President Wilson was induced by the liberal alliance to veto the bill. It had been slipped through the Senate and House by trickery and without giving the members an idea of its real meaning. It was perhaps the most brazen grab attempted in Congress in a generation. Yet had it not been that the sixteen standard railroad labor organizations and the La Follette group in the Senate and House had agreed upon a joint plan of protecting the public, the bill would probably have been signed and the whole scheme of looting of the public and smashing the labor unions in the railroad industry would have gone smoothly ahead.

Johnston of the Machinists sent a strong protest to President Wilson on behalf of the railroad men. Senator La Follette wrote a letter to the President—the first in four years. Secretary of Labor Wilson was induced to take a hand. Great quantities of information showing the scandalous robbery of railroad stockholders by the "insiders" in the past, under this plan, were dug up from the records of old hearings. Three Senators had their pockets full of data for a long debate when the veto arrived. The railroad Senators, led by Kellogg of Minnesota, were dumfounded by the veto. When they realized that organized labor, under new and aggressive leadership at the Capitol, had beaten them at their own game, they abandoned all hope of passing the bill over the veto. They decided that the less light shed upon the purpose of their bill the better for their political health.

This triumph opens a new chapter in labor lobbying before Congress. Henceforth the politicians will understand that it is the spokesmen of this liberal conference, and not the two men sent to "the hill" by the Executive Council of the A. F. of L., whom they have to fear. The A. F. of L. Legislative Committee will henceforth have to show, in competition with the more aggressive and experienced group, that they are in fact handling labor's cause at the Capitol. The situation favors the rise of the new alliance and the decline of the lobbying activities of the A. F. of L. executives.

How utterly independent and confident is this new group, which directly involves at least one-third of the A. F. of L. membership, along with progressive organized farmers, is indicated by two steps taken this week by the International Association of Machinists, which is the most active factor in the combination. The Machinists' General Executive Board voted to empower its general secretary, E. C. Davison, to begin a nation-wide fight for the lifting of the Russian blockade, and it authorized the trip of its president, Wm. H. Johnston, to Mexico City to attend the Third Pan-American Labor Congress and to cultivate closer relations with the Metal Workers' organizations of Mexico and Central and South America.

Davison is sending to all of the 1500 lodges of the I. A. of M. in the United States a letter, urging the lodges to promptly and vigorously take up in their central labor councils and State federations, and with the commercial and manufacturing associations also, the necessity for opening trade with Russia in order to create a market for American goods. He gives an idea of the quantities of American goods which Soviet Russia wants to buy for cash, and points to the dangerously high percentage of unemployed in this country already, with the black prospect of worse times before Spring.

He adds to this business argument a plea for common humanity toward the Russian people, especially their sick and wounded and starving, who have been denied aid by the policy of our State Department. But primarily his plea is for an expression of the determination of the people of America—the working people—to protect their own employment rather than starve themselves in order that the State Department may vent its spite upon the type of government created by and for the Russian workers.

In this connection, the news of the formal alliance of the French Socialists with the international Communist revolutionary movement, and their open challenge to the French Government, has caused a great deal of anxious discussion among labor officials and politicians here. Among the best-informed the opinion is held that France and Italy are rapidly approaching a collapse of their present political and economic systems, due to the growth of the Communist organization and the failure of the governments to find revenue with which to pay their current expenses.

That the hold of reactionary governments and employers alike, in Western Europe, is weakening, is indicated by the calling of a joint conference at Brussels next month, under auspices of the Labor Office of the League of Nations, to seek an agreement between shipowners and seafarers on the latter's demand for a 44-hour week, both at sea and in port. Europe is not talking about restoring the 10 or 12-hour day. Labor does the talking, and it is of a reduction in working hours.

At the seafarers' and shipowners' conference in Genoa last summer a draft convention covering this matter of the shorter work week was agreed upon, but the League of Nations at Geneva failed to ratify it. The Brussels conference of the Seafarers' Federation, held later, adopted a resolution demanding the eight-hour day and 44-hour week. This demand was conveyed to the Labor Office of the League of Nations, which arranged the January conference which may bring about an agreement by direct negotiations. The shipowners at Genoa conceded the eight-hour day in port and would even agree to a three-watch system for all days of the week, but they stuck at the 44-hour maximum.

Andrew Furuseth has been invited to represent American seamen at this conference, but has declined because American shipowners will not be represented. However, he has written the European unions that the seafarers here will undertake to match any gains made by the Europeans. The effect of an agreement on the 44-hour week will be, he says, to enable American ships to compete on better terms than ever before with ships of other countries. For that reason European governments must be worried indeed as to general labor conditions when they permit such a change to be seriously considered.

At a time when the "open shop" movement is getting the universal odium which it deserves, by exposure of the fraud, brutality and greed in which it is conceived, there comes a special contribution from Akron, O., in the form of the discovery that ten prominent officials of labor unions in that city were hired spies of the Corporations' Auxiliary, of Cleveland.

The Akron "Herald," organ of labor there, devotes its Christmas issue to the expose of these provocative agents of the detective bureau. It prints a confession by a man recently treasurer of the Akron Central Labor Union, showing how each spy had a code number in place of a name on the books, and how they sent in reports on labor meetings, committee work, etc., and undertook in general to betray the labor movement to its active enemies. Photographs and records of other men—officials in the Carpenters, Steamfitters, Machinists, Bricklayers, Molders, Street Railway Men—are published in this paper, together with statements by the business agent of the Machinists' lodge and others.

A dramatic scene was furnished the Central Labor Union when the traitors were summoned to a meeting, their crimes recited to them, the written evidence of their treachery displayed, and they were called upon to answer. They confessed. Several who failed to come to the meeting were found to have left the city. It appeared that the most active of these "conservative" or "radical" spies—they included both kinds—had been imported into Akron several years back, for the express purpose of destroying the unions.

They had fairly good success before they were caught, just when a general "open shop" drive in Akron was getting under way.

Thos. F. Flaherty, secretary of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, asks the trade unionists of America to make a New Year resolution to help reduce night work in the postoffice. This can be done by mailing your letters early in the day. Seventy-five per cent. of all letters are handled between 5 and 8 p. m. This means night work in the service, with impaired health and no home life for the employes. It also means that a great part of this late letter mail is delayed in transmission. Letters mailed in the middle of the day reach their destinations several hours or perhaps a full day sooner than those mailed in the late hour rush.

The National Association of Letter Carriers and the Railway Mail Association join in the request.

The strength of organized labor lies in its weakness. That which it lacks in power of compulsion it gains by appeal to rational human ambition and intelligent perception of right and wrong. Right enjoined by force becomes wrong, and therefore fails.

JAPANESE LABOR AWAKE

A Japanese Federation of Labor will become a fait accompli at the end of January next when a grand conference of all the leading labor organizations will open in Tokyo and formulate plans. At the general meeting of the Yuaikai on its eighth anniversary, on October 4, it was proposed that the unity of all labor was the first condition toward realizing the labor aspirations; and a federation, modeled after the American Federation of Labor, was suggested. The suggestion was favorably received and the Yuaikai is now preparing for preliminary arrangements. The Yuaikai and other labor organizations will appoint an organizing committee which, independent of the Yuaikai, will arrange for the opening of the grand conference next year.

There are more than one hundred thousand workmen who belong to labor organizations and, once united, they will constitute a formidable power. The questions to be discussed at the grand conference are not yet decided upon, but the creation of the Federation of Labor will be a question of the utmost importance. It is also expected that the grand conference will debate whether to pursue parliamentary politics or adopt direct action. The grand conference, at any rate, must be regarded as marking a new era vis-à-vis labor in Japan.

In the western part of the country, with Osaka as its center, about twenty labor organizations have formed a federation, chief among them being the Yuaikai with 5,000 members; the Kojokai, 4,000 members; the Osaka Iron Works, 1,600; the Union of Electrical Workers, 1,600; the Printers' Association and Copper Workers' Union, each with 800 members. This western federation is expected to join the national federation. When the Japanese Federation of Labor is organized, evils attendant on smaller labor organizations standing apart will be eradicated, the workers' welfare will be more systematically and substantially promoted, while the publication of an organ, mutual help, holding of lecture meetings and many other welfare enterprises will be conducted under the management of one central body.—From the North China Standard, Peking, Nov. 18, 1920.

them a crew which can assist at that kind of work.

The sailor who will not or can not do a real sailor's work is an injury to the ship, a hindrance in competition, and a shame to the calling. The fireman, oiler or watertender who will not or can not do the work above suggested ought to find some kind of work on shore. He has no place in the new mercantile marine of America. The cook who can not or will not take care of the provisions, cook and serve the food so that it may be eaten instead of thrown overboard should quit cooking at sea and find some work that he will and can do on shore.

The pride of man, and more especially the pride of seamen through the times, was that he could do his work, and that he did so his work as well as anybody. The standard was high. A seaman that could not do his share in doing the repairing made necessary through some disaster or accident was looked upon by his shipmates as a landlubber and held in deserved contempt.

If the men before the mast in American vessels can be made to see their own highest interests they will work together to make the personnel the highest skilled seamen in the world. It is on that condition, and on that condition only, that America can compete in this world's carrying trade. It is through this policy that we shall be able to make ourselves so useful and so indispensable to the shipowner, that he will hesitate seriously in trying to either decrease wages or lower living conditions.

Of course, we cannot do this without a sympathetic understanding on the part of the shipowner, a fundamental change in the policy so far obtained, except on the Pacific, and the fullest use at sea and in harbor of the ship's crew in keeping the vessel in the best operating condition, keeping her out of repair yards, and give her a quick turn around.

The locks at Sault Ste. Marie were closed Dec. 27, thus officially ending the 1920 season in the upper Great Lakes. It was the latest closing in the history of the Soo canals.

mission, with interest at the rate of 10 per centum per annum from the date of payment, and when so recovered shall be paid into the fund and become a part thereof.

Sec. 507. No agreement by a seaman to waive his rights to compensation under this Act shall be valid. No agreement by a seaman to pay any portion of the premium paid by his employer into the fund shall be valid, and any employer who deducts any portion of such premium from the wages or salary of any seaman entitled to the benefits of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100 for each offense.

Sec. 508. The commission, or any deputy thereof, shall, upon application, certify in such manner as shall be most convenient, to any employer who is the operator of a vessel, that—

(a) Such employer is subject to this Act and has paid all premiums due the fund, or

(b) Such employer is not subject to this Act; and the master, owner, consignee, or agent of any such vessel seeking clearance from any port of the United States shall present such certification at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless such certification is so presented.

Sec. 509. All judgments in any action prosecuted by the commission or by any other person under the authority of this Act shall have the same preference against the assets of the employer as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law for judgments rendered for claims for wages, but they shall be next in order to such claim.

Sec. 510. Any person who makes any statement, in any affidavit required or in any claim for compensation, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of periury and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 511. The commission shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates for payments to be made into the fund by the United States as an employer.

Sec. 512. The commission shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report of its work for the preceding fiscal year, which shall include a statement of the number of awards made by it, a detailed statement of the disbursements from the fund and its condition, together with a general statement of the causes of the injuries for which the awards were made, and of any other matters, including recommendations for legislation.

Sec. 513. If any provision of this Act is declared unconstitutional, or the application of any provision to certain circumstances be held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

Sec. 514. This Act shall not affect any cause of action existing or pending before it goes into effect.

Sec. 515. All Acts and parts of Acts inconsistent with this Act are hereby repealed.

Labor News

Non-union barbers employed in a large shop in San Antonio, Texas, are on strike for a living wage. They have been petted and jollied by every cheap-wage advocate, but the barbers find that this is a poor substitute for the necessaries of life.

Land ownership, and the possibility of young men and women marrying and owning the land that they till represents one of the gravest social and economic questions with which the nation has to deal, said Secretary of Agriculture Meredith in his annual report.

The Central Labor Union of Boston has voted to admit all wage earners, irrespective of A. F. of L. affiliation, to the courses offered by the trade union college which is controlled by it. One delegate said it would be foolish to restrict the benefits of the college, and cited the parallel of a labor paper, the reading of which unionists would not attempt to limit to organized workers.

The California State Federation of Teachers will urge the coming legislature to pass a tenure-in-office law which will protect teachers from arbitrary dismissal. It is stated that the average school trustee is opposed to this plan. These trustees, many of whom are political accidents, believe they know more about education than the men and women who have made this subject a life study and look upon teachers as automatons.

Federal Judge Call of Jacksonville, Florida, has issued an injunction against striking cigar makers, who are enjoined from committing murder, shooting or threatening bodily harm to strikebreakers. The unionists present their record of conduct during the strike and declare the manufacturers asked for the injunction for publicity purposes. These manufacturers only recently threatened to deport strike officials, and one newspaper has covertly suggested that these officials be lynched or run out of town.

Protection of competent public school teachers against politicians on school boards is a leading activity of the American Federaton of Teachers. "There can be little doubt," says President Stillman, "that tenure-of-office legislation is an essential, if not the essential, in securing one of our primary purposes—'to raise the standard of the teaching profession by securing conditions essential to the best professional service.' This subject calls for careful attention now, not only because of the arbitrary dismissal of competent teachers, but also because of the evident intention of certain school authorities to weaken if possible the few tenure provisions now in existence."

The Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen, a company "union," of Aberdeen, Wash., accepted a wage cut of $1 a day and then called a meeting of business men to discuss a reduction of their prices. The company "union" was applauded by the business men for agreeing to work for less but the speakers urged caution in reducing prices for commodities. One merchant said that Government regulation of food prices during the war had made it impossible for grocers to accumulate a reserve fund of excess profits. The company "unionists" are wondering if they are believed to have accumulated a surplus. They are also asking why food prices were controlled by the Government.

"SALVAGE"

SEAMEN, do you know what you are entitled to receive for services that you perform as volunteers in saving life and property at sea? If you don't, get a copy of Axtell's Book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen." It covers this subject completely. Why should you sign papers for a runner from a lawyer's office, to collect what you have earned, if, by knowing the law, you can get it without doing so. Do you know that it is contrary to law and ethics of the profession for a lawyer to employ a runner or pay a runner or any other person any portion of his fee for getting business for him; that such an attorney is not regarded as fit to practice in the majority of States in the United States? In cases where a lawyer represents the whole crew, including officers and men, 15% is a fair charge, for collecting the money where it does not involve litigation. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and the Statutes of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other.

Overtime, personal injuries, wrongful discharge, waiting time, penalties are fully discussed in this little volume.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am

Every seaman should have one of these books. "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Food products to the value of $138,949,081 were exported from the United States during November. This is an increase over November, 1919, when exports totaled $133,457,166.

The menace of wooden passenger coaches is referred to in the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Congress is urged to compel railroads to use steel cars in all passenger train service and to prohibit the use of wooden coaches between or in front of steel coaches.

Postmaster General Burleson blames a thirty-million-dollar deficit in his department on wage increases, and now he blames the postal employes' unions for defeating his recommendation that rates on drop letters be reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent.

"Within two years there will be an organization capable of handling the wheat market that will kill speculation and treat the farmer fairly," said W. J. Spillman, former Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, in a speech in Philadelphia. "In less than a year," the speaker declared, "the farmers will be organized all over the country. The only way for the farmer to solve his difficulties is to organize."

In urging legislation to control the meat packing industry, Senator Kenyon quoted figures from the Federal Trade Commission which showed net profits of the five great packers for the years 1912 to 1917, inclusive. These packers are Armour, Swift, Cudahy, Wilson and Morris. The net profits in the three years before the war—1912, 1913 and 1914—was $59,510,000. The net profits in the three war years—1915, 1916 and 1917—was $192,260,000.

Production of both anthracite and bituminous coal reached a new high-water mark for the year during the week of December 4, according to a statement by the geological survey, which shows the output for the week to have been 12,757,000 tons of anthracite. The week's soft coal production has been exceeded only four times since the survey has been recording the weekly output, three of which were in 1918 and one last year.

Abolition of brokers and middlemen in the handling of farm products is the purpose of a million-dollar corporation which has been formed by the California Farm Bureau Federation. A grain elevator at Oakland with a two-million bushel grain capacity has been leased. It is stated that this marks one of the most revolutionary steps in the history of California agriculture and points to a solution of many farmers' problems by a reduction in the cost of production and marketing of grain.

The alleged scarcity of coal last summer was a myth, according to Senator Calder, who is a member of the Senate's Committee on Reconstruction that is probing the coal industry. "Our committee has found," said the Senator, "that more coal was moved on American railroads during July, August and September last than ever before in the history of the country, and at the same time a panic over shortage was created." Senator Calder's statement is interesting in view of the claims made by coal owners and the public press, who alleged that a car shortage, strikes and refusal of the miners to do "an honest day's work," caused a coal scarcity.

During the 12 months ended November 30, 1920, the output of ships in the United States was 1,845 of 2,977,886 gross tons, compared with 2,367 of 4,247,436 gross tons during the 12 months ended November 30, 1919.

In all probability the three well-known vessels of the American Line, the "New York," "St. Paul" and "Philadelphia," will again ply on the New York-Southampton route with the coming of the spring. The ships are now tied up at the Chelsea docks for the off season in Transatlantic travel. The plan to use the "New York" and "St. Paul" for West Indian cruises has been abandoned and only the "Megantic" will be used this winter on tropical pleasure trips.

Announcement is made that the Houston Line will establish a steamship service from Halifax to Brazilian and other South American ports this winter. The service will be monthly, and the first sailing will be that of the Hortensius on January 10 for the following ports: Pernambuco, Bahia, Santos, Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Aires.

During the month of November, seventeen vessels of 4,588 tons were sold to foreigners. The largest of the ships transferred was the wooden gasoline steamer "Wergeland" of 2457 tons, which is to fly the British flag hereafter.

From December 13 to December 22 there arrived at New York, or were due, ten ocean liners bringing immigrants to Ellis Island, said Commissioner Wallis this week. On these ten ships were a total of 50,063 passengers or seamen, divided as follows: First-class, 3,597; second-class, 6,193; third-class, 30,409. The ten liners had a total complement of 9,764 seamen and about one hundred stowaways. Every passport had to be inspected, whether of a citizen or an alien, and a reading test had to be applied to every alien. This, with the rest of the examination, constituted a tremendous task, said the Commissioner.

New European services are being planned by the United States Mail S. S. Company in addition to their present London and Hamburg lines. Negotiations for a New York-Boston-Antwerp service are being carried on at the present time with the Antwerp municipal authorities and are expected to come to fruition in the near future. Former steamers of the North German Lloyd, chartered to the United States Mail, will be used in the new services. The France & Canada S. S. Company, of which the United States Mail is an outgrowth, is already established at Antwerp. After the Antwerp service a Mediterranean service will probably be inaugurated.

The steamship "Lake Ennis" passed through the Panama Canal recently carrying 2700 tons of coal from New York to Santa Cruz, Argentina. Santa Cruz is near the mouth of the Santa Cruz river, in the territory of that name which forms the southern part of Patagonia, and is about 230 nautical miles to the northeast of Punta Arenas. The distance from New York to Santa Cruz around the east coast of South America, direct from New York to Montevideo, Uruguay, thence to Santa Cruz, is 6841 miles. The distance by way of the Canal, via Talcahuano and Punta Arenas, is approximately 6321 miles. The Canal route is about 520 miles shorter.

INFORMATION WANTED

Dirk Land, or anyone knowing his whereabouts, will please communicate with Ed. Timmerman, 49 Reid street, Brooklyn, N. Y. A sum of money is held for him by me.
12-8-20

Anyone who was acquainted with the late Chas. Erickson, discharged from the U. S. Navy in 1896, and subsequent thereto sailing on the Pacific Coast, will confer a great favor upon his widow, Mrs. Charles Erickson, by communicating with her at P. O. Box 15, San Pedro, Cal. Mrs. Erickson is anxious to establish certain facts relating to the physical condition of her late husband prior to his discharge from the U. S. Navy. 1-28-20

News from Abroad

The Bank of Barcelona, one of the leading financial institutions of Barcelona, Spain, has suspended payments. Although the bank's difficulties are said to be only temporary, the suspension caused serious financial disorders.

United States Consul General Skinner at London cabled the Department of Commerce during the past week that the slump in freight rates continues, many vessels being laid up because it was impossible to meet the cost of operation.

Incoming and outgoing sea traffic in the Hamburg ports during November was nearly five times greater than that of November, 1919, aggregating 1,028,000 net tons of shipping. For the ten months ending November 1 the net incoming and outgoing sea traffic aggregated 6,670,000 tons, which was more than six times that of the similar period of last year, but only about one-fourth that for the corresponding period of 1913.

According to Syren and Shipping, a group of German financiers, associated with the National Bank für Deutschland, has applied to the Mexican Petroleum Department for a concession of oil-yielding lands in Mexico with the object of transporting Mexican oil to Germany. It is understood that the group has made arrangements for the construction of oil tankers in Germany, and the keel of the first of these will be laid shortly.

In October, 1913, Great Britain exported 6,739,473 tons of coal, for which it received £4,665,245. In October, 1920, the exports were 1,417,498 tons, for which £6,108,497 was received. That is, in October, 1920, a little over 20 per cent. of the coal shipped in 1913 brought over 32 per cent. more money. Some of that is inflation. Most of it is much less coal at far higher cost and far higher profit on export sales. It means a serious blow not only to the general export trade of Great Britain, but to that of nearby manufacturing countries, whose costs are increased by high cost of power.

It is indicated the prohibition question will be forced on the new Chilean Administration before it has had time fairly to pick up the reins of government, as the result of the united refusal of longshoremen, backed by the Chilean Federation of Labor, to unload alcoholic beverages at any port in the country. It has been stated that as soon as Congress reconvenes after the Christmas recess Senator Edwards will renew his insistence that the Chilean Cabinet inform the Congress what policy it intends to follow to protect the freedom of commerce in view of the demand of the laboring class for prohibition.

New road construction amounting to almost £1,500,000 has been undertaken by various British cities in co-operation with the Government as a means of providing work for the unemployed. Details of the plan received indicate that the British Ministry of Transport will bear 50 per cent. of the cost of such work and will loan to municipalities the remaining amount for five years repayable in annual instalments. Ex-service men receive preference among applicants for employment at the road work, but all applicants are required first to submit to one week's registration at the established Labor Exchanges. This is to eliminate "floating" labor.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

SUPREME COURT BARS BOYCOTT

Philosophy of Reaction Triumphs Over Social Justice

The anti-labor trend of recent decisions under the Sherman law has reached a climax by the Supreme Court's ruling in the Duplex Case.

The Clayton Act has been annihilated in a far-reaching decision which affects the right of Labor to practice of the secondary boycott.

Injunction proceedings were instituted by the Duplex Printing Press Co. of Battle Creek, Mich., against the International Association of Machinists. Complaint was dismissed by the District Court, and the Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that decision. Six Justices of the Supreme Court voted to overrule the decision of the two lower courts. Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Clarke dissented in opinion.

Following is the court's opinion in the case:
Jan. 3, 1921.

Supreme Court of the United States. No. 45—October Term, 1920. Appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Duplex Printing Company, appellant, vs. Emil J. Deering and William Bramley, individually and as Business Agents of District No. 15 of the International Association of Machinists. et al.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court.

This was a suit in equity brought by appellant in the District Court for the Southern District of New York for an injunction to restrain a course of conduct carried on by defendants in that district and vicinity in maintaining a boycott against the products of complainant's factory, in furtherance of a conspiracy to injure and destroy its good will, trade and business—especially to obstruct and destroy its interstate trade. There was also a prayer for damages, but this has not been pressed and calls for no further mention.

Complainant is a Michigan corporation and manufactures printing presses at a factory in Battle Creek, in that State, employing about 200 machinists in the factory, in addition to fifty office employes, traveling salesmen and expert machinists or road men who supervise the erection of the presses for complainant's customers at their various places of business.

The defendants who were brought into court and answered the bill are Emil J. Deering and William Bramley, sued individually and as business agents and representatives of District No. 15 of the International Association of Machinists, and Michael T. Neyland, sued individually and as business agent and representative of Local Lodge No. 328 of the same association. The District Council and the lodge are incorporated associations, having headquarters in New York City, with numerous members resident in that city and vicinity. There were averments and proof to show that it was impracticable to bring all the members before the Court and that the named defendants properly represented them, and those named were called upon to defend for all, pursuant to Equity Rule 38 (226 U. S. 659). Other jurisdictional averments need no particular mention.

The District Council and the lodge are unincor- the bill, 247 Fed. Rep. 192; the Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed its decree, 252 Fed. Rep. 722, and the present appeal was taken.

In August, 1913 (eight months before the filing of the bill), the International Association called a strike at complainant's factory in Battle Creek, as a result of which union machinists to the number of about eleven in the factory and three who supervised the erection of presses in the field, left complainant's employ. But the defection of so small a number did not materially interfere with the operation of the factory, and sales and shipments in interstate commerce continued.

The acts complained of made up the details of an elaborate program adopted and carried out by defendants and their organization in and about the city of New York as part of a country-wide program adopted by the international association for the purpose of enforcing a boycott of complainant's product. The acts embraced the following, with others: Warning customers that it would be better for them not to purchase, or having purchased not to install, presses made by complainant, and threatening them with loss should they do so; threatening customers with sympathetic strikes in other trades; notifying a trucking company usually employed by customers to haul the presses not to do so, and threatening it with trouble if it should; inciting employes of the trucking company and other men employed by customers of complainant to strike against their respective employers in order to interfere with the hauling and installation of presses, and thus bring pressure to bear upon the customers; notifying repair shops not to do repair work on Duplex presses; coercing union men by threatening them with loss of union cards and with being blacklisted as "scabs" if they insisted on installing the presses; threatening an exposition company with a strike if it permitted complainant's presses to be exhibited, and resorting to a variety of other modes of preventing the sale of presses of complainant's manufacture in or about New York City and delivery of them in interstate commerce, such as injuring and threatening to injure complainant's customers and prospective customers and persons concerned in hauling, handling or installing the presses.

The Clayton act, in Section 1, includes the Sherman act in a definition of "anti-trust laws," and, in Section 16 (38 Sta. 737), gives to private parties a right to relief by injunction in any court of the United States against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the anti-trust laws, under the conditions and principles regulating the granting of such relief by courts of equity. Evidently this provision was intended to supplement the Sherman act, under which some of the Federal courts had held, as this court afterward held in Paine Lumber Company vs. Neal, 244 U. S. 459, 471, that a private party could not maintain a suit for injunction.

That complainant's business of manufacturing printing presses and disposing of them in commerce is a property right, entitled to protection against unlawful injury or interference; that unrestrained access to the channels of interstate commerce is necessary for the successful conduct of the business; that a widespread combination exists, to which defendants and the associations represented by them are parties, to hinder and obstruct complainant's interstate trade and commerce by the means that have been indicated, and that as a result of it complainant has sustained substantial damage to its interstate trade, and is threatened with further and irreparable loss and damage in the future, is proved by clear and undisputed evidence. Hence the right to an injunction is clear if the threatened loss is due to a violation of the Sherman act as amended by the Clayton act.

Looking first to the former act, the things declared illegal by its first section (26 Sta. 209) is "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." The accepted definition of a conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means. Pettibone vs. United States, 148 U. S. 197, 203. If the purpose be unlawful it may not be carried out even by means that otherwise would be legal, and although the purpose be lawful it may not be carried out by criminal or unlawful means.

[The court then quotes several other decisions which it holds are applicable and continues:]

It is settled by these decisions that such a restraint produced by peaceable persuasion is as much within the prohibition as one accomplished by force or threats of force, and it is not to be justified by the fact that the participants in the combination of conspiracy may have some object beneficial to themselves or their associates which possibly they might have been at liberty to pursue in the absence of the statute.

Upon the question whether the provisions of the Clayton act forbade the grant of any injunction under the circumstances of the present case the Circuit Court of Appeals was divided, the majority holding that under Section 20, "perhaps in conjunction with Section 6," there could be no injunction. These sections are set forth in the margin. Defendants seek to derive from them some authority for their conduct.

As to Section 6, it seems to us its principal importance in this discussion is for what it does not authorize, and for the limit it sets to the immunity conferred. The section assumes the normal objects of a labor organization to be legitimate, and declares that nothing in the anti-trust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of such organizations or to forbid their members from lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects, and that such an organization shall not be held in itself—merely because of its existence and operation—to be an illegal combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. But there is nothing in the section to exempt such an organization or its members from accountability where it or they depart from its normal and legitimate objects and engage in an actual combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. And by no fair or permissible construction can it be taken as authorizing any activity otherwise unlawful or enabling a normally lawful organization to become a cloak for an illegal combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade as defined by the anti-trust laws.

The principal reliance is upon Section 20. This regulates the granting of restraining orders and injunctions by the courts of the United States in a designated class of cases, with respect to (a) the terms and conditions of the relief and the practice to be pursued, and (b) the character of acts that are to be exempted from the restraint; and in the concluding words it declares (c) that none of the acts specified shall be held to be violations of any law of the United States. All its provisions are subject to a general qualification respecting the nature of the controversy and the parties affected. It is to be a "case between an employer and employes, or between employers and employes, or between employes, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment."

The first paragraph merely puts into statutory form familiar restrictions upon the granting of injunctions already established and of general application in the equity practice of the courts of the United States. It is but declaratory of the law as it stood before. The second paragraph declares that "no such restraining order or injunction" shall prohibit certain conduct specified—manifestly still referring to a "case between an employer and employes—involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment," as designated in the first paragraph.

It is very clear that the restriction upon the use of the injunction is in favor only of those concerned as parties to such a dispute as is described. The words defining the permitted conduct include particular qualifications consistent with the general one respecting the nature of the case and dispute intended, and the concluding words, "nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States," are to be read in the light of the context, and mean only that those acts are not to be so held when committed by parties concerned in "a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment." If the qualifying words are to have any effect, they must operate to confine the restriction upon the granting of injunctions, and also the relaxation of the provisions of the anti-trust and other laws of the United States, to parties standing in proximate relation to a controversy such as is particularly described.

Congress had in mind particular industrial controversies, not a general class war. "Terms or conditions of employment" are the only grounds of dispute recognized as adequate to bring into play the exceptions, and it would do violence to the guarded language employed were the exemption extended beyond the parties affected in a proximate and substantial, not merely a sentimental or sympathetic, sense by the cause of dispute.

Nor can Section 20 be regarded as bringing in all members of a labor organization as parties to a "dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment" which proximately affects only a few of them, with the result of conferring upon any and all members—no matter how many thousands there may be nor how remote from the actual conflict—those exemptions which Congress in terms conferred only upon parties to the dispute. That would enlarge by construction the provisions of Section 20, which contain no mention of labor organizations, so as to produce an inconsistency with Section 6, which deals specifically with the subject and must be deemed to express the measure and limit of the immunity intended by Congress to be incident to mere membership in such an organization.

The emphasis placed on the words "lawful" and "lawfully," "peaceful" and "peacefully," and the references to the dispute and the parties to it, strongly rebut a legislative intent to confer a general immunity for conduct violative of the anti-trust laws, or otherwise unlawful. The subject of the boycott is dealt with specifically in the "ceasing to patronize" provision, and by the clear force of the language employed the exemption is limited to pressure exerted upon a "party to such dispute" by means of "peaceful and lawful" influence upon neutrals.

There is nothing here to justify defendant or the organizations they represent in using either threats or persuasion to bring about strikes or a cessation of work on the part of employes of complainant's customers or prospective customers, or of the trucking company employed by the customers, with the object of compelling such customers to withdraw or refrain from commercial relations with complainant, and of thereby constraining complainant to yield the matter in dispute. To instigate a sympathetic strike in aid of a secondary boycott can not be deemed "peaceful and lawful" persuasion. In essence it is a threat to inflict damage upon the immediate employer, between whom and his employes no dispute exists, in order to bring him against his will into a concerted plan to inflict damage upon another employer who is in dispute with his employes.

[The court then quotes from a statement made in Congress by Mr. Webb, the spokesman of the House committee, when the Clayton Act was passed, who declared that it did not sanction the secondary boycott. The decision continues:]

This was the final word of the House committee on the subject and was uttered under such circumstances and with such impressive emphasis that it is not going too far to say that except for this exposition of the meaning of the section it would not have been enacted in the form in which it was reported. In substantially that form it became law, and since in our opinion its proper construction is entirely in accord with its purpose as thus declared, little need be added.

Reaching the conclusion, as we do, that complainant has a clear right to an injunction under the Sherman Act as amended by the Clayton Act, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether a like result would follow under the common law or local statutes, there being no suggestion that relief thereunder could be broader than that to which complainant is entitled under the acts of Congress.

Complainant is entitled to its costs in this court and in both courts below.

Decree reversed, and the cause remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

PORTUGUESE WORKING HOURS

In view of the failure of the International Seamen's Conference, held at Genoa in June and July last, to pass the draft convention fixing hours of labor on board merchant vessels, each country remains free to legislate separately on this subject.

It is true, another attempt to arrive at an amicable understanding is to be made at an international conference to be held at Brussels, Belgium, this month, but at least one old maritime nation has endeavored to adjust its affairs in this respect, independent of the League of Nations. In Portugal a commission composed of representatives of seamen, shipowners and the Government, has drawn up an agreement which has been approved and confirmed by the Government.

Under this arrangement the working hours are to be 56 per week for the engine-room staff, 64 for the deck crew and 77 for the stewards, etc., but it appears "when required to do so" these classes must work respectively, 70, 78 and 91 hours per week, the extra hours being returned to them by means of rest-periods at ports of call or in the home port, at the rate of two hours for each extra hour of service; if this arrangement is not possible, they will receive money compensation at the rate of 1½ hours' pay for every extra hour worked.

This regulation does not apply to captains, mates, second mates, chief and second engineers, doctors, pursers and their assistants, boatswains and carpenters.

No claim to overtime can be made in respect of time occupied in navigating ships into and out of port as regards the crew whose work is essential on these occasions; nor in respect of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or the lives or property of those on board; nor in the event of fog, breakdown, fires and other similar emergencies. On sailing vessels no overtime can be claimed in respect of the work necessary for navigation.

Sunday rest must be observed in ports of call and home ports except on the day of the vessel's arrival or departure.

Warships and fishing vessels are excluded from the scope of the agreement; all other classes are included, whether in public or private ownership.

As a whole this arrangement is considerably behind the times. At any rate, in comparison with other European countries the seamen of Portugal will have to move forward quite a distance before they reach even the average standard.

SCOFFING AT THE SINGLE TAX

According to the recent census, a majority of this country's people live in cities of over 2,500 inhabitants. It is an unhealthy situation, and shows clearly enough that the high cost of living brings no advantage to the actual producer of food. Working farmers are going to the cities because it pays better to work in a factory than on the farm. The cause of this is plain. In spite of the decline in agricultural population, rural land values are increasing. They have reached and passed the point beyond which profitable production can be carried on. The farmer can not pay the exorbitant prices demanded for farm land and make enough to eke out a decent living for himself after paying interest on the investment, taxes on all he produces and consumes, and extortionate prices to transportation and other monopolies. Until that situation is remedied, until the cause of the trouble has been removed, the tendency to go from farm to city will probably continue, even though city workers have more than their share of hardship and trouble.

Of course, the obvious remedy is, first of all, to force those who are holding valuable unused farm lands to let go their grip. This can be done by taxing land values enough to make holding without use unprofitable. Next, the taxes on labor products should be gradually reduced and finally entirely abolished.

These two steps will force down the price of land and reduce the cost of living and of production. The same measures applied to cities and mining regions will have similar results to workers there. It will put an end to all the monopolies that rest on control of natural resources or public highways and profit from the obstruction to industry created by taxes on labor. The remedy so briefly outlined herein is generally referred to as the single tax.

It is America's misfortune that legislators generally have scoffed at the single tax as a remedy. They will probably keep on scoffing for some time to come. But they cannot scoff away the results of their refusal. They may apply, as they have on other occasions, false remedies. But the false remedies will not interfere with the working of fundamental evils that are left undisturbed. Either the right remedy must be applied or the trouble must grow worse.

Even those persons who oppose the strike on general principles show a disposition to modify their views whenever they realize that a given strike has succeeded, if only in part. If these persons could be brought to realize that almost all strikes succeed in part they would also realize that the general principle upon which their opposition to the strike is based is merely a lack of discernment of the strike's real significance.

Want State Cossacks

A bill to establish the Cossack system in the State of Minnesota has been prepared.

The Cossacks, trade unionists are assured, will be used in case of fire, flood or other public calamity, and shall not be used for patrol or guard duty at any labor dispute, strike or lockout.

The bill reads fine, until the "joker" appears in the form of a clause which permits Cossack officials to "have representatives present in any strike or lockout for the purpose of detecting or preventing crime."

This is the reason always advanced by this angelic crew for clubbing strikers and riding down women and children.

Miners Demand Industrial Freedom

Discussing the necessity of organization for industrial freedom, international representatives of the United Mine Workers of America declare that the situation in Mingo County, West Virginia, is the same as in other fields.

"The miners of this county, more than a year ago, petitioned the coal companies for a redress of their grievances and better pay, in line with the standards accepted in other fields.

"What were those grievances? That the mines be aired according to the mining laws of the State; that the places be drained, in line with modern standards set up for the health and convenience of the men; that the hauling and distribution of mine cars be impartially managed; that each miner have the same opportunity of earning a living, without prejudice by the management, paying for yardage and dead work (where there is hazard, and skill required that lessens the opportunities of production), and last, but not least, the right to organize and bargain collectively.

"The coal operators refused to recognize the rights of the miners and the men appealed to President Keeney of District No. 17, United Mine Workers of America, for assistance. As the men organized they were discharged and thrown out of their homes, oftentimes their furniture being thrown out on the public highway, and some of the more prominent committeemen maltreated by the Baldwin-Feltz Detective Agency and private gunmen hired for this purpose. This continued for some time, until a high percentage of the men were discharged, and it was either submit to the rule of thugs and murderers or offer industrial battle. The miners chose the latter course in the spirit of Americans who believe that they have the same right to organize as the coal masters, and the battle is now on, with all the misery and suffering incidental to such contests, and where the average miner, with his family, is never very far from the door of starvation in fields of this kind.

"But the miners are hopeful and determined to face the rigors of winter before they will submit and return to economic and industrial slavery."

Unemployment in England

The grave problem of unemployment in England threatens to develop into a crisis of the first magnitude. It is estimated that the number of persons out of work approximate 1,000,000, including 250,000 ex-service men. A supplementary appropriation of £3,500,000 has been voted by the Government for the Ministry of Labor toward State contributions for unemployment insurance and out-of-work donations.

Recently Alderman Ben Turner startled staid conservatives by a direct appeal to the King, who forwarded this letter to Premier Lloyd-George after receiving same from the trade-unionist:

"For God's sake, urge your ministers to tackle the problem at once. It is imperative, if danger is to be averted, that the unemployment benefit during the present trade collapse should apply to every one. The crisis is urgent; the need is urgent. There is no time for delay. Starvation is with us. Hunger runs riot in the country, anger from despair. Help to make the life of our people secure."

With these conditions general throughout the whole country, the Cotton Factory Times of Manchester asks what has become of the charge that workers are "shirking."

"We do not find the capitalist press, which vilified the miners and other workers so much some months ago in reference to ca-cannyism, saying anything in their columns at the present moment on that topic. The cry, almost pathetic at times, that work people should turn out every available ounce of production, has suddenly become mute. The newspapers in question are 'laying low' in face of the daily spectacle of thousands of unemployed, willing and able to work.

"We should like some of the clever writers to leave their armchairs and show us the remedy for the state of things described. It is no answer to tell us that the depression is, to a certain extent, world wide. Such a reply only admits the evil is extensive."

How "Public" Opinion is Molded by Greed

How greed molds "public" opinion was illustrated in the House of Representatives by Congressman Huddleston in discussing the Cummins-Esch Railroad law, which was backed, he declared, by the strongest lobby ever assembled in Washington.

"The power of the interests behind the railroads is overwhelming," he said. "They are able to control and mold public opinion at will. At a sign from them the presses of great newspapers change stroke, the channels of public information are blocked, criticism is silenced and bandages are placed upon the eyes of the people.

"Dealing with the great selfish interests we are confronted not only by railroad officials and manipulators, but with captains of industry and finance, capitalists, and, after them, with civic bodies and with wealth and property interests with lines running from the heart of Wall Street

Stonecutters of Barcelona, Spain, who were locked out by the Employers' Federation recently, have to some extent followed the example of Italian metal workers by seizure of the workshops, and operation of same.

To check high prices the Belgian government asked for estimates for the making of national costumes, and trade unions sent in an order to prevent the work falling into the hands of exploiters. The government gave the unionists a preliminary order for 6000 costumes. The unions will maintain their working conditions and also reduce the number of unemployed.

Although Sweden has not yet ratified the draft convention concerning unemployment adopted by the International Labor Conference at Washington, the Government has already taken steps to carry out that provision of this convention which requires each member ratifying it to communicate to the International Labor Office, all available information, statistical or otherwise, concerning unemployment.

At a conference of French civil employes these workers pledged their adherence to trade unionism, despite contrary efforts by government officials. These employes declared that nothing can separate them from other wage earners and that they will remain with the French Confederation of Labor and aid the trade union movement in carrying out its program of social reconstruction.

Six large groups of organized workers in Germany, have formed a committee of action to urge a housing law. The first demand is that land be freed from speculation. The government is asked to put land in the proximity of the towns at the disposal of the public, and demand is made for a public official who, in co-operation with the trade unions, shall take the necessary measures to build workers' dwellings.

A recent report from the International Labor Office states that: "The attempt, to some extent successful, to introduce an eight-hour day into Italian agriculture has not only the humanitarian and economic motives which tend to make the eight-hour day general in industry, but also a cause peculiar to Italian conditions. . . ." The eight-hour day is said to have lessened unemployment amongst casual agricultural laborers. A bill making limitation of the working day in agriculture general and compulsory has been introduced in the Italian Chamber of Deputies.

According to a report of the Australian Commonwealth Statistician, which was made public November 16, 1920, there were 460 strikes in that country during the year 1919. The number of employes involved was 177,791, of which 100,300 were directly involved, and 57,291 were indirectly affected. The number of working days lost was 5,652,726, or an aggregate of one year's work each for 1961 workers. New South Wales was the storm center, with 276 strikes originating in that State, involving 100,000 employes. Strikes in the mining district were responsible for 48 per cent of days lost. Victory for the workers was achieved in 134 of the 460 strikes, 139 were settled on a compromise basis, the employers won 69 wage disputes and 68 others, while 10 remained unsettled at the close of the year.

PAINLESS PARKER FIGHTS TRUSTS

By Painless Parker

MY life has been just one fight after another with the dental trusts. I am still fighting them today. They believe in high prices, while I believe in fair prices. I think more people need good dentistry, and the way to supply it is to ask prices that the people can afford to pay. I can do this by using the E. R. Parker System, which saves me money, and I divide the saving up with my patients.

The E. R. Parker System has also made dentistry better. It includes all the latest improvements and methods. With this System my associates and I have built up the largest dental practice in the world, and no trust has ever been powerful enough to make us raise prices. I get a lot of pleasure helping the common people fight the trusts and high prices.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

The strike of stewards in Australia is affecting the port of Vancouver, B. C. The steamers "Niagara" and "Makura," scheduled to sail from Vancouver in February, are tied up at Sydney.

The Parr-McCormick Company has been appointed Seattle agent for the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Steamship Corporation of Baltimore. A regular shipping service between Seattle and Baltimore will be inaugurated, it is announced.

Seven new and modern cargo vessels will be added to Seattle's intercoastal trade, according to statements made by Geo. T. Williams, president of the Williams Steamship Company, Inc. A 20-day schedule is to be maintained between Seattle and Atlantic ports by the new line.

Charter prices in the grain trade to Europe have dropped to $15 and the competition with foreign bottoms is being met. Last week the "Indian City" left San Francisco, Calif., with a shipment of 10,000 tons of barley for the United Kingdom.

The "Creole State," the "Wolverine State" and the "Granite State," all 502s, have been allocated to the Pacific Mail for the Manila-East India run, while five 535s are to be received for transpacific service. Time on the Manila run will be shortened to twenty-two days by the new service, and to Calcutta will be but thirty-four days.

San Francisco is leading the Pacific Coast in renewal of the vegetable oil industry, which has lain dormant for six months. During the past week 1284 tons of vegetable oil have arrived at the port of San Francisco. Seattle received a consignment of cocoanut oil, 25,000 cases of perilla oils, and Portland announces the receipt of 45,000 cases of soya bean oil.

Word received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce was to the effect that the "Ecuador," outbound, has arrived at Honolulu; Standard Oil tanker "J. A. Moffett," with 70,000 barrels of fuel oil from San Francisco, has arrived at Honolulu, and the freighter "Egeria," from Newcastle with general cargo, was also in port in the Islands.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha will place four cargo vessels on the Puget Sound-North China route in the spring. The fleet will consist of the steamships "Durban Maru," "Delagoa Maru," "Genoa Maru" and "Dakar Maru," which have operated in connection with the company's big passenger and freight liners in transpacific service.

The work of overhauling and renovating the steamer "President," to have her in condition to handle summer travel between Puget Sound and California points, is nearing completion, and when she is placed in commission the Pacific Steamship Company will have expended over $125,000 on the liner. The work is being done at the Todd plant on Harbor Island.

The steamer "Willfare" will inaugurate the intercoastal service from Puget Sound to the Atlantic, to be established by the Williams Steamship Company of New York and Philadelphia. The "Willfare" is now en route to the Northwest. She will be followed by the "Willfolo." The company will make Portland and San Francisco ports of call.

The United States Shipping Board school for training men as marine engineers has been opened again at Berkeley, after being closed over the holidays. More than 110 pupils were enrolled. Additional students are solicited. Instruction is managed by the Government. The object is to increase the number of Americans in the Merchant Marine.

The "Africa Maru," scheduled to leave Tacoma, Wash., for Oriental ports January 17, is loaded to capacity. This is the first time a vessel of the line has left in several months with all the freight on board that could be stowed into the holds of the vessel. The "Alabama Maru" will also have a full cargo. This indicates a more healthy tone to foreign trade.

The steamer "Santa Cruz," recorded as having sailed from Singapore for this port via Manila, is on her last run to the Orient in the service of the Pacific Mail Company. Immediately upon her return she will be turned back to W. R. Grace Company, from whom she had been chartered. The new "Wolverine State," one of the ships allocated to the Mail company, will take her place.

A survey of the Dutch freighter "Bali," which has been made on drydock at Honolulu, revealed that the craft suffered extensive damage to the stern through the breaking of her propeller shaft. The "Bali" was bound from San Francisco to the Dutch East Indies with a valuable cargo when the accident happened. The vessel was picked up by the "Makonia" of the Makon line several hundred miles from Hawaii. Repairs will lay the "Bali" up for a long period.

The tanker "Yorba Linda," built by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation's Alameda plant, developed a speed of 12½ knots on a recent trial trip. The board of directors of the oil company were on board and satisfied with the performance of the new craft, which is the first one built for the company. The "Yorba Linda" is 10,200 deadweight tons with a barrel capacity of 78,000 and engines of the triple-expansion type.

Although not equaling the time of the "Julia Luckenbach," which made the trip from the North Atlantic to San Pedro in fifteen days and one hour actual steaming time, the "Edward Luckenbach," also of the Luckenbach Steamship Company, made the trip to San Pedro in seventeen days, which is considered fast time for a freighter. She brought 9500 tons of general cargo for the West Coast, some of which will be discharged in the South and the remainder brought to San Francisco for local consignees. The "Edward" is to be followed by the "Walter A. Luckenbach," which is one knot faster than either of the other two.

Another mystery was added to the long list of sea tragedies, both known and suspected, when the "Grays Harbor" arrived in San Francisco from the north with 140,000 feet of lumber for Sudden & Christenson. Miles Youngberg, 22, a fireman aboard the "Grays Harbor," was posted as missing January 9 when he failed to report for his watch. A search of the ship failed to find him and it was remembered that he was last seen the day before. The report to the authorities stated that he was probably lost overboard, although there are no witnesses. The theory of murder was quieted by the statement of the officers that Youngberg had no enemies aboard as far as they knew.

From her comfortable quarters beside the sixteen or eighteen steamers which have been tied up here during the shortage in freight offerings, the "Eastern Ocean" will be sent with two other steamers to carry grain from Portland to the United Kingdom at the new price of $16 recently ordered by the Shipping Board. The former price was $18, and the reduction still leaves the foreign bottom price $1 lower. Kerr, Gifford & Co. have chartered the "Eastern Ocean," the "West Kader" and the "Mosella." The E. C. Evans Company will operate the first vessel, Sudden & Christensen the second, and McCormick & McPherson the third. The "West Kader" is a new ship, and the "Mosella" is on her way to San Francisco now with a cargo from the South.

Following the termination of a working agreement between the Pacific Steamship Company and the Matson Navigation Company and the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association No. 35, on February 8, a conference will be called between the interested parties, it was announced by the Engineers' Association. The caucus will be in the nature of an arbitration, as the companies have notified the Marine Engineers, it is stated, that they are dissatisfied with the present rules and working conditions contained in the existing agreement. None of the officials of the steamship companies would advance any statement regarding plans to be presented to the association. J. J. Searey, financial secretary of the association, who is handling the affairs of the men during the absence of Ernest F. Pegg, business agent, who is in Washington, stated that a conference will be called by both sides and that an extension will be asked by the engineers before the present agreement is annulled. The move of the steamship companies, as seen by the steamship operators, is an effort to readjust certain phases of the present working agreement.

Declaring that San Francisco is the cheapest port to have repair or fitting work done for steamers of any in the world, Daniel Hanlon, head of the Hanlon Shipbuilding Company, with yards across the bay, recently announced the purchase of a steamer and the reconstruction of a schooner into a motor-ship. Hanlon bought a 200-foot ship which was nearly completed in the Brunswick yards. His towing bill to this coast was $24,000, and other expenses brought the total expenditure to more than $35,000. He asserts that he can well afford to pay this sum to have the work done in San Francisco, as he would have been loser on the deal had he fitted the vessel with steam in the East and brought her out here with cargo. The new ship will be christened "Dan F. Hanlon" in memory of a son of Hanlon's who died in childhood. He will change the bow and add to the stern, as well as putting 1400 horse-power engines in her instead of the 500 horse-power motors with which she was equipped. She will also be equipped with modern towing gear and the best of quarters for officers and crew. The engines and boilers taken out of the "Hanlon" will be put into a new steel hull which will be designed especially for them. He says that the ship will be able to carry 600,000 feet of lumber with a 15.3-foot draft and that she will develop 10½ knots. Engines of 160 horse-power are also being put in the schooner "Oakland," now in the Hanlon yard. When completed she will have changed to the motor-ship class.

TO OUR READERS

With this issue the editor greets our friends and patrons after an interval of two decades. By a peculiar twist of fate the official staff is temporarily the same as twenty years ago, inasmuch as John Pearson is acting manager pro tem.

Many great events and remarkable changes have taken place since we last addressed members of the Sailors' Union through the "Coast Seamen's Journal," which was the name of this publication in the old days. Locally the most striking event was the destruction of San Francisco by earthquake and fire, April 18, 1906. Since then a great world war has been fought, which called to arms an approximate of 56,000,000 men; resulted in 26,000,000 casualties, and 11,000,000 deaths, and consumed $221,000,000,000 in treasure. Wireless telegraphy, which was in its experimental stage twenty years ago, has developed into one of the most scientific and serviceable forces within the control of man; while conquest of the air has progressed with rapid strides. In the world's overseas carrying trade, steam has almost entirely superseded the old time sailing vessels, and oil is as speedily displacing coal as a fuel. Changes affecting world conditions have been too numerous to describe, but a few directly affecting ourselves are worthy of mention.

As seamen with the eyes and spirit of youth we were optimistic in those days. We looked forward to great adventures and possibilities for the world, and for ourselves as a component part thereof. Our one great overwhelming ambition was to become free men, and to enjoy the same inalienable rights as others throughout the world. In America our desires have to a great extent been gratified by the enactment into law of the La Follette Seamen's Act, but tremendous obstacles must be surmounted before our condition as free and equal will be universal.

In line with progress everywhere our standard of living aboard ship has improved under steady gradual pressure. The conditions prevailing at present were not obtained merely upon request, but they are the result of thorough organization accompanied by forceful and intelligent action. As organized seamen we have been compelled to prove our mettle, and as employes our worth. During the last twenty years we have been engaged in two strikes—the waterfront strike of San Francisco, 1901, in defense of the right to organize, and a coast wide Seamen's strike, 1906, for a slight increase in wage. Otherwise, by mutual understanding between the shipowners and ourselves as to necessary changes or adjustments, we have maintained respectful and peaceful relations with our employers.

Our growth has been accompanied by those with whom we came in nearest contact. The Marine Cooks and Stewards and Alaska Fishermen's unions have organized, affiliated with the International Seamen's Union, and worked in harmony with us.

Each new departure has emanated from the desire of seamen for betterment of conditions, and as each object has been attained others come forward with new ideas.

During our progress as an organization the JOURNAL has been as a sail to the ship, trimmed to the wind, and expressive of the policy of the Union as embodied in its membership. We are on the same course; our aim: "The brotherhood of the sea"; therefore must we keep in touch with the sentiment of our members and endeavor to give expression thereto.

OBSERVE YOUR MORALE

According to a Websterian definition of the word "morale" it determines "the mental state, as of a body of men, an army and the like." Before the world war the word was used generally in a military sense, but since the armistice it has devolved into common use.

If we reflect upon the state of our morale as an organized body of men, we are liable to discern a weakness that requires attention and perhaps necessity for improvement.

Built upon the banks of one of the large Northwestern rivers is a cannery which once stood upon a solid and imposing wharf. Circumstances brought about a period of idleness, and the building fell into disuse. One year when the run of fish was heavy the management prepared for operations, with the result that the whole structure collapsed. Investigation showed that the stealthy, continuous boring of teredoes had eaten away the foundations of the wharf; lack of vigilance and attention had permitted their unrestrained attack.

There are many types of structures, and for comparison we can assume other kinds of teredo. In the structure of the union perhaps the most destructive borers into morale are some of the choice expressions of the ultra-conservatives; such as, "The masters won't stand for it"; "We dare not resist them"; "There is hard times directly ahead"; "We might get locked out"; "We'll get the worst of it," etc., etc., accompanied with the most pessimistic point of view.

Continuous reiteration of these expressions is the most discouraging line of conversation and bores dangerously into receptive minds. A glaring exhibition of the possibilities of a weakened morale was the collapse of the German military machine after infection from belief in the fourteen points.

We must not permit pessimistic and discouraging views to dull our sense of reasoning, nor attempt to delude ourselves that evasion or submission will result to our benefit. We cannot avoid some of the obstacles that confront us, so we had better be strengthened and prepared to overcome them. There can be no such word as dread in the lexicon of seamen, either as individuals or as an organized body of men. Let us look into the future with the same fearless spirit that animated the ancient vikings when they turned the prows of their lowly craft toward the vast uncharted waters of the West, and sailed courageously on, and on, and on, until a few daring explorers landed on this northern continent, centuries before Columbus entertained the Spanish court with the balancing qualities of an egg.

WHERE WILL IT END?

The highest court has not only beclouded the Sherman Anti-Trust law in a manner that defies interpretation, but it has annihilated the amendatory Clayton Act.

Contention that human labor is not a commodity is seriously challenged by the recent decision in the Duplex case.

The principles of Democracy receive a crushing setback in this latest ruling of Supreme Court Justices, and further abridgments of certain inalienable rights must be the inevitable result.

Federal courts have given Labor a number of hard knocks in the last few years, and the acme does not seem to have been attained.

Although we have in our simplicity believed ourselves to be governed in equal balance by Judicial, Legislative and Executive departments, a rude awakening reveals the fact that the triangle is topheavy and that the legislative functions are being abrogated by the judiciary; we face the anomaly of a creature of our Government with greater power than its creator. Will the tendency towards despotism receive a check, or will it be permitted to run unbridled until it becomes intolerable?

In order that no false impressions shall be spread abroad regarding characteristics of our members, the JOURNAL asserts that the number of bigots and radicals amongst the seamen of the Pacific Coast is negligible.

It is to be regretted that there are some persons who fail to recognize our distinctive qualities. Practical seamen learn to know each other, so extenuations are in order for those who fail to understand.

In a state of universal organization among the workers one meal would be worth all the money in the world. In that event the advantage would lie with the stomach most inured to abstention. In other words, hunger would be the ally, not the enemy of the workers.

As a memorial to General Gorgas, who cleaned up the disease conditions in the Panama Canal Zone, it is planned to erect in Panama an institute for the study of tropical diseases.

LEND A HAND

One of the most promising signs for the future welfare of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific is the keen interest at present displayed by our members in conduct of the meetings.

Every Monday evening at headquarters we greet each other in a full house, and the proceedings are followed with lively attention and decorum. New men are brushing up on committee work and learning the practical details of organization.

These activities are very desirable and every individual member should school himself thoroughly in the trade-union movement. It is the best quality of education that can be acquired, and can be mastered in connection with the skill of our profession. Ambition which impels a rise from deck boy to captain should also urge a thorough knowledge of aims and purposes of the trade-union movement.

We may not all become leaders, but there is every reason why we should endeavor to qualify.

Admiral W. S. Benson, chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board, calls attention to some very pertinent facts in the following bulletin recently issued to operators of Shipping Board vessels:

The conditions which now prevail in the ocean-carrying trade have forced the United States Shipping Board as well as private shipowners to lay up a great many vessels, which automatically sets adrift a large number of seafaring men.

As the representative of the largest shipowning corporation in the world, the chairman of the Shipping Board feels that it is timely to invite the attention of owners and operators to the fact that the largest factors in vessel expense under the conditions which prevail at this time are repairs and fuel.

While the policy of every prudent owner and operator is rightfully toward reduction in vessel expense, the chairman of the Shipping Board earnestly cautions all shipowners and operators not to be misled at this time into the employment of foreigners merely because it may be possible to obtain them at a lower schedule of pay than is satisfactory to American seamen.

The true goal of American effort is to increase the efficiency of operation. The most certain means to this end is improvement in the efficiency of sea labor. This improvement in turn has been brought about by getting the American man afloat and can best be continued by keeping him afloat.

The chairman of the Shipping Board appeals in the strongest possible terms to every right-minded and patriotic American citizen who owns, operates or has any interest whatever in American shipping, to seize this opportunity to collect American seamen in American ships rather than to drive him from the sea by yielding to the temptation of minor savings in the wage scale.

Stated in concrete terms, the union label is powerful because it accomplishes by peaceful means, with absolute certainty and at little cost, that which the strike and boycott seek to accomplish, always at great cost and sacrifice.

A certain philosopher has said that "instinct guided by reason is never wrong." This observation explains much of the success of trade unionism, which is primarily an expression of the instinct of self-preservation.

After all, the "labor question" is but an arithmetical question. Unfortunately, however, we still lack agreement upon the formula by which to solve it.

Attention is directed to Andrew Furuseth's review of the decision in the Duplex case, as quoted by Laurence Todd in this week's Washington letter on page 10.

DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

(By Andrew Furuseth)

"We will therefore try by all just means to promote harmonious relations with those in command by exercising due care and diligence in the performance of the duties of our profession."—Preamble of Constitution.

The duties of our profession are so many and varied that it would be impossible to enumerate them in this short sketch. I shall not try. I shall refer you to the Able Seaman as described in the Message to Seamen. I may, however, remind you here that the duties are very shortly described in Section 4612 R. S. Seamen are "to be at all times diligent in their respective duties . . . in everything relating to the vessel, and the stores and cargo thereof, whether on board, in boats, or on shore." The section goes on to say that the seaman "is to be obedient to the lawful commands," etc. To be obedient and to do one's duty on board a vessel at sea or in port, it is first necessary that the seaman shall know the work, which he is expected to do. He cannot know it unless he has learned it. He cannot learn it unless he gets the chance, and that must largely be given by the shipowner. The work is so different from work on shore that but little of it can be learned on shore. On shore he may learn what is known as marling-spike seamanship; but this is not one-third of the work that he must know in order to be able to obey all lawful commands and be at all times diligent.

We promised to ourselves when we began this Union that we would "try by all just means to promote harmonious relations with those in command by exercising due care and diligence," etc. We can do our best at this even without the co-operation of those in command and of the shipowner. And if we are to be true to ourselves we must do all we can; but all we can will not be very much unless we receive the co-operation of officers and owners. We can, however, do our best to learn our duties—our work—and this we must do if we are to prepare ourselves for all the emergencies, which seem likely to be always to be met with, but which in the coming time may mean more to the world and to us than we now can imagine.

It is the skilled man who is the dangerous man on every field. It is the skilled man who is respected, because he commands respect. It is the skilled man whom the thoughtful employer tries to keep in his service, and to whom he is willing to pay reasonable wages. A really skilled man may, under certain conditions, be able to save his employer very large losses and at the same time be able to save himself. If the skill be multiplied by combination and becomes the attribute of the members of a profession or calling, then such skill can save even the calling. Nay, it may restore it, even though it be almost lost. You cannot save yourself, and much less your calling, unless you and the members of your calling have such skill as to be able to meet all emergencies.

But entirely aside from the necessity for skill, by reasons mentioned above, there is the fact that man expresses his real manhood in the work that he is doing. A work well done gives satisfaction to the doer. No injunction judge, no officer, or

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Unions

"BOLSHEVIK SEAMEN"

It is under the above rather startling caption that the editor of the Marine News opens up his official batteries against the alleged inefficient, insubordinate and rowdy element now serving in the American Merchant Marine, in the current number of his usually phlegmatic periodical.

That many of them deserve lambasting is no poet's dream, and that they have received frequent and sincere editorial drubbings from the THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL of late that would make the puny efforts of the staid editor of the Marine News read like a Sunday-school tract by comparison, is equally well known.

The esteemed editor's views in so far as they relate solely to reputed frequent orgies of insubordination and general misconduct complained of, are in exact accord with our own.

The JOURNAL has never wasted an opportunity to uphold and defend the ancient doctrine of loyalty and devotion to duty among seamen at all times and at all hazards. Fully realizing that a strict regard for nautical discipline and unfaltering devotion to duty constitute the first essentials to a seaman's education, we have never failed to admonish our members on the importance of these subjects or to denounce those among them who have at any time disregarded the sacred traditions of the sea service by unseamanlike conduct of any kind.

We are seamen, brought up and educated as such, and we never depart from the strict tenets of the service in which we were trained. Respectful obedience to lawful commands is the first and most abiding rule of the sea.

Believing implicitly in this principle, we cannot tolerate, much less sanction, its infringement or disregard on the part of others. To this extent we are heartily in sympathy with the distinguished editor's arraignment of the insubordinate seamen referred to, and we heartily concur in his suggestion that they be eliminated from the service; but when he proceeds to attribute seamen's misconduct to "oppressive unionism" we hasten to enter a most solemn protest and administer a stern rebuke.

"Operators of American vessels do not object to American living standards for their crews," says the big editor apologetically, "but they rightfully protest the club-wielding tactics of seamen who, in their orgy of power in the last few years, have dictated to the shipowner and operator. . . . Oppressive unionism is just as bad as oppressive employers. It would be well for seamen to so correct their conduct that vessel operators forget to picture in their minds the inevitable day of reckoning."

Had this tirade emanated from any other source we would have given it scant attention, for they are all out with a hammer for the Seamen's Unions, but the editor of the Marine News has enjoyed superior advantages and is better informed than any of his contemporaries as to the policy of the Seamen's Unions. We have known the gentleman intimately for at least six months, and have seen to it that he is served regularly with THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL. He has frequently expressed to us his appreciation of the good work being done by our organizations and by the JOURNAL for the protection of seamen and the general improvement of the American Merchant Marine.

If he had read his JOURNAL as closely as he should have done we are sure he would never have been guilty of such a serious break as he has just made.

A number of times recently we have taken the seamen severely to task for actions complained of by the Marine News, and in a speech before the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association at New York on August 29, 1920, Mr. Andrew Furuseth told his hearers very distinctly and in unmeasured terms that they must render obedience to lawful commands on shipboard and uphold the traditions of their craft in this respect, or else get out of the Seamen's Unions entirely. We have no room in our midst for insubordinate or shiftless seamen.

As a matter of fact such has always been the established policy of the Seamen's Unions from the very beginning of our history. In every one of our constitutions will be found an identical clause dealing with this important subject, which provides thusly: "Any member who through misconduct on ship-board brings the Union in ill-repute, shall be dealt with as the Union may direct."

This means that any member so offending may be punished according to the nature of his offense.

If the shipowners are at all sincere in their expressed desire to be rid of this unruly element in the merchant marine they should be only too glad to co-operate with the Seamen's Unions to that end.

We do not want this unreliable element in the Union either, and if the shipowners are willing to co-operate with us for their complete elimination from the service we will gladly act jointly on this important proposition and go with them the entire distance.

But what will it avail us to exclude any man from our organizations while the operators still persist in carrying him in their ships? In such a case we would be simply cutting off our nose to spite our face.

In the matter of employing seamen, shipowners have always persisted in sending to sea any man that could walk, and a good many who couldn't, in the hope of reducing wages and discrediting the Seamen's Unions. Now that they are receiving an overdose of their own brew, they find it unpleasant and vent their wrath against the Seamen's Unions.

If there are any "bolsheviks" in the Merchant Marine it is because the shipowners have ordered it so, and not through any connivance on the part of the Seamen's Unions. American shipowners should begin their housecleaning at home!

There is another side to this question on which the alert editor of the Marine News has shrewdly neglected to touch: We refer to the frequent and serious charge against "bolshevik" shipmasters and officers. Here is a serious and all-pervading problem the solution of which the shipowners hold entirely in their own hands. Refrence to the records of the United States Courts, the State Department, and the archives of the U. S. consulates abroad, will reveal to the interested seeker for truth a truly alarming state of affairs, especially in regard to charges of drunkenness, brutality, and general misconduct of masters, mates and engineers on board American ships. These brass-bedizened gentlemen invariably go unscathed and unpunished, are always retained in the service of their willing employers, and sent to sea to sin some more with the same immunity from punishment they have always enjoyed.

This phase of the situation has again and again been discussed in THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL, and evidence of the most authoritative and convincing kind has been submitted in substantiation of our charges against offending ship's officers, but without results in so far as any shipowner has been concerned.

In the opinion of the great majority of shipowners it makes no difference what is done; the only difference seems to be as to who does it and to whom the deed is done.

"SEAMEN'S ALLOTMENTS"

In the January number of the Marine News appears an article under the above caption, on which the editor has personally requested us to write something. This we proceed to do with the greatest of pleasure.

The fact that the individual seaman whose complaint inspired the editor of the Marine News to take up cudgels on this important topic happened to be an officer, deters us not at all, but somewhat pleases us. There are no grades in adversity.

The practice of certain steamship companies (our esteemed contemporary so informs us) in refusing to pay seamen's allotments intended for the support of their families during their absence is becoming a serious question, and is resulting, in many cases, in great hardship to dependent families of seamen. These allotments, we are informed, are in many cases arbitrarily held up by shipowners, for no apparent reason except that they have the power, or because they don't want to be bothered with beggars.

A particularly atrocious case of this kind was related to us by the editor, although he apparently did not have space for it in his paper.

But according to the editor's story it appears that a certain deck officer of an American ship, about to sail on a long trip, left an allotment to his wife according to the provisions of clause "b" of Section 10 of the Seamen's Act. But after he had gone to sea his employers persistently refused to pay the accruing allotments to his wife as they became due.

The poor woman called time after time at the company's office for her due, but was always met with the same brutal refusal. Being in a delicate condition herself she was unable to work, and with a numerous family already on deck, her plight was pitiful in the extreme. The woman and family were finally reduced to the last stages of destitution and despair, when neighbors came to their relief; and all this time the husband and father was working valiantly at sea for their support, feeling secure in the belief that his family was being comfortably if not amply provided for out of his earnings.

It is hard to believe such cold-blooded arrogance could be possible among civilized men. Yet such appear to be the facts, and we did not obtain them from one of our own delegates either!

The editor asks our opinion as to what can be done to compel payment in such cases. We answer nothing as far as we know. If a man has no conscience the law cannot provide one; but if a man has a pocketbook a law can be made to mulct it when conditions warrant.

Article "a" of Section 10 of the Seamen's Act has teeth, and they can bite pretty hard too whenever anybody is foolish enough to attempt trifling with them. Article "b," however, is harmless in that respect so far, but may be able to grow some teeth after a while.

When seamen's allotment notes were invariably made payable to "original creditors," years ago, they were always cashed promptly on demand, not in installments, but for the aggregate amount of all allotments accruing during the prospective voyage, and there was never any quibbling about it either.

That was because the "original creditor" of the seaman was always a crimp, and delinquency on the part of a shipowner to "come across" would have promptly resulted in his ships being held up and left to "rot in their own neglected brine" for lack of crews. The crimps wielded a club over the shipowner's head more potent than blackmail, not because of the law, but in open and fearless defiance thereof. The shipowner was willing to break the law to oblige the crimp, because the hope of his gain depended on it; but in some cases, as it now appears, he is unwilling to obey the law to protect a poor woman and her helpless children, simply because there is no penalty for such refusal. The greatest bane of a sailor's life has always been that he was unable to marry and have a home and family of his own. He was a pariah of pariahs wherever he went—a homeless, hopeless unknown in all parts of the world, with no mother to pray, no wife to plead or children to cry for him. Therefore was his cause neglected.

We hold that any occupation whereby a man cannot assume the responsibilities of life, and support a home and family of his own, is not worthy of being mentioned among the list of useful avocations.

Now that seamen have arrived at something approaching that coveted estate and are preparing to take their rightful places among the elect of humankind, we propose, if possible, to keep them there and give them a chance to contribute their full quota toward the fulfilment of the Divine decree: "Be ye fruitful and multiply on the face of the earth."

We believe the law should make it obligatory upon all shipowners to pay their allotments regularly and promptly under suitable penalties, to the legal dependents of absent seamen, and that some adequate means should be provided by which both allotments and penalties can be as arbitrarily collected as they are now being refused.

A CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT

At a Stated Term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, held in the Court Rooms in the Post Office Building, Borough of Manhattan, on the 28th day of December, 1920.

Present: Hon. John C. Knox, District Judge. John Rhamm and John Aspelin, Libelants, against Mallory Steamship Company, Respondent.

The respondent Mallory Steamship Company having filed an offer to allow a decree to be entered herein in the sum of $28.80, and the libelants John Rhamm and John Aspelin having accepted the said offer,

Now on motion of Silas B. Axtell, proctor for libelants, it is Ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the libelants recover of and from the respondent Mallory Steamship Company, as damages, the sum of $28.80 and have execution therefor.

JOHN C. KNOX,
U. S. D. J.

All seamen will be interested in the foregoing "Confession of Judgment" now on file in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. The document speaks for itself.

The two seamen mentioned in the libel, having been required to work after hours, put in a claim for overtime which was refused. Whereupon, they quit argument and promptly carried their claim to the United States Court; not under the Seamen's agreement, but under Section 2 of the Seamen's Act, which establishes a legal nine-hour day for seamen working in port.

Finding that the two seamen meant business, attorneys for the ship came into court and entered a "Confession of Judgment," which is only another way of saying "we tried to swindle them, but dasn't in the presence of this Honorable Court." "Don't shoot, Davy; I'll come down!"

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

For a long time it has been known that various forms of dust when mingled with air in certain proportions are capable of producing explosions when brought in contact with flame. This danger sometimes exists in flour mills, an instance being the explosions, some years ago, of three flour mills at Minneapolis. It was then demonstrated by experiment that two ounces of flour in two cubic feet of confined air, when ignited, would cause a violent explosion, and it was calculated that the contents of a flour sack distributed through 4000 cubic feet of air would cause an explosion capable of throwing a weight of 2500 tons to a height of 100 cubic feet. A case is of record where sugar dust in a confectionery factory caused an explosion and in another case dry soap proved equally dangerous.

OCEAN'S ONLY INSECT

Of all forms of animated life, the insects are those which are most abundant, not only upon the land, but in the water, since a great many species are specially adapted to living near water and even spend part of their lives as water animals, as in the case of the larvae of mosquitoes.

It is a singular fact, however, that the ocean, which is so richly provided with such various forms of life, ranging from protozoa to the highest forms of warm-blooded mammals, such as whales and seals, can boast of but a single insect. This creature is interestingly described by M. A. von Lueigendorff in a recent number of Kosmos (Stuttgart).

The reason for the general absence of insects upon the surface of the sea is obvious, says this authority, the almost ceaseless and often violent motion of the masses of water, together with the general lack of plant life, such as might furnish sheltered dwelling places for insects. In view of these reasons it is all the more surprising to find that one species of insect has been able to adapt itself to life on the ocean waves. This is the seabug Halobates, closely related to the fresh-water insect Hydrometra, the widely known "water runner." The structure of this little creature's body is admirably adapted for existence upon water in almost constant motion. * * It is found exclusively in the tropical seas in comparatively calm stretches of water, and can best be observed on days when there is little or no wind. It usually prefers the high seas to the vicinity of the coast. * * Just what the "sea bug" eats is still quite uncertain.—Scientific American.

WOMEN MAGISTRATES

Women magistrates for courts dealing with children's cases are advocated in a report issued by the British Board of Education, according to information received by the United States Children's Bureau.

Juvenile offenses against the law are on the increase in England. The old methods of punishment by whipping and imprisonment have failed. In 1910 the number of young persons sent to prison totaled 2,800; in 1918 it had increased to 5,000. Of all those who were punished by detention one-sixth were back in the court within a month. Whipping has proved even more of a failure, as one-fourth of the offenders reappeared in court within a month.

The English magistrates, it is stated, have not had a sympathetic understanding of child life and they have not been keen to avail themselves of the many facilities for considerate treatment placed at their disposal by the Children's Act of 1908. The principle of rehabilitation is recognized in law, but the practice has been neglected.

The report recommends that every court should have a children's probation officer. His duty would be not only to supervise cases himself, but to secure the co-operation of teachers, scoutmasters, officers of boys' and girls' clubs and other social organizations so that every child in his charge should be introduced to one or more of these agencies.

(By Laurence Todd.)

The Clayton Act is dead, in so far as its supposed power to safeguard the right of organized workers to carry on their struggle for justice is concerned.

That is the substance of the decision of the majority of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Duplex Printing Press Co. against the International Association of Machinists.

All the fruits of thirty years of agitation by organized labor for legal protection of its peaceful methods of self-help, according to Samuel Gompers, have been swept away. The right to conduct a secondary strike is denied by the highest court in the land. Labor is once more, under this decision, a commodity which must not be withheld from commerce.

Andrew Furuseth, in a statetment on the triumph of reaction in the court, says:

"As a protection to those who toil, the Clayton Act is no more. In so far as a majority of the court found that it supplemented the Sherman Anti-trust law by extending it in its prohibition against the command of Jesus Christ—that we shall bear each other's burdens—it is held to be good law.

"We may see our neighbors about to be crushed by the supermen of modern business; we may see these supermen take the bread from the mouths of our neighbors and the milk from their children; but we may not help the suffering by accepting part of the load, if any such interference may in any way be detrimental to the business of the superman.

"To give such help as our sympathy and our interests may dictate will send us to prison for contempt and deprive us of the property that the superman, as a profiteer, may by accident have left us. . . .

"The affirmation that labor is property was true in Babylonia, in Athens, in Carthage, in Rome, and in the Southern States prior to the adoption of the 13th Amendment. It cannot be so held now, unless we disregard the Emancipation Proclamation, the surrender at Appomattox, and the adoption of the 13th Amendment to the Constitution. Congress saw this and by statute commanded that in construing the Sherman Anti-trust law and the amendment thereto—the Clayton Act—the judiciary should for the future recognize the fundamental distinction between the labor power of a human being and the products resulting from such labor power in activity. Did the Supreme Court fail to see and recognize this part of the Clayton Act, or did it deliberately disregard the will of Congress enacted into law in support of the 13th Amendment and human freedom?

"Was the court so blinded by the philosophy of commercialism that it failed to see the meaning of this part of the statute? Was the court so immersed in the Roman law as seen by the lawyers and the men of business that it was unable to see the American law as enacted by Congress and based upon the history and Constitution of the United States? . . .

"The fact is that we have here a terrible miscarriage of justice, and the case should be reopened in order that the court may apply American law. As it now stands the decision does violence to all the better feelings in man, especially in man of the white race. It is the death of chivalric impulses. It forbids us to go to the assistance of the weak if in combat with the strong. It is unsportsmanlike. It is unethical. It is un-Christian. It is un-American. It belongs to the jungle. Its tendency is to deprive the evolutionist of hope, to prove that the revolutionist is right. It will, if it be permitted to stand, create more Bolsheviki in these United States than could all the Russian propaganda assisted by the most liberal amounts of Russian gold."

Frank Morrison has suggested that, since the safeguards to labor do not hold, organized labor must now seek the repeal of the Sherman law, under which organized labor alone is made to suffer in prosecutions and suits for damages and injunctions. Within a few weeks the Supreme Court will probably hand down a decision in the case of the Arkansas coal operators, who have secured an award of $600,000 damages against the United Mine Workers of America for the attempted unionization of their employes. In view of the strongly anti-labor trend of recent decisions, the action of the court in this case can readily be forecast. Unless the anti-combination law is drastically revised or repealed, every dollar of trade union funds and trade union property in the country will be put in real jeopardy. That is one of the big cards now held by the directors of the "open shop" drive.

How tremendous is the scale upon which this war against the American labor movement is to-day being waged is sketched in the petition filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in behalf of President Johnston of the Machinists, by W. Jett Lauck, asking a Government inquiry into the extravagantly costly contracts signed by railroad companies with subsidiary supply concerns.

"Our records already show more than 32,000 men thrown out of work," says the petition, in telling of the process of turning over of railroad shop and maintenance work by the Morgan-controlled group of managements to their dummies. "This phase of the matter is without doubt part of the alleged 'open shop' movement which has for its real object the disruption of all legitimate labor organizations and trade union agreements. Evidence of its activity has already been disclosed—

"1. By its disruption of the Interchurch World Movement because it prepared a report advocating collective bargaining in the United States Steel Corporation, an industrial organization affiliated with J. P. Morgan & Co.

"2. In the recent startling revelations before the Lockwood Committee in New York, to the effect that the United States Steel Corporation and the Bethlehem Steel Co. refused to furnish fabricated steel to construction companies in New York City who employed members of labor unions.

"3. In the recent refusal of the companies entering into the anthracite coal combination controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co. to grant complete union recognition to the anthracite coal miners.

"4. In the present deplorable situation in Mingo and Marshall counties, West Virginia, and in the Birmingham district in Alabama, where there has been a complete breakdown of civil government due to the refusal of coal and steel companies, dominated by the United States Steel Corporation, to grant bituminous coal miners the rights of collective bargaining to which they are legally entitled.

"These same interests are now attempting by the unwarranted methods we have described, to deprive railroad workers of their right of collective bargaining."

Lauck shows that the railroad companies are "milking" the national treasury—under the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act—of three-quarters of a billion dollars this year, and are manipulating the money to drive organized labor from railroad employ. If they are permitted to continue they will for the first time in history conduct a private and predatory war to crush a large section of the nation itself, wholly at the financial cost of the nation. For, no matter how many hundreds of thousands of dollars, or how many millions, may be spent by the Morgan group of railroads in employing gunmen and scabs, every penny will be paid by the public instead of by the railroads. And the union men now being dismissed from railroad employ will contribute their share of the cost of their own destruction.

Such is the Esch-Cummins Act, pronounced by Senator Lenroot and by President-elect Harding a monumental act of statesmanship!

The same committee—Senate Interstate Commerce Committee—which approved this piratical legislation is now considering the Frelinghuysen amendment, which is proposed to supersede Section 10 of the Clayton Act, which now forbids the making of these "insider" contracts between railroad companies and supply companies in which the railroad owns a "material interest." This Frelinghuysen measure is filled, as Glenn Plumb says, with "weasel words" which destroy the law and will permit the permanent looting of the public through these cost-plus contracts for supplies and maintenance. It makes the Interstate Commerce Commission the sole judge, in any case where the issue arises, as to what is a "material interest"—in other words, how much of a supply concern may be owned by the railroad which gives it a fat contract. Also, and worse, the amendment gives the railroad the right to give as many contracts of not over $50,000 each as it may see fit to award, to any such dummy concern. As all work can be split up into $50,000 items, in one way or another, this clause kills the whole anti-gouge feature of the law.

The Frelinghuysen amendment may soon be reported out, favorably.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR CORK

A chemical works at Bruenn-Koenigsfeld has been carrying on experiments with a view to finding a substitute for cork, says a Prague correspondent in the Times Trade Supplement, and these have now led to tangible results. Turf treated by a special patented process furnishes a material for insulation and building purposes that is said to be, in most respects, not inferior, and in some superior, to cork. The product is reported to be equally light, firm, and sound proof, to possess great insulating properties, and to be damp proof.

throughout American business life down to the shareholder of the country bank. All are marshaled to meet an attack.

"It is not merely a matter of politics or business, but ties into social affiliation and prestige; and the attacker finds himself not only strangled in business life, but alienated from his friends. To attack the great financial interests is, they say, 'making war on society and on our institutions.' To criticize the crooked managements or railroads, the schemes by which they are enabled to fleece the people, is to be a 'socialist' or a 'bolshevist' and an enemy of society and to be frowned on by the highest social classes from the metropolitan club house to the lively circles of the village literary society."

Unusual Award

An unusual compensation award was recently made in the case of Mrs. Elizabeth C. Maguire of near Conshohocken, Pa., whose husband was killed by a foreigner outside the plant in which both were employed.

Maguire was a foreman and the foreigner declared he would "get him" because of a dispute in the shop.

The State Compensation Board ruled that the fact that the assault took place off the premises does not alter the case, and that there was an unbroken chain of events from the quarrel in the plant to the attack a few feet off the premises.

Renew Agreement

The Michaels, Stern & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., have renewed their agreement with the United Garment Workers of America and declare it their belief that it is "for the best interests of the workers and of the industry itself that the relations between the firm and the union be continued."

"To that end," say these employers, "we encourage and advise our employes to join the union, and we urge all members to be prompt in the payment of their dues and attend all the meetings of the union and to take an active part in its proceedings, in order that the union may truly represent the general attitude of the majority of our employes.

"We are confident that a representative organization of employes in which the great majority take an active interest, and through which their purpose and desires may be fairly ascertained and expressed, will be helpful in continuing the good will and co-operation now existing between the firm and our employes, to the well-being of all concerned."

shipowner, no matter how bad he may be, can deprive the worker of a feeling of pride in work well done. The ability to do really good work, if you will it so, carries with it the ability to do real bad work, if you should be driven in that direction.

The really skilled seaman is the best shipmate. He can understand your difficulties better than other men and, if he be otherwise a man, he will be pleased to teach you what he knows himself. Of course, you must be willing to learn. It will not do to maintain that you know enough to make all the money you think you ought to be making for your employer. You are not to please him by knowing and doing your work. You are to please yourself. The skill that you are gathering is your personal attribute. It is part of you. It is in you. You cannot sell it. You can not give it away. It is your labor-power, the most individual thing, the most personal thing in all the world. It cannot be taken from you. While you may not need it now, to-day or to-morrow, you know not when or where your life, your existence as an individual, may depend upon it. You know not when or where the existence, the future, the well-being of your Union, and the freedom of the race may depend upon it.

When you have the skill you are ready for what may come. No one hath seen to-morrow's sun rise. We know nothing about the morrow, but we may make ourselves ready to meet it and to-morrow's sunrise by acquiring the fullest possible skill in our calling.

On the Pacific Coast we are under obligations to our employers to give them good service. They give us the preference in employment and they employ us in harbor as well as at sea. They have a right to expect good work from us and it is our duty to give it while they continue to treat us fairly. Where we are not so treated, where we are compelled, in order to live, to work with and associate with anybody from anywhere at the shipowners' pleasure, it will depend upon us, if we shall give to such the benefit of our skill. They have no moral right to it, because they fail to treat us as men. We should, nevertheless, for our own sake, give them a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. But we should do this, because we feel better in so doing.

In any and all circumstances and under all conditions we will be the better for having developed skill in our work. Let us do this by all means.

CALLING THEM HOME

George Tchitcherin, People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs at Moscow, has ordered the Russian soviet trade bureau in the United States dissolved, and all the Russian members of the staff returned to their home country. This decision was made following the announcement of the Department of Labor's action in ordering the deportation of Ludwig Martens, the Russian trade envoy. No appeal will be taken from the decision of the Department of Labor. Mr. Martens has notified the department through his attorney, Charles Recht, now in Washington, that he wishes to return home at his own expense, taking his family and his staff. He was delivered to the department on January 3 by Mr. Recht, on whose parole he has been since the issuance of the deportation order December 18.

Forces of various kinds directed toward the disruption of organized labor have a powerful ally. He is an unscarred veteran of many industrial battles, unscarred from the fact that he is not a fighter and is never found on the firing line. His name is General Apathy and his number is legion.

Labor News

About 300 employes of the California Cotton Mills (unorganized) recently quit in dissatisfaction over a decrease in wages.

Despite storms of protest by manufacturing interests, the city commissioners of Birmingham (Ala.) have voted that hereafter eight hours shall be the basic work day for municipal employes.

The Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Los Angeles, Calif., has asked the Brownstein-Lewis Company to resign from that body because this firm is erecting a building with the understanding that only union labor shall be employed.

The Supreme Court of the State of Washington has upheld the $18 minimum wage rate for women employed in the hotel and restaurant industry. Hotel men were also defeated in an attempt to annul the six-day order of the State Industrial Welfare Commission.

The shipping business of Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, has been paralyzed by a strike of the stewards. Vessels aggregating 100,000 tons are tied up at both ports and the only ships that have been able to move are those under the American flag.

The Anaconda Copper Mining Company has entered upon a general policy of wage reduction. According to notices received by the officials of the metal trades the company will reduce the wages of all employes receiving more than $5.75 per shift, $1 per day. Other employes will be reduced from 50 to 75 cents per shift, on and after January 20. The communication also states that all contracts now in existence are to be considered abrogated after January 16 and that certain working rules now in force will not be recognized by the company. The existing contracts include a union-shop clause, which will be nullified by the company's action.

The beginning of the wage-cutting campaign is in evidence in San Diego. The Kier-Simpson Construction Co., which has been doing the preliminary work for the $700,000 naval hospital, served notice that wages would be cut $1 a day for laborers. After every effort had been made to settle the matter amicably, the workmen on the job were called off, and they came with the exception of two men. A remarkable thing about this strike is the fact that both union and non-union men were employed and when the union men were called off the non-union men came as well, including both Mexicans and Negroes, and the shame of the whole thing was that the two traitors were white-skinned but black-hearted.

Boston policemen who replaced striking policemen have established unenviable records, according to the annual report of Police Commissioner Curtis. This official was most active in opposing the recent effort of policemen to improve conditions. He disbanded their fraternal organization, and when they affiliated with the American Federation of Labor he discharged many patrolmen. As a last resort the police struck. Now Police Commissioner Curtis acknowledges that eight times more property was reported stolen last year than in 1919. During the year 73 police men were found guilty of various charges and dismissed and 231 reprimanded. Of the latter number 51 got while charges were pending against them.

"SALVAGE"

SEAMEN, do you know what you are entitled to receive for services that you perform as volunteers in saving life and property at sea? If you don't, get a copy of Axtell's Book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen." It covers this subject completely. Why should you sign papers for a runner from a lawyer's office, to collect what you have earned, if, by knowing the law, you can get it without doing so. Do you know that it is contrary to law and ethics of the profession for a lawyer to employ a runner or pay a runner or any other person any portion of his fee for getting business for him; that such an attorney is not regarded as fit to practice in the majority of States in the United States? In cases where a lawyer represents the whole crew, including officers and men, 15% is a fair charge, for collecting the money where it does not involve litigation. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and the Statutes of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other.

Overtime, personal injuries, wrongful discharge, waiting time, penalties are fully discussed in this little volume.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

> "Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.
> "As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am
> "Respectfully yours,
> FRANK MANNING,
> Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

A 10 per cent. reduction in wages, effective January 17, has been announced by the John A. Roebling's Sons, of Trenton and Roebling, N. J.

After receiving a proposition from their employers, the Holt Manufacturing Company of Peoria, Ill., for a reduction of 20 per cent. in wages, 1000 employes of the concern failed to report for work.

Manufacturing and business interests will renew their fight before the Legislature for a New Jersey cossack system and certain newspapers are molding a public opinion to this end. The Trenton Times seizes upon the crime wave and declares that the cossacks will round up night prowlers.

The 65 leading telephone companies of the United States operated at a profit of more than $7,500,000 during September, an increase of $3,024,179 over the corresponding month of last year. The income of the companeis for September amounted to $41,736,621 and the operating expense amounted to $31,690,367.

The federal census shows an increase in farm mortgages in Alabama. In 1910, 26.9 per cent. of all farms operated by owners were mortgaged, and the figures for the last census show that the percentage of these farms has increased to 30 3-10. The number of white farmers is 160,896, of whom 88,974 are owners. The 95,203 colored farmers include 17,202 owners.

The Sunday Rights Association, non-sectarian and non-political, was organized at New York last week at a gathering of city officials and professional and business men, for the announced purpose of "opposing legislation intended to restrict the liberties of the American people on the Sabbath." Martin Vogel, formerly Assistant Treasurer of the United States, was elected president.

The building trust probe has exposed a combination of four paint and white lead manufacturers that control 95 per cent. of this commodity. Next to white lead the principal ingredient of paint is linseed oil and the probers declare that they will connect this trust with the paint combine. It was shown that the manufacturers exchanged price information and competition was eliminated.

The biennial convention of the four railroad brotherhoods of Wisconsin unanimously went on record for the Government ownership of the coal mines in their session at Milwaukee. The legislative boards were instructed to request legislation at Washington for the ownership or regulation of the mines, and the sale and distribution of the coal. The "un-American and tyrannical attitude" of the Bethlehem Steel Co. toward the unions and its declaration not to sell a product to any factory that has not declared for the open shop, was denounced. The passage of the Poindexter anti-strike bill by the United States Senate was scored and the Senate declared to be an American House of Lords. The Congressmen and Senators from Wisconsin were urged to do all in their power to abolish the Esch-Cummins law. Government regulation of the railroads was set down as a demonstrated failure and it was pointed out that the alternative was a form of Government ownership and operation. The convention unanimously endorsed the Plumb Plan for the ownership of the railroads.

Domestic and Naval

The United States Shipping Board has at the present time 208 vessels of 1,262,000 tons tied up in the harbors and ports of the country, and 100 more are entered for withdrawal.

The American steamer "Polar Star," which sailed from Hamburg December 27, bound for Hampton Roads, returned from the lower Elbe to Hamburg the following day. The vessel's engines are damaged.

The application of the Federal Government for appointment of a receiver for the Sloan Shipyard Corporation and allied companies has been denied by Judge Neterer in the United States Court at Seattle. The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was one of the defendants.

Some very quick repair work has been accomplished by the United Engineering Co. in substitution of a new spare section in the crank shaft of the S. S. "Queen." The work was performed by forty mechanics working in shifts and was completed in four days.

With the transfer of the New York Quarantine Station to the U. S. Public Health Service, the Federal Government will have complete possession and control of the country's inner line of defense against disease from abroad. Most States have long since relinquished this work, New York being the last to give up to Federal control.

Naval officers are enthusiastic over the successful completion of the flight from San Diego, Calif., to the Canal Zone by twelve of the Navy F-5-L seaplanes. The 3200 miles was completed in seventeen flying days and was marred by one fatality. Chief Radio Electrician Cain was struck by a propeller at Fonseca Bay. The flight is one of the longest on record and over a course never before traversed by aircraft.

Sugar destined for delivery from the Hawaiian Islands to Atlantic Coast ports will be transferred by an all-water route. An agreement between the Shipping Board and officials of the Matson Navigation Company provides that the steamers "Hawkeye State" and "Buckeye State" will carry these cargoes when placed in operation by the latter company. At present sugar is transported from the Islands to San Francisco and shipped by rail to the East Coast.

Navy Department advices state that the former concrete ship plant of the Pacific Marine and Construction Company of San Diego, Calif., is to be converted into a fleet repair base. Work is to start at once on six concrete docks, each 300 feet in length, with which the base is to be equipped. After it goes into commission next summer, destroyers, mine-sweepers and other small craft which are now being sent to Bremerton and Mare Island Navy yards for docking or repairs, will be handled by the San Diego fleet repair base.

Purchase of the "Wandilla," owned by the Eryldon S. S. Co., of Newcastle, New South Wales, is announced by Furness, Withy & Co. The vessel will be used in the Bermuda and West Indian runs from New York. She measures 7,78- gross tons and is a sister ship of the "Fort Victoria," now in the Line's New York-Bermuda service. William Beardmore & Co. built the vessel just before the war on the Clyde for the Australian company. It is claimed that she will be the largest and fastest steamer in the West Indian service.

News from Abroad

British exports of steam coal in October, 1920, were 1,058,047 tons (against 4,952,643 tons in 1913) and of gas coal, 164,119 tons (against 1,026,497).

According to the Paris Matin, France will retain all German ships which she has been managing provisionally under the terms of the Versailles treaty. These ships aggregate 430,000 tons.

The tonnage tax brought in a revenue of $1,707,934 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, according to the report of the Commissioner of Navigation. Of the total $687,743 was contributed by American vessels.

The Odd Shipping Co., Sandefjord, has absorbed the two whaling companies South Pacific and Dominion. The capital of the combine will be Kr. 8,000,000, and the manager will be Chr. Christensen, Jr., of Sandefjord.

The Italian Fuel Controller has fixed prices per metric ton, free on truck, at Italian ports, as follows: Belgian coal, 580 lire; German coal, 650 lire (Silesia) to 900 lire (Westphalia); British and American steam coal, 770 to 800 lire.

In view of the depression in shipping, it is persistently rumored in Japan that an attempt will be made either to nationalize shipping or at least to bring about a merger of some of the larger shipping concerns.

The Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. announces that the new liner "Orca" will be used in the new service from New York to Southampton and Hamburg, which is expected to begin next spring, in addition to the liners "Orduna," "Oropsa" and "Orbita" already scheduled.

The British Secretary of State for the Colonies has been approached by the Government of the Island of Malta in connection with a proposal to establish the shipbuilding industry there, and has been asked for his advice as to how this end might be attained.

The Compagnie de Navigation Sud-Atlantique, whose vessels made 25 licensed voyages to Brazil and River Plate and 8 under requisition last year, reports a gross income of 31,473,564 fcs., less expenses of 30,500,501 fcs., leaving a net profit of 973,062 fcs. The dividend is at the rate of 7 per cent. on both classes of stock.

The Talatta Sailing Vessel Co., of Aarhuus, managed by M. A. Olesen, started in March, 1919, by six captains with a share capital of Kr. 1,500,000, has had to stop payments and will now probably be wound up. The company has persistently been prosecuted by misfortune, one of its ships was burned, another was purchased in Sweden and led to an enormous loss in exchange rates, and a third vessel is lying at Aalborg, with attachments against her on account of repairs which cannot be paid.

The first step to prevent seamen signed on at foreign ports for a round voyage throwing up their contracts at American ports under the terms of the Seamen's Act, has been taken by the Norwegian Shipowners' Association, which has memorialized its members to impress it upon their captains not to engage at American ports deserters from Norwegian vessels. It is further stated that some Norwegian owners are adopting the policy of requiring sailors to give security against deserting at American ports.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL

FOR THE SEAFARING PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.
Official Paper of the International Seamen's Union of America.

A Journal of Seamen, by Seamen, for Seamen. Our Aim: The Brotherhood of the Sea. Our Motto: Justice by Organization.

VOL. XXXIV, No. 21. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1921. Whole No. 1737.

THE I. S. U. OF A. CONVENTION

Work of the Year Reviewed in Report of President Furuseth

The Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the International Seamen's Union of America was called to order in Scandinavian Hall, Philadelphia, Pa., on Monday, Januar 10, 1921, by President Furuseth.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Mr. C. J. Cattell, representing the Mayor of Philadelphia, who was absent from the city, and Mr. George F. Sproule, Director of the Department of Wharves, Docks and Ferries.

President Furuseth's report contains summary of progressive attainments, present conditions, and recommendations for future action.

To the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the International Seamen's Union of America.

Comrades and Delegates:

In bidding you welcome to the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of our Organization, I beg you to look over the field and recall to your minds the substance of the report submitted to the last Convention. The founders of this movement did not look upon it as in any sense a local movement. "They looked into this country, and then to the world as the field of our endeavor. They gave the impulse to an organization that was to work to improve the condition, first, on this coast, then in this country, and then in the world." In so far as we have proven true to the purposes that were in the minds of the founders we have tasted success. In so far as we have failed in loyalty we have met defeat. This movement was and is to remove the shackles from the seamen and to set them free, or it is nothing. It is to restore to the seamen the status of free and skilled men—men who know their work and their duty, and who are willing to do it, or it is a No Thing. That other groups in human society have chosen to look upon our work and upon us as inferiors, who ought to be satisfied with less than absolute equality with other men is no reason why we should either, by our claims or our conduct, admit or even give occasion for any such estimate. Some groups take this view of inferiority, because, while they know better, they want to deceive other groups and, if possible, impose these ideas on us. Others believe it because they are told, and yet others because they beheld us as bondmen who would not or could not do anything for their own liberation. These last saw only the results; they knew naught of the past, of the inheritance, which had been imposed upon us, of the difficulties which we had to meet and to overcome. These did not consist solely in the opposition of our employers, who, having practically absolute power over our lives, were resisting any change. It was to be found also in the division of our calling as seamen into three groups—sailors, firemen, cooks and stewards. (For the purposes of this analysis I am considering the fishermen as sailors).

These sub-groups had each a way of thinking itself superior to the other or others, and it was very difficult for them to see that the sub-groups must work together—that they "must hang together or hang separately."

We have, to a large extent, overcome this difficulty. We are now working together. It was the fact that we were working together that made it possible to accomplish what we so far have. If we shall ever fail to recognize the absolute inter-dependence of these three groups and shall try to "go it alone," we may be sure of defeat. Yet another reason was a tendency to localize our efforts. We failed to understand that we were, of necessity, migratory, and we tried to copy not only the ideas, but the very form of organization of men on shore. As our work, our lives, our status was and is separate from men on shore, so we are compelled to lay our struggles on different lines from men on shore, and the organization in itself must be different because it must correspond to our migratory life. As with us there can be no real separation into the sub-groups, so there can be no real separation into districts. Our present arrangement into sub-groups is useful, nay necessary, in order, that we may work the better together; our division into districts is good and is needed for administrative purposes; but the closer we can get together for the purposes of adjusting any differences that may arise between members of the different sub-groups and in dealing with our employers, the easier we can make it for members to participate in any business and receive the benefit and protection of the union in any office or meeting, no matter where, the stronger we shall be and the better we shall be able to work for those ideals for which we are organized. We must more and more seek to realize our ideal of "the Brotherhood of the Sea." We must learn to understand that only in so far as we are really brotherly in thoughts and conduct, and thus joyously bear each other's burdens shall we be able to regain our true place among men.

We have attained a larger membership than we thought possible. We have gained this membership in a very short period. It is not possible that education has advanced as fast as the membership. But the membership must be taught to understand this movement, its fundamental purposes, its real hopes and its high aspirations, or it will lose itself in momentary daily interests, which is often nothing but Jack-o'-lanterns leading us into swamps, where destruction is as unavoidable as it is certain. The new member is not to be blamed if he follows such lights if it be the best he has. It is the duty of those who know and especially is it the duty of the officers to furnish him with the light he needs—the better light.

When we began this Organization we promised ourselves—the most binding of all promises—that we would seek to so amend the law, that we might be free men and thereby be able to work for an American personnel—a body of American seamen. We have done this, and from the point of law there is little remaining to prevent such development. It is true that some of the freedom is being construed away by the Courts; but such decisions we hope to have overruled either by the Courts themselves or by Congress. It is also true that much of the law is permitted to sleep because it is not yet fully understood by the executive part of our Government; but this we may hope to see altered in some way. Any policy which stands in the way of the development of skill and efficiency or in the way of equalization of the wage-cost of operating vessels will be sure to pass away if we shall persist in calling this to the attention of the American people and the different branches of its Government. When it is understood that the "Kalashi-Watch" works against the development of an American personnel, against efficiency and safety, the "Kalashi-Watch" will have to go. When it is understood that the failure to enforce the "Language Clause" drives the American from the sea, prevents the actual equalization of the wage-cost, and thereby destroys the hoped-for development of real American sea power, we may be sure that the "Language Clause" will be enforced. We must do our share. We must, in one way or another, keep these matters before those competent to deal with them until their full meaning is understood.

We promised ourselves that we would work for the maintenance and development of skill in seamanship. In this matter we have not done all that we ought to have done. Of course it is true that we could not do much in the past. We are compelled, in order to live at all, to take into our Organization all such men as the shipowner was willing to employ. We were compelled to do this or we would be gradually excluded from all vessels, and this would have destroyed all skill. We may be compelled to continue this system on the Atlantic and the Lakes and readopt it on the Pacific; but if the shipowners on the Atlantic and the Lakes can be induced to give to Union members the preference in shipping we can and should insist upon as high a standard as possible, and we should, on shore as well as on board vessels, do our best in developing such a standard of skill that the vessels need not go to the repair shops, except for general overhauling or to repair damages arising from accidents.

We insisted that we had the inalienable right to be employed without the interference of crimps or other parties not interested. In other words, we promised that we would try to bring about a system of shipping under which the master or other officer and the men themselves should be the only parties mixing in the shipment of men. At the time when we made this promise to ourselves the shipping was through the crimp or the boarding-master. For a seaman to obtain employment by direct application to the vessel was a nearly unheard-of thing. The mate or engineer might want the man and the man might want the employment, but the crimp or boarding-master—the marine-employment agent—stood in the way. There were boarding-masters who for a consideration were given the right to furnish men for the vessel of certain firms or lines, or the arrangement was made by the master in an individual vessel, and the seaman was helpless. When the boarding-master judged that it was time to send a certain man to sea the man was compelled to go anywhere and with anybody in any vessel and practically at any wages. There was no freedom, no choice, either on the part of the seaman or the officer who was to have him under his command. Of course, the vessel, the officer and the seaman suffered. The seaman who knew his work had to do the work for those who could not. The work of the vessel was not done, and that which, for want of a better name, was called "discipline" was enforced by a belaying-pin, a heaver or a capstan-bar.

Given a condition in which the Union has to take in anybody who is good enough for the employer, there is little difference whether the shipping is done through a boarding-master or, by turn, through the Union office. There is the same want of the exercise of the free will on the part of the seaman and the officer, the same going where one is not willing to go; the same obstruction to free choice and individual effort; the same tendency to destroy skill and real discipline as when shipping is through the boarding-master. The only improvement is that the graft and blackmail is abolished, and even of that we are not certain. This system is favored by quite a number of seamen, especially by men who are new in our movement and accustomed to the boarding-master. They mistakenly think that it gives to all an equal chance for employment. Of course, this is not the fact. The man who comes on shore with a good pay-day may stay on shore waiting for another good trip, while the man who came on shore with a small pay-day is compelled to take what comes. But this has so far been learned only after much suffering which taught the member to hate the Union. The thing is a Jack-o'-lantern and leads to the swamp.

Of course, the evils of the system do not come to the front in a small place. The men there know each other and they can supervise the whole thing; but aside from that it is convenient to the men and also to the vessels and the officers. It is in large ports that the evil develops until it has all honest-thinking men against it; but then it had usually killed the real Union by making the members distrust and hate each other. The real work of the system is then done. The maggots have eaten the fur and then they, too, have died. Let us try to save the fur from the maggots and thus save the maggots, too. If the young men do not know it is not only our fault, it is our disgrace.

We further insisted on the right to be treated in a decent and respectful manner by those in command. And finally we said: "Recognizing the above as inalienable rights, we are conscious of corresponding duties to those in command, our craft and our country." As I quote these words and thus feel again the impulse which caused us to promise this to ourselves I feel that in this promise we have failed more than in others. Our excuse, if one shall be accepted, is that we have been so busy trying to live and get into a position in which we could really try to live up to this promise that, if we have been wanting, we had the best of excuses for our failure. In the past this was so largely true that our critics might well hesitate; but it is not any longer so true as to furnish us with any excuse, and we must do our best to redeem this pledge. We have not been untrue to the pledge in so far as it applied to the country. No honest man will maintain that. It is in keeping the promise to our craft and to those in command that we have largely failed. Let us go from this Convention with the fixed purpose of giving proper respect to those in command and to build up our craft so that we shall compel respect where it is not freely given. We also gave the following promise:

"We will, therefore, try by all just means to provide harmonious relations with those in command by exercising due care and diligence in the performance of the duties of our profession, and by giving all possible assistance to our employers in caring for their gear and property."

We can, and I hope we will do this, even if we shall get no sympathy or help from our employers; but we shall be able to do more than even our friends may think if we shall be able to obtain the co-operation of our employers, among whom is now the Government of the United States.

A campaign of education on the lines above suggested is essential, and we must proceed as steadily and persistently as we can. Our duty is clear. We gave the promise. We gave it when we were bonded and could do little to redeem it. We are now free, and with freedom comes responsibility. The campaign must be conducted orally as well as in print, and in it we must not be satisfied to let a few men try it. We must try to use all the ability and enthusiasm in our membership; but, above all, we must expect and insist upon all officers of the Union being active and follow the lines laid down.

I beg to suggest to the Convention that it take under serious consideration—

First. The extension and fuller use of the idea embodied in The International Book.

Second. The amendment of the Constitution so that any grievance between member or members of one sub-group with member or members of another sub-group shall be promptly considered by the grievance committee in order to harmonize such grievances or report them to the sub-groups interested for such action as may be needed.

Third. That meetings in the different agencies of each sub-group be on the same day, that the meetings of other sub-groups be on some other day in order that we may visit each others' meetings.

Fourth. That the utmost effort be put forth in each agency to hold such regular meetings and that a part of the meeting be set aside for educational purposes.

Fifth. That we invite other Seamen's Unions to send us for distribution such short and convenient reading matter as they shall desire to have distributed to their members while in our ports.

Sixth. That to the extent possible we visit seamen on foreign vessels to furnish them with such information as shall be of importance to them and distribute such reading matter as has been sent to us for this purpose and as we may issue.

Seventh. That the Convention recommends to each sub-group to have as nearly as possible the same laws and the same benefits.

Continued Antagonism to the Seamen's Act

In trying to report upon this it is, of course, impossible to more than indicate the trend of the struggle and to give a few of the more important events. The misrepresentation of the Seamen's Act is, of course, being continued. The enemies of the Act evidently find no difficulty in obtaining space in the press, because some of the most stupid statements regarding the Act and its influence upon American commerce may be found not only in the daily press and the weekly press, but even in the magazines. Some "eminent American" man of business solemnly tells how the Act is sure to destroy American shipping; how it is destroying discipline; how it induces young men to desert from their duty and from our ships; how it assists in making drunkards out of the young men, etc., and all such, because this law gives to the seaman the right of getting at least some of the money he has earned and which as others he surely ought to receive when he needs it and when he wants it.

Before the enactment of the law the men could only get money "at master's option," and the master was in position to protect the young man against himself. The master was the guardian and true to his trust. Such are the ideas disseminated, while the truth was otherwise and the real purpose is to repeal so much of the Act as is needed in order to hold the foreign seaman on the foreign vessel in American harbors against his will and thus destroy the trend to equalization of wage-cost, which is operating as steadily as time and persistently as human self-interest, upon which in fact it is based. When one tries to run down the interest of the writer it is generally found to be foreign. The real American shipowner has by this time learned that the Act is in his interest, that in fact it is placing him on an equality with his competitors, and he is not looking to have it destroyed. Of course, there are some features of the Act which narrow the field from which he was accustomed to obtain seamen, and, therefore, has a tendency to increase the wages. The present slump in shipping, caused by the poverty of Europe, our best customer, will give to this kind of American shipowner his opportunity to seek a reduction in the wages of seamen and to endeavor to insert clauses in the shipping articles by which he hopes to nullify the Act. If he would give a mite of the intelligence that he must have to be a successful man of business, he would know that wages mean nothing to him unless he is paying either more or less than is paid by his competitor. He does not pay any wages at all when the wages are the same to all. The total wages then goes into the cost of the article transported and is collected from the consumer with interest and profit. It is only when he pays more that he pays anything. When he pays less the difference is clear again.

There is a strong and persistent effort to nullify the Seamen's Act by inserting into the shipping-contracts clauses, that in so far as they may be held to be legal, and, of course, it is hoped that Judges may be persuaded to so hold, will result in robbing the seaman of the protection that was up to the present held to be fundamental.

The following are some of these clauses:

". . . and thence to any port or places within the limit of 65 degrees North and/or 60 degrees South latitude, trading to and fro as may be required, and carrying any kind of cargo required, including Crude Petroleum; and/or its product in bulk or otherwise, for a period not to exceed one year, and back to a final port of destination in the United States on the Atlantic Coast, which port or destination may be determined at the absolute option of the Master, and be either final discharging, or bunkering, or dry-docking port."

(1) "Should any of the crew fail to join at the time specified, the Master may ship substitutes at once.

(2) "Seamen and Firemen shall keep their respective forecastles clean, and shall leave them so at the termination of the voyage, under penalty of two days' pay for each case of neglect.

(3) "Nine hours per day shall constitute a working day, while in port or at such times when regular watches are kept.

(4) "The Greasers, Firemen and Trimmers shall wipe down the engines at the end of each passage, whether at anchor or in dock.

(5) "Firemen and Trimmers shall keep the galley supplied with coal.

(6) "No liberty granted other than at the pleasure of the Master.

(7) "No matches of any description to be brought on board by or for any member of the crew; any matches necessary will be supplied by the owners. No naked lights of any description shall be used for any purpose. Smoking is strictly prohibited on board whilst in port, and is only permitted at sea, and then only in such places as designated by the Master. Any member of the crew infringing the above clauses, or either of them, will be fined a sum not exceeding four days' pay for each offense or dealt with as considered necessary for the safety of the vessel.

(8) "Crew to work on day of arrival in final port of discharge until 5 o'clock P. M.

(9) "It is further understood and agreed that any question whatsoever between Master, Consignee, Agent or Owner of the above-named vessel, and any of the undersigned seamen or mariners, shall be heard and decided by any Shipping Commissioner or Consul, appointed under the authority of the laws of the United States, and that every award so made by him shall be binding upon parties, and shall in any legal proceedings which may be taken in the matter before any Court of Justice be deemed conclusive as to the rights of the parties as to such question or subjects of dispute.

(10) "The crew, and each member of the crew, agrees to be transferred collectively or separately at any port to any other vessel owned by the same owners, excepting vessels trading in the War Zone, unless mutually agreed, provided always that the rating and rate of wages be the same as herein specified; the total period of service is not to exceed that stated in this agreement."

(1) "The crew may be transferred to any other vessel belonging to the same line or owners, at the same rate of wages and under the same conditions.

(2) "Crew to work on day of arrival in port of final discharge until 5 o'clock P. M.

(3) "Crew to work cargo if required by the Master.

(4) "Crew to keep their respective quarters clean and in order, under penalty of a fine.

(5) "No liberty granted at any foreign port.

(6) "Any member of the crew failing to report for duty at 7 o'clock A. M. on sailing day in a sober condition shall be discharged and a substitute shipped in his stead.

(7) "It is further understood and agreed that any question whatsoever between Master, Consignee, Agent or Owner of the above-named vessel, and any of the undersigned seamen or mariners shall be heard and decided by any Shipping Commissioner or Consul, appointed under the authority of the laws of the United States, and that every award so made by him shall be binding upon parties, and shall in any legal proceeding which may be taken in the matter before any Court of Justice be deemed conclusive as to the rights of the parties as to such question or subject of dispute.

(8) "Overtime to be paid for at the rate of 60 cents per hour.

(9) "Firemen to keep galley supplied with coal."

General—Used by U. S. S. B.

And it is also agreed as follows:

(1) "That every person on board shall be held responsible for the property placed in his charge.

(2) "Firemen to clean and paint fire-room and engine-room at sea when required.

(3) "Any member of the crew proved guilty of the concealment of a stowaway will be held responsible for any expense incurred by the owners by reason thereof, the same to be deducted from wages due the said member of the crew.

(4) "Smoking not permitted on deck, nor in passengers' quarters, under a penalty of a fine.

(5) "Firemen to keep the galley supplied with coal.

(6) "Overtime to be paid to Firemen and Sailors at the rate of 40 cents per hour for ship's work and 50 cents per hour for cargo work and on Sundays, provided regular watches are not kept.

(7) "Crew to submit to vaccination in all foreign ports, or any other health regulation that is imposed on the ship.

(8) "Liberty allowed only at the Master's option.

(9) "Firemen and Sailors to keep their respective quarters clean and in a sanitary condition, and anyone found defacing these quarters will be subject to a fine equal to the damage done.

(10) "Should any member of the crew be found not to be properly sober on the day of sailing he will at once be dismissed and a substitute put in his place.

(11) "Members of the crew not joining at 7 A. M. on the day of sailing will be discharged and a substitute will be put in their place.

(12) "Sailors' and Firemen's Mess Boy to keep forecastles, mess rooms and hallways clean and in sanitary condition.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Injunction Based on Property

"In all other countries in the world the injunction writ is used only in cases involving property or proprety rights to prevent irreparable damage to such property or property rights when there is no adequate remedy at law," writes Victor A. Olander, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, in the official paper of that organization.

"Its use in Illinois is limited to the same rule—property rights—except in cases involving working people on strike," continues the unionist. "The injunction judge in our State, however, seeks to justify his usurpation of power by making the very sinister claim that labor is property and he proceeds to act on the equally sinister theory that the employer has secured a property right in the labor of others. He is doing this without the sanction of any Act of the Legislature. Labor is not property. Human labor is an attribute of human life, an inseparable part of man and cannot be property unless man himself is property. Unless some steps are taken to prevent this dangerous practice, the growing number of court decisions will ultimately give the form of established law to the claim that labor is property and that therefore man himself is property. We are heading straight towards slavery, forced toward it by the many judges who are now misusing their power in the injunction courts."

Society and Lobbying

Many "society lights" are just plain lobbyists for powerful interests, according to Senator Kenyon. The Iowa lawmaker does not object to lobbying, but he does protest against the methods of some lobbyists.

"There has been testimony before committees of social lobbies in the City of Washington, of gentlemen receiving funds from great interests to use in social lobbying," he said. "You can pick up the papers every day and read of dinners and dances and balls given by the Lord knows whom —a favorite form of lobbying in this city.

"I do not know that there is any way of stopping that kind of a lobby; but there is existing now in the City of Washington, and it is going to grow, lobbying of certain kinds in lumber interests, oil interests and other big interests; men go out of the Senate and men go out of the House and join up with these lobbies.

"The 'general practice' of law in Washington is coming to be synonymous with 'general lobbying.'

"I have in my hand a list of gentlemen, some of whom are ex-members of Congress and ex-officials of the government, here in Washington in the interest of oil, lumber and other questions before the departments."

Espionage Opposed

Opposition to the European system of espionage is recorded by Frank Morrison, secretary of the A. F. of L., in a letter to David Gibbs, superintendent of schools of Meriden, Conn.

The superintendent is a member of the Americanization Committee of that city, which favors a federal law that would compel aliens to secure passports in going from one place to another and the registering with local officials in the place of their residence.

"This system of espionage," said Secretary Morrison, "will be regarded by the workers of this country as repugnant to the American concept of liberty."

Reject Kansas Idea

In his message to the Oklahoma Legislature, Governor Robertson gave notice that a "can't-strike" law in that State will have to be passed over his veto. Governor Allen of Kansas recently told Oklahoma citizens of the glories of his handcuff legislation, but the story has not impressed Governor Robertson, who says:

"Considerable sentiment has been engendered in certain parts of the State for the enactment of a law similar to the industrial court law of Kansas. I do not believe such a law is wise or sound and hope there will be no unnecessary agitation of the subject."

Company Unions

Why employers favor company "unions" is shown in the recent attempt of the Pullman Company to reduce wages. Wide circulation was given the announcement that employes had requested a wage reduction. Many of the Pullman employes are affiliated with bona fide trade unions and at a mass meeting they registered vigorous protest against this statement. The company then announced that its "industrial relations committee" had made the request.

The first story was printed in the public press—of course. But no mention was made of the mass meeting or the protest.

Australian Navy Officers Snobs

Snobbery in the Australian navy has gone far in destroying the spirit that should permeate a country's defense on the water.

Some time ago the men on the lower deck in the navy appointed an advisory committee to represent them in adjusting grievances. They were assured at the time that their committee would be received. The committee's pleas were unheeded and the men, exasperated, ordered their committee to request a hearing with members of the naval board. The gold-laced members of the board refused to be interviewed. This made matters worse and the feeling among the men resulted in an order abolishing the advisory committee, and now the uniformed snobs have made the discontent more pronounced than ever.

"A civilization is possible in which the poorest could have all the comforts and conveniences now enjoyed by the rich; in which prisons and almshouses would be needless, and charitable societies unthought of. Such a civilization waits only for the social intelligence that will adapt means to an end."—Henry George.

World's Workers

During the last couple of months large gatherings of Australian workers, and Labor Party conferences, have carried motions demanding the release of Eugene V. Debs. The demands have been forwarded to the American Consul General for America in Australia for transmission to Washington.

At Toronto, Ontario, an agreement has been signed by Bricklayers' Union and the Mason Contractors' Association. Rates will be $1 an hour for the year 1921. A work week of 44 hours is agreed to, as is double time for legal holidays and Saturday afternoons and time and one-half for overtime.

There were 54,841 accidents reported to the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board last year. This was 10,591 more than in 1919. Fatal accidents reported during 1920 were 452, as against 429 in 1919, being an increase of 23. The daily average was 183 accidents, or one accident every three minutes of the working day. The amount awarded last year by the board for compensation was $7,076,430.50, and the amount for medical aid, $703,705.56.

An amalgamation of Japanese miners' unions that will cover the whole of the islands will have a membership of 30,000. The combine thus expects to be able to deal more effectively with the employers through the medium of collective bargaining, a reduction in wages having been the rule in several industries for the last few months. Following the miners' example, the seamen are launching a movement to embrace the 48 existing unions, and a big effort is being made to enroll the men who at present are outside the ranks of trade unionism. The importation of cheap labor from China is giving impetus to the new movement.

An Australian royal commission has ordered government officials to produce their list of former employes on the state-owned railroads who have been blacklisted because of their activity in the strike of 1917, when the government attempted to install the American or Taylor system of speeding up. The government defeated the strike and blacklisted many of the strikers. Witnesses told the commission that they asked for re-employment, but were told there are many complaints against them. One witness said he asked what were the complaints and he was shown a book in which his name was entered, the comment being: "An agitator, an active militant unionist, an undesirable in the service."

Australian reports state that immigration is increasing, particularly from England, and emigration is normal. An increase of unrest and strikes is anticipated, and the serious strike already existing in the coasting trade has tied up the Tasmania transport service. On account of the continuation of the strike, coal from New South Wales can not be obtained at Melbourne, resulting in restrictions in the use of lighting, power, street cars and railroad facilities. The coasting trade strike is not likely to last long, but in the meantime trade is reduced to a minimum and the current talk is that a condition of unemployment is threatening. There is special activity in the construction, with Government aid, of low-priced dwellings for returned soldiers.

What a Sailor Said About Painless Parker

By Painless Parker

A SAILOR came into one of my offices the other day and said I had been recommended to him by another sailor because I did good work and charged a fair price for it. There you have the whole story—GOOD WORK AT A FAIR PRICE. One man tells another, and so my practice grows.

The reason Parker Dentistry is good is because none but experienced dentists do it. No students are employed. The reason prices are fair is because I use the E. R. Parker System, which saves me a lot of money, and you share in the saving.

In each office the painless methods I discovered are employed. Your teeth can be fixed up without hurting you a bit. Sailors' teeth examined free.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

The Pacific Mail will have a tanker, the "Solano," ready for launching in the Camden yard of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation in the near future. The "Solano" is of 66,000-barrel capacity.

A grain charter is announced by the Northern Grain and Warehouse Company of the British steamer "Pengrup," of 3007 tons, for February loading from the Columbia river to the United Kingdom.

The steam schooner "Sea Foam," bound south, put into San Francisco January 19, reporting the loss of 40,000 feet of lumber and ties from the deckload. A sudden squall off Point Reyes caused the cargo to shift.

The steamer "Centralia," Stark Navigation Company, will be returned to the Mexican run on February 1, according to announcement recently. The "Centralia" was formerly on the Mexican run, but was removed to engage in the coastwise lumber trade.

The earnings of the Panama Canal for December were, with one exception, the highest that they have been for any month since the completion of the short route. The sum mentioned in the report was $1,007,875, which is only $2291 under the record of last September of $1,010,166.

Swayne & Hoyt announce the first sailing of a steamer on an experimental cruise to the northeast coast of South America on February 15. The "El Dorado," which has been on the New Orleans run, will visit Trinidad, Dutch, British and French Guiana and Venezuela, returning by way of New Orleans. The service will be maintained if it is found to be profitable.

Two additional freighters of the Shipping Board's fleet have been sent to the "vacation" field at Benicia. They are the "West Cadron," recently operated by Robert Dollar, which arrived at San Francisco from the Orient December 11, and the "Panser," which arrived January 2 from Philadelphia with coal for Sudden & Christensen.

Advices received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce told of the loss by disaster of the Siamese steamer "Kaho Samud" which went ashore during a storm near Kohsiohany in the Far East and sank in deep water, a total loss. The vessel is known here having plied out of San Francisco during the days of the exposition in 1915.

The new 10,000 ton tank steamer "Cramston Anderson" which was built by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation at the Alameda plant, has been given her trial trip. The tanker has a capacity of 76,000 barrels of oil. She was built for the Pan-American Petroleum Company and will be immediately dispatched to the Atlantic for the oil trade.

With the departure of the steamers "Kelbergen" and "West Kobar," which loaded full cargoes of ties exports from Portland to England alone for the past six months will be brought to a total of 40,000,000. The "Kelbergen" and "West Kebar" both cleared by Dant & Russell, who have supplied about half of the ties moving from Portland to the United Kingdom.

Another new freighter, which never has poked her nose into a foreign harbor, will be added to the fleet lying in Southampton Bay when the "West Cusseta" is towed there this week and her hook dropped in the mud. She was built by the Shipping Board at the Los Angeles Shipbuilding Company's plant in San Pedro, and was brought here Sunday.

Within three months Australia and New Zealand will be supplied with enough gasoline to meet all demands for the rest of the present year. News of the plenitude of gasoline in the above countries was received here with surprise, as it was only a few months ago that these countries reported a near-famine in this fuel.

Cable advices received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce at San Francisco announced the departure from Honolulu of the Dutch steamship "Bali" for Java and way ports. The "Bali" was picked up at sea with her crankshaft broken several weeks ago by the Matson liner "Wilhelmina" and towed to Honolulu. Salvage for the tow, it is reported, amounted to over $200,000, of which the "Wilhelmina" crew received a bonus.

As the second "502" Shipping Board freight and passenger steamer to be allocated the Pacific Mail Company for operation out of San Francisco to India via Manila, the big new "Wolverine State" departed from Baltimore Saturday, January 22. Under command of Captain George Yardley, the "Wolverine State" is bringing passengers and freight from the East. She is due to arrive at San Francisco February 22, after a stopover at San Pedro.

Following the arrival of several ships, which brought part cargoes of nitrate, marking a picking up in the nitrate importing business, the British bark "Lord Templeton" arrived at San Francisco last week, with 3300 tons of nitrate for Echson & Minor. The "Lord Templeton" made the run from Iquique, South America, in average time. Her skipper reported that northerly winds held him up and that otherwise he would have made port ten days sooner.

While attempting an escape from the "Korea Maru," Hanai Machiro, a Japanese seaman, twenty-six years old, leaped from the rail of the vessel into the bay, and was swept away by a strong flood tide. According to H. A. McDonald, superintendent of watchmen at Pier 36, Machiro made the jump in company with another Japanese sailor. The latter, however, was captured when he broke surface off Pier 36, after swimming under water a distance of about fifty feet. He was returned in irons to the vessel and put in the "brig."

The first of a fleet of seven tankers building in the north for the Swiftsure Oil Transportation Company, Incorporated, of New York, left San Francisco after taking fuel and proceeded to Tampico to pick up a cargo for New York. She was the first of the fleet to be completed. All seven of the vessels will be used in the New York-Tampico run. Captain G. E. Bridgett is superintendent of the company, and Milton Cooper is port captain. They will hold their positions until the last of the ships is completed when they will go East and locate with the company in their Eastern offices.

Announcement of another addition to the lines running in intercostal freight trade has been made by the Isthmian Lines Steamship Company through Norton, Lilly & Co., Pacific Coast agents. The steamer "Montgomery City," loading at New York February 10, will be the first ship to be placed in the run, which will include San Francisco and Hawaii as ports of call. Honolulu will be the Hawaiian Islands agency center. The service is to be distinct from the present service of the Isthmian Company, which runs north to Puget Sound. Ships will sail every thirty days in the new service, and in conjunction with the service already in operation, San Francisco will have ten-day sailings for New York. The trip will require a few days more than a month. The "Montgomery City" is a 7000-ton ship and the ones to follow will be larger.

The new United States destroyer "McCormick," one of the few vessels of the Navy named in memory of American naval airmen, who lost their lives in action during the world war, arrived at San Diego, California, from Philadelphia. While en route to the Canal Zone from Havana, the "McCormick" was sent to the rescue of an American naval seaplane that was forced to alight in the sea on the northeast coast of Colombia. The seaplane subsequently was sunk by the high seas, the crew being taken aboard the "McCormick" and landed at Cristobal. The "McCormick," virtually the last of the Crampbuilt boats to be delivered under wartime contracts, is named in honor of Lieutenant Alexander McCormick of Chicago. This officer died September 24, 1918, at Calais, France, from injuries received in battle when acting as aerial gunner on a Handley-Page bombing plane. The "McCormick" is to be attached to Division 38.

The aim of the American shipping interests to be premier in the number of merchant ships available is about to be realized, according to figures of the Shipping Board, released in the East, the same announcement that reads United States leads in the production of tank steamers, and that sixteen vessels of 163,350 tons aggregate are to be added to the Shipping Board fleet, announces that 400 vessels are to be tied up—that 208 ships with aggregate tonnage of 1,262,000 tons are already lying idle—and that no relief in the depression of shipping is looked forward to within the next three months. In the meantime the shipyards are being kept busy, in the East especially, filling orders for ships, numbers of which are taken from the shipyards upon completion and towed to cozy berths alongside some rotting wharf, where they will not be in the way of the few vessels already in commission that are plying in trade with half-filled holds.

The "Sea Lion," first of four powerful tugs for the fleet of the Red Stack organization which have been under construction at San Francisco for some time, has been delivered to her owners after a final trial trip on the bay. Commanded by Capt. W. T. Darrough, the new Red Stack tug was thoroughly tested under the superintendency of John Bolger, assistant manager for the Shipowners and Merchants' Towboat Company, in the presence of officials of that corporation and representatives of her builders. The "Sea Lion," like her three sister tugs, represents automatic construction for deep sea towing. She is equipped with automatic towing machinery, has 1,000 horsepower, long steaming radius and a powerful wireless set. In addition to towing they are equipped for salvage work, having powerful derricks, heavy anchors, rigging and mooring apparatus. Others in the new fleet, the "Sea Ranger," "Sea Monarch" and "Sea Scout," will be delivered in close succession.

WE CHERISH AUTONOMY

The aim to make our occupation honored amongst men, and the peer of any, cannot be attained without the united effort of each individual member. We must be masters of the instruments through which we operate; therefore, organization being our chief weapon, we must keep it at the highest degree of perfection. To do that all members should take interest in the workings of the union and acquaint themselves with every detail of organization work.

In the final analysis it is the courage and intelligence of its members that is the deciding factor for success of an organization in a desperate or protracted struggle. If the individuals are weak or ignorant, it is a serious flaw in construction that inevitably results in disaster.

Organizations where the members are merely dues payers, careless and neglectful, and where everything is left to a few leaders, are never of any lasting benefit to those members, due to the fact that technical training is lacking. Therefore, when such bodies are put to the test, team work and discipline are missing and the members are unprepared to meet it.

One of the recommendations to the Convention of the International Seamen's Union suggests "that the utmost effort be put forth in each agency to hold regular meetings and that a part of the meeting be set aside for educational purposes."

That must be accomplished if we are to be successful and thoroughly united. All men do not observe and think alike, therefore rules and regulations that appear beneficial to some have the opposite aspect to others.

Members acting as ship's delegates should become fully acquainted with the aims, objects, rules and regulations of the Union. They should be in a position to enlighten others on the workings of our craft. Such education would thereby give them the necessary qualifications for office. The more men qualified to take a leading part, the more efficient and powerful the organization. It is only by education that our constantly changing membership can become properly acquainted with the matters they should know. Conventions and meetings are useless unless the members understand the whys and wherefores, cause and effect of the deliberations, and are willing to work in harmony therewith.

The careless assumption that we will find a way when the time comes is dangerous; we must be prepared to overcome any obstacle, no matter what the exigencies of the occasion. Members should understand the International movement thoroughly, which can be accomplished by careful observation of convention proceedings and perusal of the Union's literature. Suggestions, actions, and recommendations must be thoroughly weighed in order to understand the extent and nature of their effect.

Although working at all times in complete harmony with other sub-groups in the Districts, and other Districts in the International, we must not relinquish or delegate our rights and privileges as an independent unit. We should guard our right of autonomy at all times. Even as the individual maintains his right of membership control in the Union, the Unions must guard their right of voice in the International. The power should always remain with the membership and must not be permitted to become compactly centralized.

INTRIGUE IS INTERNATIONAL

Signs are increasing of efforts by British and French militarists to lure the United States and other Western nations into a war upon Russia. An insidious propaganda has been inculculated upon the citizens of these nations since termination of the world war hostilities, which would place Russia outside the pale of civilization and therefore not worthy of sympathy or consideration. To such advanced stages have these tendencies progressed in the United States that many central councils of labor throughout the land have been impelled to adopt resolutions demanding resumption of trade and peaceful relations with the people of Russia. The fruits of these worthy resolves, however, are problematical, due to the fact that a well-defined and organized line of action appears to be working in conjunction with the propaganda.

It does not require any profound intelligence to recognize the scope and nature of these designs. At a time when reconstruction should be in full blast and our industries operating to their most extensive capacity, every obstructive artifice has been used by financial kings, industrial captains, and profiteers, to prevent resumption of normal conditions. Retrenchment, vacilliation, and deliberate destructive methods have resulted in a growth of unemployment of such proportions as to assume a threatening aspect.

The underlying purposes of these machinations are unmistakable. Should this situation develop in accordance with desire, and the condition of our people become more distressful, they may reasonably be expected to grasp at anything offering promise of relief. Once they have been maneuvered into such a frame of mind, advantage can be taken of the psychological moment by profiteers and militants to justify their own attitude; while the material interests of a desperate people can well be calculated to overcome their opposition to another bath of blood.

All efforts to beat and starve the Russians back to acceptance of exploitation and autocratic rule have been defeated to date. What could be more natural than that the cry be raised once more for the United States to "save civilization." If we have been rendered sufficiently receptive through distress brought on by enforced unemployment, any amelioration of our condition will be welcomed. The possibilities of prosperity and affluence can be used as a spur to our selfish instincts, and desire will outweigh scruple.

Conscienceless profiteers, whose predatory operations emanate from London, Paris and New York, are hungering with inordinate desire for the unlimited wealth to which the people of Russia are heir. No obstacle to satiety of their greed will be tolerated. The barbarous starving of Russian women and children not having the desired conclusion, the addition of a few million unemployed in the United States, Britain and France might be invited as a means to an end. We hesitate to believe that Americans can be whipped into cringing obedience, or induced to approve an unrighteous military adventure.

DO YOU KNOW THEM?

During the week a member dropped into the JOURNAL office with a request for editorial comment on the following press dispatch from Huntsville, Ala.:

"The claim of Joseph Jones to hospital attaches, that he had 'some bean' was borne out when his story that he had been kicked by a mule on the head, and that as a result the animal was lying helpless with a broken leg, was investigated and found to be true. . . . The mule's leg was broken in two places. It was pronounced a helpless cripple and shot. Jones will recover."

We do not know whether it was sympathy for the mule that aroused the member's interest or some other reason. However, we think the animal somewhat fortunate. It might have kicked the dome of a few standpatters we have in mind, both within and without the ranks of labor. Some of these worthies would make the ossified skull of the gentleman from Alabama look like a ripe tomato in comparison. No force has yet been invented that could drive a new idea through the mass of solid ivory which commonly functions as a hat rack for these opponents to change and reform.

The editor trusts that he has struck the key.

Cherish the spirit of our people and keep alive their attention. Do not be too severe upon their errors, but reclaim them by enlightening them. If once they become inattentive to public affairs, you and I, and Congress and assemblies, judges and governors, shall all become wolves. It seems to be the law of our general nature, in spite of individual exceptions, and experience declares that man is the only animal which devours his own kind.—Thomas Jefferson.

Always demand the Union Label!

The Los Angeles Union Labor Temple Association is in a flourishing condition, according to the report of George A. Wright, president, which was submitted to the annual meeting of stockholders. It shows the past year to have been the most successful in the history of the association. The temple not only is self-sustaining, but the profit for 1920 was $5,123.05 and the surplus $59,614.01. This remarkable showing resulted in the unanimous re-election of the Board of Directors, the first time this ever occurred.

On January 1, 1920, a hundred-thousand-dollar mortgage was outstanding against the temple. During the year this was reduced to $29,500 by the sale of hundred-dollar mortgage-redemption notes, bearing 6 per cent. interest and running for a period of ten years. The directors are confident the present year will see the mortgage indebtedness completely wiped out by the sale of notes, in which event every cent of interest heretofore paid the mortgage company will go to unions and individual members holding notes. The value of the assets of the association is $266,772.60, and the liabilities $207,158.59.

In the upper portion of the head the whale has an immense oil tank in which the valuable "spermaceti" is found in a liquid condition, and from which it may be dipped out with a bucket when an incision has been made. From a sperm whale sixty feet in length twenty barrels of spermaceti have bene taken out of the "case" and the surrounding fat. The sperm whale is the animal which yields ambergris, the valuable substance used so extensively in the manufacture of our best perfumes. Ambergris is only found in "sick" whales—that is, its presence is not normal, but is caused by a pathological condition of the intestines.

A dispatch recently appeared in the press which contained food for thought and is worthy of more than passing notice. It was to the effect that a United States Army transport had sailed from Manila for the port of San Francisco "with a motley cargo of human derelicts, consisting of eighty discharged American merchant ship sailors."

It was further stated that the Army authorities refused to take any more, fearing possible mutiny, and that the men were to be turned loose on arrival and refused further employment on American ships.

Comment on the foregoing would be superfluous.

Explorers have been astonished to find in the wilds of Africa savages acquainted with the getting of iron from the ore and working it. To smelt the ore they use a primitive furnace of baked mud with charcoal for fuel and bellows to secure the required temperature. It seems altogether likely that the knowledge of these processes was originally derived in prehistoric days from the Arabs and Phoenicians, who then, as in later times, overran most of Africa.

Paper was made from rags in Arabia more than ten centuries ago and the method was introduced into Europe in the thirteenth century.

The following breezy account of a cod-fishing experience has been forwarded to the JOURNAL by Ingvald A. Haarklau, No. 1295, otherwise known as the Norwegian Prince.

We believe there are others who might be ambitious to emulate the member's flight into realms of emotional expression, and the editor will be pleased to hear from them at all times.

THE CODFISHERMAN'S LAMENT

The bitter cold of Iceland's snow,
  The scorching sun of Spain;
I have journeyed before and again might go;
  But the Bering Sea no more for me,
So therefore this refrain:
  Chorus:

Let the codfish live; let the codfish die
  Till the day of doom may crack,
But nevermore will I ship aboard
  In a codfish fishing smack.

I sure was a boob and idiot,
  Such a fool as you seldom behold
I have sweated blood, shed frozen tears,
  And suffered from hunger and cold.
    But now I am wise, paid some of the price,
  For fishing too near the North Pole.

  Chorus.

I know the failing of human minds
  Regarding the lure of gold,
There's many a man for the sake of it,
  His body and soul has sold.
It sure beats Hell, it got me as well
  For I am cast in the common mold.

  Chorus.

I have bucked the tides, the wind, and sea
  All soaked from my toes to my neck.
It's a wonder that I am not laid up today
  A mental and physical wreck,
From gritting my teeth while hauling the sheet
  And losing on every tack.

  Chorus.

Lost in the fog, not knowing my way
  Full tired, and chilly, and damp.
My spirits were low and painful as hades
  Were my fingers from fishermen's cramp;
My blood running slow caused to burn very low
  My abused intellecual lamp.

  Chorus.

If not of fame I was dreaming of wealth
  That lies under Alaska's bleak shore,
Wondering why in the name of sin
  I had not tried the fishing before.
Sure I made my stake of rheumatic aches
  And my hands full of blisters and sores.

  Chorus.

I am forced to admit that a much better man
  Than I must have handled the pen,
To truthfully (?) record the quarters we had
  As accommodations for men;
Cooped up as we were, without daylight or air
  Therefore, I say never again!

A shrub growing principally in the gold fields of Australia has been found to possess properties suitable for tanning purposes, according to the World Salesman. Leather tanned by the extracts from this shrub is adjudged equal to the best, being especially useful in lining hats. Some excellent samples of fast dyes have also been extracted from this shrub.

SEQUEL TO "SUPERIOR" CLAIM

Several months ago we reported in the JOURNAL the recovery of the Norwegian sailing ship "Superior" by a portion of her crew, after she had been abandoned by all hands under the master's orders off the coast of Java, Dutch East Indies. The "Superior" had been caught in a cross current in the Lombok Pass and was rapidly driving toward a range of rocks when her crew were ordered to leave her in two boats, as her destruction appeared inevitable.

Sometime after leaving the ship, however, it was observed by the crew of the captain's boat that the ship's anchor, which had been let go before leaving, had caught and she was riding safely at her cable.

They therefore returned to the ship, got her under way again and after a very protracted passage, being short-handed, sailed into the port of New York. The mate's boat was out of sight of the ship at the time the recovery was made and that portion of the crew did not, therefore, participate in bringing the ship to port. They returned to the spot, however, and after searching for the ship for several days without result finally landed in Sourabaya, Java, and were sent here by the Norwegian consul at that port.

Both boats' crews then joined issue in a suit against the "Superior," the crew of the captain's boat claiming salvage and those in the mate's boat suing for arrears of wages, waiting time and loss of effects.

Both claims were tried together, and it was agreed between counsel that the Norwegian law must control. An opinion was handed down by Judge E. L. Garvin for libellants, as follows:

United States District Court, Eastern District of New York. Anderson vs. "Superior." Jensen vs. "Superior." December 8, 1920.

Silas B. Axtell, proctor for libellants. Haight, Sanford, Smith & Griffin (Herbert K. Stockton, of counsel) proctors for claimant.

The Norwegian ship "Superior," on voyage from Manila to New York, was bearing toward Cape Bangke on January 9, 1919. As she attempted to make an entrance through Lombok Strait, Dutch East Indies, she was carried by cross currents towards the rocky shore and her destruction appeared imminent. Her captain and crew, fearing they would be lost with the ship, got into two small boats and rowed away. Before they were out of sight, it was observed that her anchor, which was cast over as they left, had caught and was holding. The captain's boat thereupon returned, found the vessel unharmed, and navigated her safely to New York. The other boat did not return, and her occupants, after making several attempts finally landed, waited until the following morning when they tried to return to the "Superior," only to find that she had sailed. They searched for several days without result and later reached Sourabaya, Java, and were taken before the Norwegian Consul there, by whom they were paid off up to and including January 9, 1919. There is a conflict of testimony as to why one boat returned and the other, in charge of the mate, did not, but the evidence warrants the finding that the master ordered all hands off the ship; that he directed his boat to return and that the other boat was justified in not returning with the captain. From the entire record it appears that while the captain may have signaled the other boat to return, either his signal was not observed or the current was such that the mate's boat could not go back with that of the captain.

Anderson and others of the crew, who returned to the "Superior," have brought an action for salvage; Jensen and Lehto, who were in the mate's boat, have each sued for $365 wages, besides waiting time and personal effects at the value of $75, which each left on board the "Superior." The actions have been tried together.

In the Anderson case there should be no award for salvage. The "Superior" was a Norwegian vessel, the Norwegian law must control. The "Cayoll," 164 Fed. 807, Rainey v. New York & P. S. S. Co., Ltd., 176 Fed. 119. The claimant produced Mr. Aase Rose, who possessed the Court as a qualified witness, thoroughly competent to testify with respect to the law of Norway, his testimony establishing that under Norwegian law a crew cannot recover for salvage.

In the Anderson case the libellants refer to "The [illegible] 251 Fed. 331. In that case the crew left the vessel while she proceeded to docks, because it was unsafe to remain aboard longer. The master [illegible] "cast off." One of the duties, having lost sight of the others, returned, found the vessel [illegible] after considerable difficulty [illegible] without damage. A wrecking steamer [illegible] in a repairable condition. The [illegible] with which we are concerned, the case cannot control because we are bound by the Norwegian law. Even if Norwegian law does not apply, the case of Gjesseng v. S. S. "Macona" (S. D. N. Y., decided May 13, 1920) precludes any recovery for salvage in the absence of a definite abandonment. The crew of the "Superior" left because they thought the boat would be dashed to pieces; when, in a short time, they found their fears were not well founded they returned at once. This is not such a complete abandonment as released them from their duty to their ship. It is plain, however, that the libellants in the Anderson case were called upon to perform a task which was not contemplated when their articles were signed, in bringing their ship to port short-handed. For this they should receive compensation. They are awarded the sum of $2922.96, not by way of salvage, but as extra wages provided by Section 95 of the Norwegian Maritime Code.

Jensen and Lehto, the libellants in the second action, should have a decree, the Court finding as a fact that they were not deserters, were fully justified in leaving the ship and made a reasonable effort, in good faith to return. They were abandoned by their ship in a foreign land by reason whereof they are entitled to prevail in their action.

(Signed) EDWIN L. GARVIN,
U. S. District Judge.

We consider Judge Garvin's decree eminently fair and impartial and believe it ought to stand. Since the case was of necessity tried under the Norwegian law the principles of that law must govern.

It is only in very exceptional cases that seamen can recover salvage for the rescue of their own ship. In our judgment those peculiar conditions did not exist in the present instance. The learned judge has, however, fully recognized the unusual services of the crew in bringing the ship home short-handed and awarded them reasonable compensation therefor, at the same time sustaining the plea of the remaining portion of the crew for arrears of wages, waiting time and loss of effects resulting from the unfortunate circumstances. In our opinion this decision should remain unchallenged by either contestant.

MASTER FACES SERIOUS CHARGE

A very important arrest was made in New York City on January 8th, through the agency of Attorney Axtell's office, when Captain Bowman Larsen was suddenly taken in tow by the sheriff as he was on the point of taking the steamer for Norway, and his trip was diverted to Raymond Street Jail, Brooklyn. The charge against Captain Larsen is a very serious one, and if proven will keep him in the United States almost indefinitely.

Captain Larsen has been duly charged by Carl Brinkman and six other members of his late crew with having deliberately set fire to his ship, the Norwegian motor ship "Korsnaest," off the coast of South Carolina, on December 28, 1920, where she was totally destroyed. To have, furthermore, entered suit against the captain and his owners for an aggregate sum of $5280 for wages, transportation and loss of clothes due to the destruction of the vessel. Captain Larsen was arrested under Sections 4529 and 4550 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, and must remain in jail until full security has been filed for the amount sued for by the seamen. An official investigation of this matter will probably follow the civil action of the crew, and if the charges preferred against the master are sustained by the evidence it will undoubtedly go very hard with him. Another motorship owned by the same firm is said to have been destroyed near Hamburg not very long since, and it seems to be more than a passing suspicion that the main business of this concern is not carrying cargoes by collecting insurance.

J. H. W.

A Swedish inventor has devised a unique system of electrical heating for houses of from four to ten rooms, and which is especially intended for localities where electric current is inexpensive. The system consists of two tanks, a motor-driven rotary pump, and the necessary radiators and piping. One of the tanks is placed in the attic of the house and is thermally insulated. In it are placed the heating units, which, normally, are only operated at night, when the rates for electric current are low. In the morning the heating units are disconnected from the supply circuit and the motor-driven pump started. The water flows down the piping and through the radiators by the force of gravity and is collected in a receiving tank in the basement, from where it is pumped and returned to the tank in the attic. It is claimed that the cost of heating a house by this system is about 12 cents per room, with a current rate of 1 cent a kilowatt hour.

(13) "It is also agreed that if the ship cannot sail on the day appointed, or should the ship be put back through accident, or should the Owner so desire, the said crew may be transferred to any other vessel in the same service or belonging to the same Owners at the rate of wages and in their several capacities as is herein set forth.

(14) "Crew to work on day of arrival in final port of discharge until 5 o'clock P. M.

(15) "It is further understood and agreed that any question whatsoever between Master, Consignee, Agent or Owner of the above-named vessel, and any of the undersigned seamen or mariners shall be heard and decided by any Shipping Commissioner or Consul appointed under the authority of the laws of the United States, and that every award so made by him shall be binding upon parties, and shall in any legal proceedings which may be taken in the matter before any Court of Justice be deemed conclusive as to the rights of the parties as to such question or subjects of dispute.

(16) "Crew shall wear Company's uniform and keep themselves as clean as their duties will permit; also attend boat drill when required.

(17) "Each member of the crew shall be bound by and comply with all regulations not contrary to law which may be established from time to time by the Captain or Owners and posted in the crew's quarters."

(1) "Crew to work on day of arrival in Port of New York until 5 P. M. and to appear in uniform when required by the Master. Seamen, Firemen and Coal-passers will be supplied with blankets, pillows and utensils for eating their food, which, if not returned, must be paid for. Blankets, when returned, will be washed at the Company's expense. Seamen, Firemen and Coal-passers will be supplied with a mattress at the Company's expense.

(2) "And the crew further agree to be transferred (if required) to any of the American flag steamers of the I. M. M. Lines, either at the commencement of or during the voyage, at the same rate of wages and in the several capacities herein named, provided that members of the crew shipped in the United States shall be returned to a port of discharge in the United States.

(3) "And it is further agreed that in the event of the owners not sending the ship on the voyage signed for by reason of some accident or injury to said ship the portion of the crew signed on in the United States may be discharged upon payment to them of wages earned or due up to the time of discharge with three days' wages in addition, or they may be transferred to any other vessel belonging to the same Owners at the same rate of wages.

(4) "Crew to be on board at o'clock on sailing day, and no member of the crew will be allowed on shore afterwards without permission from the head of his Department.

(5) "It is further understood and agreed that any question whatsoever between Master, Consignee, Agent or Owner of the above-named vessel, and any of the undersigned seamen or mariners shall be heard and decided by any Shipping Commissioner or Consul appointed under the authority of the laws of the United States, and that every award so made by him shall be binding upon parties, and shall in any legal proceeding which may be taken in the matter before any Court of Justice be deemed conclusive as to the rights of the parties as to such question or subject of dispute."

(1) "It is also agreed that the crew is to report for duty at 7 A. M. on sailing days in a sober condition, and any member of the crew leaving the vessel without permission of the head of his Department may be fined not more than two days' pay and discharged.

(2) "Crew to work on day of arrival in the port of New York until 5 P. M.

(3) "It is also agreed that at any time while aboard said vessel, or at any time before leaving the premises of the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company, all members of the crew will allow themselves and their baggage and any property in their custody or possession to be searched and inspected by the Master or any person or officer delegated or appointed for this purpose by the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company.

(4) "It is also agreed that any member of the crew who refuses to comply with the foregoing agreement shall be considered as disobeying the lawful commands of his superior officers.

(5) "Any dispute between Master or any officer of the Steamship Company and any member of the crew shall be submitted to the U. S. Shipping Commissioner, and any decision rendered by him shall be binding upon both parties."

Used by Porto Rico Line.

Some of these clauses are mere repetition of the law and as such are superfluous; but some of them are in more or less direct violation of the statutes and of old admiralty principles and decisions that have been uniform and based upon the "Consulate of the Sea," "The scroll of Oleron" and the "Laws of Visby," and even the Rhodian Law.

Dealing with the first of the clauses, it is contrary to Section 4511 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provide that shipping articles in the foreign trade are to contain the following:

First. The nature and, so far as practicable, the duration of the intended voyage or engagement, and the port or the country at which the voyage is to terminate.

The inserted special clause leaves it to the option of the master in what port to terminate the voyage. It may be at any port on the eastern coast of the United States, in Maine or Texas or any port between. The seaman may be held by the vessel and be compelled to go with her from the port where the cargo is discharged to any bunkering or dry-docking port at the Master's option. But this is by no means the worst of these extra legal insertions. The one provision found in nearly all of these insertions to the effect that the Shipping Commissioner shall act as arbitrator of any or all disputes and that such decision as he may make shall be final is intended to deprive the seaman of the right to appeal to the Courts. The Shipping Commissioners Act gives no such power to the Commissioner, unless there is a submission in writing and such submission is made after the dispute has arisen and not prior to entering into the agreement. It has no right in the articles. I have discussed this clause with the Commissioner of Navigation and he admitted that it is not strictly according to law; but if the men are not willing to sign such clause they need not. This is nothing short of inviting the men to strike to ge the law enforced. If the seaman does this all the blame is heaped on him.

Perhaps the worst of these clauses is the one which provides that the men may, upon the owners' will, be transferred from the vessel on which they have shipped to any other vessel belonging to the same firm. This changes the fundamental concept of the seaman's service. Under existing law he serves the vessel, he signs on the vessel. He is to fulfill his engagement or contract with the vessel, unless she be transferred to some other national flag. He does not know the owner. His duty is to the vessel, not to the owner. His remedy is from the vessel while she is afloat and only from the owner when the vessel is no more. The seaman is bound to the vessel and the vessel is bound to him under the common hazard. This new agreement binds the seaman to the owner. He will be working for the owner of the vessel, not for the vessel. His grievance will be against the owner. His remedy is to come from the owner. But the owner may be in New York and the vessel in San Francisco or Hong Kong or Antwerp. The old principle is that "the Shipping articles carry in their womb the entire law maritime," and that any special clauses inserted into the articles will be scanned with care. These insertions into the articles—leaving it to the Master's option where the vessel shall go, where the voyage shall end, that the Shipping Commissioner shall have judicial powers, and that the seamen are to serve the owner of the vessel, and not the vessel, have their origin in England. They are the inventions of the International Shipping Federation Ltd., and were imposed upon the seaman when he was helpless to resist. This idea to shift the agreement from the vessel to the owner appears very clearly in the actions taken or proposed at the meeting at Genoa held under the auspices of the League of Nations:

"I recommend that the Convention give its most careful attention to these efforts to insert into the articles any special agreements under which the seaman may be induced to sign away not only his rights under the law, but his opportunity to obtain redress, and I hope that some definite policy may be formulated."

The Fight in the Courts—Litigation

Sometimes I think that the fights in the Courts, especially when the fight is made by the Shipping Board, arises from a failure to grasp the real meaning of the law. The Legal Bureau seems to look upon itself as the private attorney of a private corporation. If this was the real status of the Bureau and the Shipping Board it would not matter, but this is by no means the fact. Everybody in the Court is apt to look upon those vessels as theirs, to be protected against greedy seamen, and we have not the same chance if suing the Government—the Shipping Board—as when suing a really private corporation. This has become very plain in some cases. I cannot believe that the action of the jury and the Courts would have been the same as it was in the "Poughkeepsie" case—Hamilton, etc., versus the United States—if the contention had been set up by others than the Legal Bureau of the Shipping Board. There is no need to rehearse that case here and now. The case is fully set forth in the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals and in the petition for a writ of certiorari and the briefs submitted to the Supreme Court. I hereby submit the decision, the petition, and the briefs as Appendix 1. The petition was denied. I am not prepared to say that the Supreme Court was influenced by the thought which I submit above; but that such was the case in the lower courts I cannot help believing. There were many other efforts to use the mutiny sections of the law; but they were dismissed. The Shipping Board steps in and there is a practically forced conviction. Then comes another case—the "Martha Washington" case—another Government vessel, and again there is a conviction. If the principle pleaded for with such success is finally established there is, of course, nothing to hinder the owners of foreign vessels in making use of it, and the men, who seek to leave the vessels, may be charged with mutiny, arrested, convicted, and the whole idea upon which equalization of the wage-cost is progressing will be destroyed. If we shall fail to obtain a reversal on appeal of the principle embodied in the "Martha Washington" case, we shall be compelled to seek to have the mutiny sections so amended that they will correspond with the rest of the law. If refusing to continue to labor in harbor or quitting the vessel in harbor is mutiny, there can be no refusing or quitting and all hope of equalizing the wage-cost is at an end; but so is all hope of American sea-power.

There is another case in the Supreme Court to which I deem it my duty to call attention. It is known as Pacific Mail Steamship Company versus Lucas. It comes from the Pacific Coast on writ of certiorari, which is granted. It has reference to Section 4552 of the Revised Statutes as modified by the Seamen's Act. The case is described in the petition for certiorari and in the briefs, all of which are hereby submitted as Appendix 2. I have done nothing with this beyond instructing Mr. Hatton to watch it, and it is hereby referred to the Convention for such action as shall be deemed proper and wise.

The whole question of the Constitutionality of the Seamen's Act was settled by unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Dillon versus Strathearn and the case of Westmeath versus Peter Lucas and Gustav Blixt. Submitted as Appendix 3.

At the Convention in San Francisco it was decided to appeal a case dealing with a question of whether the Territory of Alaska may collect taxes from fishermen who are temporarily in Alaska to catch salmon, and if the Territory, can collect such tax through the operating company or from the vessel on which the fisherman is signed on as a seaman. There was first a rehearing in the District Court, in which the men won. An appeal was taken and the men lost. A petition for certiorari is now in the Supreme Court; but so far the petition has not been acted upon. The case seems important because if taxes can be thus collected from fishermen who are shipped as seamen, then it seems that all seamen may be compelled to pay such taxes regardless of whether they load with fish or with coal. For this reason I have instructed Mr. Hatton to submit the petition.

I have also requested the attorneys, who have handled quite a number of cases, to submit a report upon the more important cases, and these reports are hereby submitted as Appendix 4.

In closing this report upon the struggle in the Courts, I desire also to report that the International Shipping Federation Ltd. is trying to keep an eye on any British seaman who deserts in the United States and then comes to Britain in some other vessel. When he is discovered he is arrested, tried for desertion, convicted and fined or imprisoned.

I hereby recommend that the Executive Board be empowered to obtain legal advice upon whether this is not a violation of legal principles heretofore sustained by the House of Lords, and that if such shall be the fact that authority be given to proceed for the enforcement of the principles.

Legislation

The bills to amend Sections 4 and 11 of the Seamen's Act so as to repair the damages done to these Sections by Court decisions and which were before the last Convention, were introduced by Senator Jones, of Washington, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. The amendments were made part of the large Shipping Bill for the "Promotion and Maintenance of the American Merchant Marine." The hearings on this measure ran daily for about two months in the Committee and went into nearly all phases of the shipping question. This bill when reported further carried a substitute for Section 20 of the Seamen's Act, and also an amendment of Section 13. This last was a modification of the "Rowe Bill," which had passed the House and was intended to destroy the standard of efficiency of able seamen. The Rowe Bill sought to reduce the experience needed to become an able seaman from the standard provided by Section 13 of the Seamen's Act to nine months' experience. The Senate Committee recommended that the one-year clause with examination, as found in the Seamen's Act, Section 13, should apply to citizens of the United States only, and that after twelve months more of service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, such conditional able seaman should be held to be a fully qualified able seaman. This would give the citizen passing the examination twelve months' advantage over the non-citizen. The Senate Committee further strengthened Section 4 by inserting the words "or take in fuel." These amendments passed the Senate. The addition "or take in fuel" was stricken out in the Conference. Evidently the House conferees could not see the advantage that such addition would be to American shipping. The amendment to Section 13—the modified Rowe Bill—was also stricken out. The Rowe Bill had been urged in the interest of the American citizen and yet the patent advantage to the citizen, much superior to the supposed advantage in the Rowe Bill, was stricken out in conference and evidently through the efforts of Mr. Rowe himself. The conference also inserted a qualification in the substitute for Section 20, so that the injured seaman, or his heirs, can only enter suit for damages in the district where the owner lives or has his principal business. The bill as finally agreed upon was approved June 5, 1920. I hereby submit the amendments to the Seamen's Act as passed by the Senate and then as finally approved, as Appendix 5.

I have also caused the Rowe Bill, the hearings on the same in the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the hearings on bill for "Promotion and Maintenance of the American Merchant Marine," together with the Act as passed, to be bound in three volumes. One for the use of the Journal, one for the office of the Secretary, and one for the President. The hearings seemed to me of such importance to our movement that they ought to be preserved for future reference.

The Hospital Bill—H. R. 7930. The immigration law provides that sick alien seamen, brought to the United States, shall be removed to hospital to be cured at the expense of the vessel, which shall, if they be incurable, pay for their transportation out of this country. It was found that the vessels under certain circumstances reimbursed themselves from the wages of the seamen and left them penniless, a public charge or likely to so become, and the Department of Labor caused the introduction of the bill to remedy this evil. This bill became law, and it is hereby submitted as Appendix 6. The bill to transfer the personnel of the Merchant Marine from the administrative jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce to the like jurisdiction of the Department of Labor—S. 4712—has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Jones of Washington. This bill was printed in the proceedings of the last Convention and is, therefore, not resubmitted at this time. I further beg to submit H. R. 12396, a bill to amend sundry sections of the Seamen's Act. This bill applies to the Lakes, and was introduced by Mr. Scott of Michigan. Hearings were had on this measure, and the amendment offered to Section 14 of the Seamen's Act has been reported favorably from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The other parts of the bill were stricken out in Committee. The bill as introduced is hereby submitted as Appendix 7.

As Appendix 8 I hereby submit H. R. 12996, "A Bill authorizing the enrollment of officers and men of the Merchant Marine in the Naval Auxiliary Reserve." I am informed that this bill is to be given consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and the principle and policy ought to be considered by the Convention.

There are now two bills—S. 4607 and 4708—dealing with compensation to seamen for injuries. They are both in the Senate Committee on Commerce. They are both introduced by Senator Johnson of California. One is the old bill, which was sent to the Shipping Board and remained there. It had not been reintroduced in the present Congress and the Senator reintroduced it. The other was prepared by the American Association for Labor Legislation. These bills are different in several respects and they are hereby submitted to the Convention

(By Laurence Todd.)

President-elect Harding has yielded to the demand of the small progressive group in the Senate that there shall be no throwing away of public money nor vulgar display of private wealth on March 4th in connection with his taking charge of the executive power in the Government.

He yielded, giving up the plans of his friends for a gorgeous and pompous ceremonial and parade and ball which would have cost the public a million dollars, but he did so only because his critics had threatened to call the attention of 3,000,000 unemployed workers to the proposed criminal extravagance in a time of want and distress.

Senator Borah introduced in the Senate a resolution, six hours before Harding made up his mind to call off the "coronation," setting forth the facts as to unemployment, destitution and deficit in public finance, and calling attention also to the fact that 3,500,000 children in Europe will starve unless America sends them aid. He made these conditions the basis for a demand that not one dollar of public funds should be added to the $50,000 already appropiated for the inauguration. This resolution stopped the show.

Unemployment was the central theme of the debate which waged in the Senate about the ceremonial. Borah, Norris, Kenyon and others suggested that it was no time for the Republican party to stir up further social unrest. As they saw no way to provide jobs for the unemployed, they were unwilling to irritate the unemployed by a parade of the clothes and jewels possessed by the profiteers.

Among the profiteering groups which would have taken a leading part in the Harding fashion-show were the meat packers, the coal operators and the lumber manufacturers, whose pickings during and since the war have broken all records. The Federal Trade Commission has just sent to Congress a report on the lumber manufacturers' control of the lumber market which casts a searching ray of light upon the lobbying activities, the anti-labor policy, the evasions of the anti-trust laws, and the commercial highway robbery practiced by the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association and its ten member associations of lumber companies. This report shows that while the common folks were fighting the war, buying Liberty Bonds, sending their boys to the camps, speeding up production and in general were forgetting their usual suspicion of the big business crowd, the lumber companies' lobby in Washington was keeping the lumber trust advised as to how to evade taxes, control prices, reduce production and shout for "Americanism" and "the Constitution."

Every trade union organizer in America has heard, for example, of J. H. Kirby, former president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and more recently prominent in fighting the labor organizers and unionism in the Southern lumber districts. Kirby is the head of the Bogalusa Lumber Company, of Bogalusa, La., where A. F. of L. organizers and union members were mobbed by company gunmen, and where two of the organizers were murdered in cold blood because they refused to leave. Kirby appears as one of the most active plotters in this war-time conspiracy to boost the price of lumber. He was at the head of the lumber section of the Council of National Defense, and in that position fixed prices to be paid for the army cantonments at the beginning of the war.

Their own figures, seized by the Federal Trade Commission, show that the profit taken by the manufacturers in one typical group for Southern pine lumber were only $1.96 per thousand feet in 1916, while in 1919 they were $8.94 and in the first quarter of 1920 they averaged $26.35 per thousand feet sold.

Yet their correspondence shows that they forced an increase in prices of $1.50 per thousand in order that they should pay their common labor 30 cents an hour in 1918-19, and that some of the big mills and most of the smaller mills cheated, refusing to pay more than $2 a day. The day was in many mills 11 or even 12 hours.

This brood of "Americanism" is the more interesting because it went hand in hand with a policy of extermination of union labor, and of violence and even murder where they dared to go to that extreme. At Centralia, Wash., it was the lumber company's agents and retainers that broke down the doors of the I. W. W. hall, and started the fight which led to the lynching and shooting of combatants on both sides. At Bogalusa it was the company's program that was promoted by the killing of A. F. of L. men.

Senator Calder of New York, Senator Edge of New Jersey and Senator Kenyon of Iowa are members of a committee which is going to investigate the lumber combine and its lobby here, within a few weeks. Incidentally, Kenyon is proposing a law under which all lobbyists will be forced to register and explain who is paying them, and what for.

However, even if the lumber crowd has, for the moment, been caught with its mask off, there are large numbers of other self-selected "true Americans" here in the capital to prevent Congress from doing anything serious to remove unemployment or to break the iron ring which the organized employers have drawn about the organized labor movement. Already there are 60,000 textile workers idle in Philadelphia alone. The bosses say they are going to get rid of "agitators" by the starvation route. Bomb plots are hatched by the anti-labor press, public fear is excited, the legislatures rush through bills which enlarge the State Constabulary in Pennsylvania and other States, and thereby add to the forces of terror.

That is what makes the discussion of a reduction in the size of the regular army—now going on in Congress—so futile from the workers' standpoint. For every step taken to decrease the Federal forces is being countered by an increase in State troops and company guards. As the tide of unemployment rises, and the temper of the unemployed becomes more irritable, the number of imaginary bomb plots in industrial cities may be expected to increase, and the expenditure for gunmen to go skyward.

Meantime the signs of an attempt to be made by British and French officials and militarists to get the United States and all other Western nations into a general war against Russia, to "save civilization," are increasing. The latest is the coming of a British government agent to Washington to arrange for a further delay of the payment of the British debt of $4,000,000,000 and unpaid interest to our Treasury. Britain is paying out so much for her navy and her armies, in Ireland, India, Egypt, Constantinople and Persia, that she cannot pay what she borrowed from us. She probably never will pay. At the same time she discourages our hope of disarmament, which would save us a billion a year. With unemployment growing to ominous proportions in Britain, France and America, what more natural than that the militarists should try to "restore prosperity" by another big war against Russia? That would make us forget, perhaps, our bad debts abroad. And it would enable our profiteers to reap one more harvest. If the mad venture should lead all nations to financial shipwreck and destruction, what of it?

These new tendencies toward war for the sake of adventure and of debt-repudiation have been one reason for the adoption of resolutions in the central labor councils of cities of the East, during the past few weeks, demanding the resumption of trade and peaceful relations with Russia. Organized labor is getting into the field in direct and bitter hostility to the plan of the National Civic Federation that Russia be starved into taking back her Cossacks and her landlords. Thus far, not one of the big industrial centers where the Machinists' Russian trade resolution has come up in the labor council has failed to endorse it.

Railroad labor legislation in Congress moves slowly. Glenn Plumb testified for nearly two hours recently before the Townsend subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, on the Frelinghuysen bill amending the Clayton Act so as to permit the railroad companies to have their maintenance work done and their supplies furnished through their own favored subsidiaries, at extravagant cost to the public and under non-union conditions. He showed the labor-crushing and public-robbing purpose of the measure. Amendments to Frelinghuysen's bill, suggested by Chairman Clarke of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who testified earlier in the week, transformed it into a measure for really preventing these tricks. The subcommittee appeared unwilling to accept Clarke's amendments, nor on the other hand to challenge exposure by reporting the bill as introduced. It will probably die on the calendar on March 4th.

Textile workers in the South and New England can get scant encouragement from the week's progress toward an inquiry into the wage-cutting agreement among textile manufacturers. President Wood of the American Woolen Company announces a big dividend for the past year, and then announces a cut in wages of 22½ per cent., which he says is forced "by the public."

Congress shows no interest in the reason why millions are now unemployed; it accepts it as the fate of the poor.

It is only in the case of a strike that we appreciate the full depth of the employer's regard for the sanctity of contract.

THE I. S. U. OF A. CONVENTION

for action to be reported to the Senator. The Senator has also introduced a bill—S. 4606—providing compensation for harbor workers, and it is hereby submitted for your action.

Your attention must be called to S. 4204—a bill to prohibit interference with commerce—introduced by Senator Poindexter of Washington. This bill and the report upon it expresses very clearly what a section of the "new governing class," would like to accomplish. I hereby submit the bill and the report upon it as Appendix 9.

Section 1 of this bill was, when introduced, the most sweeping and complete prohibition, not only against strikes, but the slightest encouragement or advice to strike is made a criminal offense punishable by imprisonments running up to ten years. The Committee—the Committee on Interstate Commerce—amended Section 1 so that, if passed, it will apply only to those persons now subject to the Interstate Commerce Law and its amendments; but there is no such qualification in Sections 2 and 3. In these sections we seamen are brought back into involuntary servitude by punishments in prisons for periods not exceeding fifteen years.

Section 4—inserted by the Committee—again leaves us out, and in Section 5, as it became after inserting a new section and numbering it 4, we are given the right to leave the employment as one individual. Thus we are to establish group slavery in free America.

It is difficult to understand how much legislation can even be proposed in these United States; it is still more difficult to understand how such principles can get through a Committee of the Senate; but that it should be passed through the Senate passes belief. And yet this bill passed through a very thin Senate with unanimous consent.

When it became known that this bill had been called up and passed there was on the part of many of the absent Senators not only surprise, but emphatic protest, and Senator La Follette offered a motion to reconsider. This motion is pending at the time when this is written. When the bill passed I sent out information about it with the hope that communications from home might be of some use in the efforts to obtain reconsideration.

Under the head of legislation it is perhaps not out of place to call attention to the meeting at Genoa, Italy, held under the auspices of the League of Nations and for the purpose of dealing with the legal and industrial condition of seamen. This meeting opened on June 15, 1920, and remained in session for about one month.

The three delegates who were elected at the last Convention to attend the meeting of the International Seafarers' Federation, which was to meet, as we understood, in August, were, through this meeting at Genoa, compelled to leave in May for the purpose of attending a preliminary meeting of seamen to be held at Genoa prior to the meeting held under authority of the League of Nations. The reports submitted by the delegates deal with the preliminary meeting at Genoa, the meeting at Genoa, the prospects in Germany, in the Scandinavian countries and in Great Britain. I have nothing to add to that report except to state that J. Havelock Wilson has informed me through letter dated December 14, 1920, that the new legislation dealing with seamen, which is to be introduced in Parliament by the Government will include repeal of imprisonment for desertion. At least, this is his hope and expectation. The report from the delegates, who were sent to Genoa, Brussels, etc., is hereby submitted as Appendix 10.

The failure of the meeting at Genoa to adopt the proposed draft-Convention dealing with the hours of labor and the demand for further action taken at Brussels has resulted in a conference being held at Brussels, Belgium, in this month to try to arbitrate the question of the hours of labor. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson suggested in a communication that we send delegates; but since there would be no delegates from American shipowners and the United States is not in the League, there seemed to be no good reason why we should send any delegates.

You will see from the report that the Secretariat—Executive Council—of the Seafarers' Federation meets four times a year, and that the Federation pays the expenses of the attendance of one delegate for each country; but there seems no good reason why we should send such delegate more than once in each year. I believe that we should send one delegate to the Secretariat meeting to be held in August this year. Our next Convention can deal with the representation to be sent to the Convention to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1922, and I so recommend.

The Committee appointed by the Shipping Board to make recommendations for amendments of our maritime law, which was appointed by the Board in 1919, and upon which report was made to the last Convention, has concluded its labors and has made a report to the Board. This report is hereby submitted as Appendix 11.

In studying this report together with the minority reports—found in the same document—you will see that the Committee only reported one amendment to the Seamen's Act. This is an amendment to Section 4—the half-pay section. It is proposed to reduce the statutory amount to one-fourth in place of one-half. You will see the minority report filed. This proposal was before the Senate Committee on Commerce and was there rejected. The Committee on Revision also had before it the "Rowe Bill" and made a separate favorable report thereon. The action of Congress on this bill has been reported upon earlier in this report and nothing further needs to be said.

The Committee made several very important recommendations with reference to inspection. You will note the minority reports. I hereby recommend that the Convention give careful consideration to the entire work of this Committee on Revision. The tendency of the recommendations, as I understand them and tried to express it in the minority reports submitted by me and generally concurred in by Mr. Brown, President of the Marine Engineers, is from safety; but of this the Convention must be the judge.

In the hearings on the "Rowe Bill," the "Scott Bill" and the "Jones Bill" there was the most hearty co-operation by the several districts. If written information was needed, it was promptly furnished. If verbal testimony was needed, it was furnished with equal goodwill. Officers from the Lake and the Atlantic districts appeared before the Committees on several occasions, and there can be no doubt that the testimony given was welcomed by the legislators and most helpful to our cause. There is no doubt that the legislators want the plain, simple, direct information which can only be furnished in this way.

Captain Wescott, of San Francisco, and Captain Pruett, of New York, representing the Masters, Mates and Pilots, gave very important information to the Senate Committee on Commerce. They made the cause of efficiency their own as the real concern of the deck officers. Captain A. N. McGray, who as member of the Law Revision Committee always voted and spoke with the men representing the shipowners, appeared before the Senate Committee in favor of the "Rowe Bill." The membership of the Neptune Association will, when properly informed, be the best judges of whether he was representing them or not.

Americanization of the Merchant Marine Personnel

It was our contention that upon the enactment and enforcement of the Seamen's Act, the native American would again seek the sea as an occupation. A nationality census of our membership was taken on July 15, 1917. Another was again taken September 1, 1919. Tables showing the results were printed as an appendix in our last proceedings. I hereby submit those tables together with the table of census taken December 15, 1920, as Appendix 12.

There is a very great turnover among seamen as yet, and the membership is not quite as large as appears.

It will by comparison be noted that the progress has not been as rapid in this last year as it had been previously. Nay, there may be a question if there be any real increase in the native-born American. This situation arises from the failure to enforce the Language Clause of the Seamen's Act, and also from the failure to enforce the Watch-and-Watch provision found in Section 2 of the Act. Again, the "Poughkeepsie" case has, no doubt, had some influence. The American is sensitive on the question of freedom, and occupations that either robs him or seeks to rob him of his birthright, need not look for him in any large numbers. The American does not look upon freedom as resulting from the Constitution. He claims that the Constitution is the result of American freedom. He has small patience with measures that seek to curtail his freedom or with men whom he believes guilty of promoting such interference. The "Poughkeepsie" case is, however, recent, and I have no doubt that it is mostly the failure to enforce the Language Clause that must be held responsible. I have no hesitation in predicting that the American will pass away again if this grievance is not redressed, and with him will pass all hope for American seapower.

Conclusion

In closing this report I hope you will bear with me if I again call your attention to what we promised, what we have done, and in what we have done less than what we ought. There is a very serious slump in shipping. Many men are idle, and some are suffering. I fear that it is going to be worse before it is better. Nearly all of us are without families, and we can, therefore, endure more of idleness than other men. If we must endure to convince our employers that we really mean what we say, then endure we must and will. In this we have no choice. The world has no consideration for those who whimper and then surrender. We must act otherwise.

We owe this much to our cause and to ourselves. This debt—I feel it—we shall pay, and in paying it we shall acquire more unity, more self-respect and a clearer vision.

On behalf of those not yet in our movement, I thank those in it for the work done, the progress made and the loyal co-operative spirit exhibited during the year.

Respectfully submitted.

ANDREW FURUSETH.

Labor News

More than 1000 organized painters in and around Newark, N. J., suspended work because of an attempt by contractors to reduce wages.

A broken agreement by the Master Ladies' Tailors' Association forced members of the Custom Ladies' Tailors' Union of Baltimore, Md., on the street. The employers also demand wage reductions, which the workers refuse. The union is affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

By a vote of 1663 to 4 organized street car men in Detroit, Mich, have refused to accept a wage reduction. Recently the proposal was unanimously rejected at a mass meeting of these workers, who declared that the company's plan was a "flagrant violation of contract." The company replied that the mass meeting was not representative of a majority of its employes. The union then arranged for a secret ballot and four votes out of 1667 were cast in favor of the company.

Officials of the United Mine Workers of America have levied an assessment of $1 a month for two months on the membership for the benefit of Alabama and West Virginia miners. The Alabama miners are striking to secure the enforcement of an award made by the President's bituminous coal commission, appointed when the nation-wide strike was called off last fall. The West Virginia miners are striking against the victimizing policy of coal owners, who are opposed to unionism. It is estimated that the assessment will total over $1,000,000.

In urging higher wage standards for employes of the Forest Service, Chief Forester Greeley says, in his annual report, that resignations' last year have threatened to demoralize the service. "The real injury from low salaries is not to employes of the Government, who can take care of themselves by seeking other positions, but to the Government itself." The report states that capable woodsmen can no longer be secured at prewar rates and that filling their places with unseasoned men may be responsible for fire losses greater than the cost of capable men.

In a statement at Chicago, S. C Mason, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, before a meeting of members of the association, emphasized that the association had favored the open shop for years. "We must do all in our power to quell the spirit of discontent that rests on the country," he said. "Congress can do much by removing the Government shackles on private business. We must meet organization with organization." Mason advocated the abolishment of the excess profit tax and said that the Seamen's bill was essential.

Dissolution of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, an injunction restraining workers now on strike at New York from picketing factories, and $500,000 damages are asked in a suit filed in the Supreme Court by J. Friedman & Co., clothing manufacturers. The suit was brought in behalf of all members of the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Association. W. A. Bandler, president of the manufacturers' organization, stated that dissolution of the association is sought because it is an "unlawful combination and conspiracy organized solely for the purpose of destroying the existing industrial structure in the clothing industry."

"SALVAGE"

SEAMEN, do you know what you are entitled to receive for services that you perform as volunteers in saving life and property at sea? If you don't, get a copy of Axtell's Book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen." It covers this subject completely. Why should you sign papers for a runner from a lawyer's office, to collect what you have earned, if, by knowing the law, you can get it without doing so. Do you know that it is contrary to law and ethics of the profession for a lawyer to employ a runner or pay a runner or any other person any portion of his fee for getting business for him; that such an attorney is not regarded as fit to practice in the majority of States in the United States? In cases where a lawyer represents the whole crew, including officers and men, 15% is a fair charge, for collecting the money where it does not involve litigation. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and the Statutes of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other.

Overtime, personal injuries, wrongful discharge, waiting time, penalties are fully discussed in this little volume.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

"Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

"Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.

"As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am

"Respectfully yours,

FRANK MANNING,
Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Although denouncing the soap boxers as undesirables within any community, the proponents of the Better American Federation are strumpeting their "cause" on the streets of Long Beach, California.

Final estimates of Utah's beet crop announced by M. M. Justin, agricultural statistician of the Department of Agriculture, place the yield at 1,304,000 tons, produced on 112,700 acres. This crop will bring the growers of the State $15,648,000, the largest sum ever paid to beet growers in Utah in one season.

Freight, aggregating 557,224 tons, valued at $19,370,401, was handled over the port of San Diego docks and wharves during 1920, according to the annual report of Harbormaster Joseph Brennan. The number of arrivals and departures last year was 35 per cent. greater than in 1919.

Financial interests say that the Pacific Oil Company, which has taken over the Southern Pacific oil interests in California, will start business with a prospective net income of $13,600,000 for the first year. This estimate is declared to be the minimum.

A report from Nogales, Arizona, states that news from the border is to the effect that a band of Yaqui Indians are on the warpath at Cruz Piedras, eight miles south of Guaymas, Mexico. A number of cowboys have been killed and ranches are being looted.

The Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion of Seattle has adopted resolutions calling on Federal, State and city authorities to take steps toward providing employment. Logging camps, it is said, will not resume work for several weeks and it is not certain whether many of the sawmills will start up again this month.

The Dunlop Tire and Rubber Company has virtually suspended operations. At the office of the company this statement was given out January 12: "The directors of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Corporation have decided that general conditions in the automobile industry are such that they are justified in slowing down their program until conditions improve. April 1 is the probable date of resumption of activities."

The schooner "Muriel" was struck by lightning during an electric storm at San Francisco last week. The rail of the vessel was damaged and a copper plate torn off the side. The night watchman aboard was knocked down by the shock but not injured.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has denied a rehearing of the cases of forty-seven members of the Industrial Workers of the World, convicted at Sacramento of violations of the syndicalism law. These men are now serving sentences at McNiell Island.

A proposal for emergency relief of unemployed workers through properly organized committees in every industrial community, together with four devices for blotting out the ever-recurring unemployment problem, which is declared to be again approaching an acute stage, are set forth by the American Association for Labor Legislation in a statement recently issued, which urges the adoption of a national-state system of employment exchanges, intelligent planning of public work, regularization of industry, and unemployment insurance, as a means of "abolishing bread-lines from among the miseries of the world."

Orders withdrawing from service thirty ships aggregating 180,000 deadweight tons for tie-up at Baltimore, New York, Norfolk, Philadelphia and at Gulf ports were issued on January 17 by the Shipping Board.

Completing her first round trip, the new 10,000-ton tanker "Algonquin" has arrived in San Francisco from Chinese ports in ballast. The "Algonquin" is one of the large fleet of tankers operated by the Standard Oil Company.

The mine sweeper "Whippoorwill," with oil barge No. 2 in tow, has arrived at San Diego from Hampton Roads for permanent service. This vessel is the last of the North Sea's famous "suicide fleet" to be sent to Pacific waters.

The 10,000-ton armored cruiser Brooklyn made her last voyage as a fighting ship from San Diego to Mare Island, Calif. According to Navy Department announcement, the Brooklyn is to be placed out of commission at the Mare Island yard.

A Montivideo report to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce announces the arrival of the "Arapahoe," formerly on the run from San Francisco to Manila and since the war transferred to the Atlantic. When operating off the West Coast the "Arapahoe" carried members of Shipping Board recruits and acted as a finishing school in their training of the sea. She is well remembered in San Francisco and many of the younger seamen who are on board other vessels trained for their sea service on her decks.

The schooner "Inca," which left Eureka for Sydney, October 9, 1920, sprung a leak while 250 miles from Sydney. Captain Winther put his wife and eight-months-old baby and the nine members of his crew in the ship's boat, from which they were taken aboard the "West Holbrook." The captain and chief engineer remained aboard the schooner and were towed to Sydney. The "West Holbrook" carried the nine members of the "Inca's" crew to San Pedro last week, after landing the captain's wife and baby at Honolulu.

That the ruling of the Shipping Board and the threatened interpretation of the prohibition law that no booze can be sold on board ships flying the American flag, whether outside the three-mile limit or not, will have a very serious effect on the passenger traffic across the Pacific, is the united opinion of the local operators in this service. Following the objection of Eastern operators, who are threatened with having to content themselves with the "overflow" of passenger business if bars are restricted on the American-owned ships, the Pacific operators are also about to make themselves heard.

The schooner "Omega," one of the oldest sailing craft operating from the West Coast, has just finished another run in very good time for a sailing vessel from Port Blakely to Hobart, Cape Town. She carried lumber for the Simpson Lumber Company and made the trip in about ninety days. This is good time, as sailing ships often take 120 days to the trip without causing their owners any worry. The "Omega" was running in the trade from this coast when the Panama Canal was a theory and when sailing masters considered eighty-nine days from a north Atlantic port to San Francisco a very quick passage.

News from Abroad

The director general of the Berlin postoffice recently issued an order against strikes in his department and the trade unionists concerned declared that they would exercise their right to strike if their demand for increased wages was refused. The threat produced partial results, as the Reichstag adopted the recommendations of a commission dealing with this question, which has also been approved by the government. The employes insist that the increases are not sufficient and the question is being further discussed.

The discussion in Great Britain on the merits of battleships in view of the development of the submarine, continues as the public reads the publication by the government of all papers and orders on the battle of Jutland between the British and German fleets. In commenting on these papers, the Manchester Guardian says: "The value of the battleship is unquestionably diminished not only by mine and submarine, but by the torpedoes of the destroyer. Had the Germans built more destroyers and fewer dreadnaughts we might have been in much worse case at Jutland. What are we to build now?"

Dissolution of the General Federation of Labor has been ordered by the Paris court which has been hearing the cases against Leon Jouhaux, president of the federation, and others of its officers on charges of infringements of the law governing unions. Fines were imposed upon Jouhaux and four other federation officials. The decision of the court amounts to depriving the federation of a legal status, but it does not prevent the organization reforming under another name. A strong sentiment exists in political circles against enforcement of the decree, the federation since the prosecution began having taken a strong stand against the communists. The trial of Jouhaux and his associate officials was begun December 16. The infringements of the law charged against them were of a technical character, such as the admission to membership in the federation of irregularly formed unions. The federation, however, was charged with having political objects.

The delegates to the Pan-American Federation of Labor Congress has been divided into two groups—one English-speaking and the other Spanish-speaking—to receive an account of the organization's activities. A report, signed by President Samuel Gompers, Secretary Canuto Vargas and Treasurer James Lord, discussed Santo Domingo's protest against American occupation and an outline of the efforts of the Pan-American and the American Federation of Labor to restore native rule there. Emphasizing the need for a trade union organization in Central and South America, the report says Ecuador has been the first to respond to the movement, being followed by Guatemala and Salvador, but with Panama making little progress. It refers to the Argentine Federation of Labor, which has refused to join the Pan-American organization, asserting that inasmuch as an international federation of trades unions exists it is unnecessary also to have a Pan-American federation. The section dealing with the international labor conference, held in Washington in 1918, concludes with an indorsement of the findings of the conference.

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL

FOR THE SEAFARING PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.
Official Paper of the International Seamen's Union of America.

A Journal of Seamen, by Seamen, for Seamen. Our Aim: The Brotherhood of the Sea. Our Motto: Justice by Organization.

VOL. XXXIV, No. 22. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1921. Whole No. 1738.

INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S PROGRESS

Contracts Reveal Advance of Italian Seamen's Federation

The Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the International Seamen's Union of America was called to order in Scandinavian Hall, Girard Avenue, at 10:45 a. m., January 10, 1921, by President Andrew Furuseth.

Mr. C. J. Cattell welcomed the delegates to Philadelphia on behalf of Mayor Moore, who was absent from the city. He stated that there was feeling in the hearts of the people of Philadelphia that they wanted the Seamen, because they felt that their presence here would add to the value of the citizenship of the city. Mr. Cattell closed his brief address by expressing the hope that the convention would be a pleasant and profitable one for the delegates.

Mr. George F. Sproule, Director of the Department of Wharves, Docks and Ferries, was the next speaker. He gave the visitors some interesting statistics relative to the port of Philadelphia. He stated that the present city administration was very much interested in the development of the port and also very much interested in ships and in the men that go down to sea in ships.

"Personally," said Mr. Sproule, "I have been associated with these men from boyhood; I lived during the time when there was great brutality on ships, and I have seen what has been accomplished, through unions such as yours, to bring about better conditions. I have always felt that the seamen never got the recognition they should have gotten during the war. It seems to me that all the credit was given the officers of those ships, but it was through the heroism of the men very largely that the war was fought to a successful conclusion."

Following the usual routine of organizing the Convention, and appointment of committees, many messages of congratulation and goodwill were received from branches of every subgroup in all districts having affiliation with the International Union; also from seafarers' organizations throughout the world. The following telegrams were read to the Convention:

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 21, 1921.

Carl G. Kirsch, Attorney for Sailors, Firemen and Cooks of Philadelphia, 1301 Commonwealth Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

Had hoped, until the last minute, to be able to attend your Convention. Wish you every possible success and will appreciate your expressing my regret to the delegates in attendance.

WILLIAM C. SPROUL,
Governor of Pennsylvania.

London, Eng., Jan. 11, 1921.

President, International Seamen's Union, Annual Convention, Philadelphia, Pa.

Executive Council, National Sailors and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, now in session, sends hearty fraternal greetings to their comrades of America, with best wishes for success of Convention. Hope to welcome your fraternal delegate to our next meeting.

HAVELOCK WILSON, President.
EDMUND CATHEY, Secretary.

This communication was referred to the Committee on International Relations, with instructions to prepare a suitable reply. The committee later reported back the following cablegram:

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 12, 1921.

Searoving, London, England.

The Convention sends fraternal greetings to Executive Board and expresses hope for harmonious meeting productive of good and for success at Brussels Arbitration Conference.

FURUSETH.
HANSON.

The report of the committee was adopted and the cablegram ordered sent.

The following communication and form of agreement was received from the Italian Seamen's Federation:

Genoa, Dec. 10, 1920.

Mr. Andrew Furuseth, President of the International Seamen's Union of America, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

Very much obliged for your kind letter of November 24, 1920.

In these days we have carried on the articles of enlistment regarding seamen on board vessels of every tonnage. We have obtained even the articles of enlistment for seafarers on board tugs, lighters, etc.

Here enclosed I send you a copy of every one of these contracts. I have, in the same time, the pleasure to notify you that on board the steamboats of the co-operative "Garibaldi" we have applied the rule of the eight-hour work, even at sea for every department. That is a very good thing, because it means that the "Garibaldi" has adopted the eight-hour week at sea, even for the deck department.

I am following the difficulties you are meeting through the idleness which is striking the members of your Union.

I wish you and your country-fellows better times and every happiness.

Yours faithfully,

E. SINTUY.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT

Shipping Articles for Personnel of Tugs:

ARTICLE 1

The present contract shall have a duration of .....months to be reckoned from today and shall always be valid whoever be the captain in command.

The tug on which the crew has shipped shall render service in the zone within a radius of fifty miles from the lighthouse of the port in which it is designated to render local service.

Whenever the tug should be assigned to service beyond the zone above indicated, the crew shall receive the rates of pay provided in the wage schedule contained in Article 2, and the hours of navigation of the crew shall be governed by the said article.

Every person shipping in accordance with the present contract shall be under obligation of rendering service to any other tug belonging to the same owner, or to the same company or firm of owners, within the entire duration of the present agreement; under the same conditions it shall be understood that the period of enrollment fixed in this contract shall remain unchanged in the case of such person.

Members of the crew who are being enrolled in a port in which the tug is not stationed shall, in order to be able to come on board, be entitled to traveling expenses, transportation of their dunnage, and pay and sustenance, beginning from the day of enrollment, and in case of a preceding period of engagement (beginning with the day on which their passbook has been taken up) they cshall be entitled to pay and sustenance for such a period, always provided that the enrolled person has complied with his obligation of shipping.

Compensation for sustenance shall not supplementary; sustenance shall for the duration of the journey, for going to a foreign country, and up to the time of shipment be agreed upon with the enrolled person in each individual instance.

Compensation for sustenance shall not be granted in cash whenever the owner provides sustenance in kind.

If the contract expires during a voyage to Italy it shall be understood to have been extended up to the time of the arrival of the tug in the home port, provided the arrival in said port takes place within a maximum period of forty-five days after the expiration of the term of the present contract.

If the contract expires during a voyage to a foreign country or in a foreign port the enrolled person must remain on board under the same conditions if the tug makes a direct voyage to Italy.

If, instead, the tug makes a voyage to other foreign ports the enrolled person shall be repatriated with pay and sustenance up to the time of arrival in the port of enrollment, and the enrollment shall continue with the right to supplementary pay equal to 15 per cent. of the former for the entire duration of his presence on board up to the time of arrival in the home port.

If the port of debarkation is not the same as that of enrolment the enrolled person shall be entitled to repatriation to the latter at the expense of the owner and be entitled to pay and sustenance up to the date of arrival in the said port.

Repatriation shall be effected according to the choice of the owner, either by means of steamer or railway, in the following manner:

Captains with certificates of masters of ocean vessels and licensed chief engineers shall be entitled to first-class travel, deck officers and machinists, second-class travel, and ordinary seamen to third-class travel.

Members of the crew enrolled outside of Italy shall, whenever they are being disembarked in a port other than that of their engagement, and if special agreements do not exist, be entitled to repatriation to the port where they were engaged, with pay and sustenance up to the time of their effected repatriation.

Through explicit derogation of Articles 531 and 535 of the Commercial Code, in the case of prohibition of commerce, of seizure of the ship, capture, injury to the ship, shipwreck, or other accident, the enrolled person shall be entitled to repatriation, with pay and sustenance up to the date of arrival in the port of enrolment.

The enrolled person has the same right in case of sale of the tug outside of the port of enrolment.

Premature annulment of the contract shall be regulated by the provisions of the Commercial Code.

ARTICLE 2

The rank and pay (inclusive of sustenance) of the persons comprising the crew is made evident in the table annexed to the present contract.

The monthly (commercial month) pay begins with the day of engagement and becomes payable at the end of each month, sustenance being included in it.

Payment in foreign countries shall be governed by the determinations made by the Board of Awards (Commissione Arbitrale) of June 30, 1920. The crew, acting as substitutes for missing members when entrusted with functions of higher rank, shall receive the pay due to such rank during the period of substitution.

During the presence of tugs in ports in which malaria prevails quinine shall be furnished free and daily to the members of the crew.

Whenever the tug goes to ports officially declared infected with epidemic diseases and does not remain there in quarantine, all members of the crew shall be entitled to an increase of 20 per cent. in pay for the period which expires between the departure from the immediately preceding port and the arrival in the next port after the infected port, and this increase shall never be less than 5 per cent. of the pay fo rthe entire journey.

As infected ports shall be considered those which shall be officially declared so by the governments to which they belong, and also those which, in absence of such declaration, subject to quarantine vessels anchoring in them.

The captain shall make payments on account of the monthly pay to the crew.

Whenever the tug stays away from its home port for a period in excess of one month the company or the owner may, on request of an enrolled person, consent that part of his pay, within a limit which the owner himself may fix, shall be assigned by the enrolled person to his family for maintenance in accordance with Article 545 of the Commercial Code.

The enrolled person must designate the member of his family to whom he assigns part of his wages.

The payment of the assigned sums shall be made to the assignee or assignees designated by the enrolled person through the maritime authority of the port of enrolment whenever payment can not be made directly.

In the case of sickness or disability of any member of the crew during navigation the deck service shall be performed by the remaining personnel of his group with proper consideration of the normal hours of labor. If, at the time of departure, some of the crew fail to embark, or are absent, the pay (inclusive of sustenance) of the absent ones shall be drawn by those who, during the voyage and within the normal hours of labor, perform the work of these absent ones.

Each enrolled person shall, in pursuance of the law on industrial accidents, be provided at the expense of the owner, with a book in which shall be registered his pay and all supplements to it.

ARTICLE 3

The size of the crew of the various groups of tugs has been determined by the tables annexed to the present contract showing the minimum crews. In the case of tugs having, however, crews in excess of the minimum size fixed in the said tables the size of the crew shall remain unchanged.

ARTICLE 4

The normal hours of labor shall be 8 hours for the entire crew and shall be performed between 8 a. m. and 12 noon and between 1 and 5 p. m.

If the exigencies of the service require it the hours of labor may with observance of the 8-hour day be modified provided that the dinner hour, which may not be interrupted, falls within the time between 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. and the hours of labor fall within the time of 6 a. m. and 7 p. m. with interruptions only for meal times. All work performed before or after the hours fixed beforehand shall be compensated to each individual enrolled person in accordance with the rates fixed for overtime work.

Navigation Service Outside the Regular Zone.

The hours of the navigation service for deck officers and engineers shall be 8 hours in each 24. During navigation the watch shall be divided into two turns for the deck crew, 4 hours of watch alternating with 4 hours of rest, with relief from 4 to 6 p. m. and 6 to 8 p. m. through the watch below.

The watch of the engine crew shall under normal conditions be divided into 3 turns, each watch having 8 hours of work and 16 hours of rest in every 24 hours, 4 hours of watch alternating with 8 hours of rest.

The preceding provisions are not applicable in the case of special work performed in the interests of the ship, the passengers, and the cargo which requires the presence of all or a large part of the crew. During the voyage men on watch are obligated to perform during night hours and on holidays the work indispensable for navigation, for the security of the vessel, for the operation of the engines, service of the passengers, the washing of the deck, and the emptying of the ashes.

If, however, the captain should deem it urgent that other work be performed during the night hours men of the watch must perform it provided they are paid for it at overtime rates. As night hours are to be considered those between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m.

Boys who have not completed their 15th year of age shall be excluded from service on the night watch.

The normal hours of labor of that part of the engine and deck crew which does not perform watch service shall be regulated by the exigencies of the service and during navigation may in no case exceed 8 hours.

The engine crew must raise and empty into the sea the ashes, watch by watch, during their hours of service and whenever this should not be possible shall be entitled to compensation for overtime work.

Except in cases of force majeur the deck crew may not be obligated to substitute for the engine crew.

ARTICLE 6

Tables for Overtime Work.

Port and Zone Service.

The following overtime rates for work in excess of the normal 8 hours of labor, be it day, night, or holiday work, for the crews of tugs in general service in ports is fixed as follows:
Deck officers and engineers...4.50 lire per hour
Ordinary seamen, firemen, trimmers.....
.....3.00 lire per hour
Apprentice seamen, boys, etc..1.50 lire per hour

Industrial Service and Port Traffic.

"Lloyd Mediterraneo," "Ilva," "Ansaldo" and similar services, as well as services of general traffic.

The rates of pay for overtime work of the crews of tugs assigned to industrial services have been fixed as follows:

During the daytime from 6 a. m. to 8 p. m. (in case of the normal 8 hours):
Deck officers and engineers....3.50 lire per hour
Ordinary seamen, firemen and trimmers....
.....2.00 lire per hour
Apprentice seamen, boys, etc..1.00 lire per hour

Night work (8 p. m. to 6 a. m.):

The compensation for overtime work during the night time shall be double that for daytime.

On demand of the owner the crew may be called upon to work overtime after having performed the normal 8 hours of work.

Overtime work outside of the zone:

Overtime work on tugs outside the zone, performed during navigation, shall be compensated in accordance with the shipping articles for steamers.

If the work is performed in port the hours of overtime work shall be counted double (as in the model contract of the royal commission).

ARTICLE 7

The following allowances shall be granted to the crew in order to sleep on board in ports or roadsteads during the night (from 7 p. m. to 6 a. m.):

In case of tugs assigned to tugging steamers and sailing vessels:
Deck officers and engineers.....15 lire
Ordinary seamen and firemen.....12 lire
Apprentice seamen and boys..... 5 lire

In case of tugs assigned to industrial service (for firms of the kind of "Ilva," "Lloyd Mediterraneo," "Ansaldo," and the like):
Deck officers and engineers.....10 lire
Ordinary seamen and firemen..... 7 lire
Apprentice seamen and boys..... 4 lire

In case of tugs assigned to salvage service in ports and on the seashore the allowances shall be the same as in the case of tugs of industrial firms.

In case of tugs assigned to other port services the rates of allowances shall be:
Deck officers and engineers.....20 lire
Ordinary seamen and firemen.....17 lire
Apprentice seamen and boys..... 8 lire

ARTICLE 8

On request, and if the work is not performed by undertakings on land, the engine crew as well as the deck crew must render service in loading and stowing the coal purchased, at a rate of compensation of 4 lire per ton.

If this work is being performed outside of the regular hours of labor it entitles the crew to compensation for overtime in addition to the compensation indicated above. The entire sum due to the crew having performed such work shall be divided into parts proportional to the hours of labor actually performed by each member of the crew.

ARTICLE 9

Work on Holidays.

Active work on holidays shall be compensated as overtime work during daytime. In the case of tugs of all kinds, with the exclusion of those given over to towing steamers and sailing vessels, to which shall be applicable the table of compensation for the night watch off watch fixed for such types of tugs in Article 7.

The crew without group distinction shall in addition to the above compensation be granted a workday off for each holiday worked. These days off may be cumulated and be enjoyed within the period of the contract whenever exigencies of the service permit it. The accumulated days off which have not been made use of by fault of the shipowner shall be compensated and paid for as so many forfeited workdays (exclusive of maintenance) and at the rate of wages fixed in the table for ports and zones.

Omission at end of paragraph——

ARTICLE 10

Every enrolled person has a right to rest on holidays. As holidays shall be considered Sundays and all legal holidays recognized by the Italian laws, as well as May 1, Epiphany, Ascension Day, Assumption Day, 20th of September, All Saints Day, Christmas, and the first of May.

The shipowner shall have the right, if the exigencies of the service require it, to demand that the crew shall work even on holidays.

ARTICLE 11

English Saturday.

Wherever the dock workers are granted a half holiday on Saturday the crews of tugs shall also enjoy the privilege and thus have only 4 hours of normal labor, which shall be included in the time between 6 a. m. and 1 p. m.

Where there are no dock workers the crews of tugs shall only enjoy the privilege of the Saturday afternoon off when the working forces of the industry on which the tug depends are granted a half holiday.

ARTICLE 12

War Risk, Accident and Sickness Insurance.

In case of death from accident caused by events of war or by consequences resulting from a state of war, survivors shall receive compensation equal to 6 years' earnings (pay and sustenance) and never less than the following amounts:

(a) 32,000 lire for deck officers and engineers.
(b) 30,000 lire for petty officers.
(c) 25,000 lire for members of the crew.
(d) 20,000 lire for seamen apprentices, boys, cabin boys, etc., without deduction of the amounts that may be awarded by the invalidity fund for the merchant marine.

1. All members of the crew inclusive of the captain, whatever their age and their pay, must be insured against industrial accidents. For that part of the crew to which is applicable the law on industrial accidents provision shall be made in pursuance of the law. For the remaining part of the crew the owner shall make provision by assuring 5 years' annual earnings (pay and sustenance) for cases of permanent total disability.

Cases of permanent partial disability involving a reduction of 25 per cent. and over of the working capacity shall be insured by the owner in pursuance of Article 95 of the aforesaid law.

Nevertheless, in partial abrogation of what has been laid down in the preceding paragraph, each accident involving any alteration of the existing visual capacity of officers in the service shall be considered for the purpose of insurance as a case of permanent partial invalidity.

The capital value due to the invalid or to his survivors may eventually be reduced in accordance with an award of the invalidity fund of the merchant marine, (Paragraph unintelligible).

2. In the case of disembarkment due to accident or sickness members of the crew shall during a maximum period of 4 months be paid in cash their wages and sustenance in the daily amounts fixed by the present contract, except as relates to sustenance in cases where the enrolled person has been given medical care at the expense of the shipowner.

In cases of sickness caused through the service members of the crew shall moreover be entitled for a maximum period of an additional six months to half their pay and sustenance.

ARTICLE 13

Insurance of Personal Effects.

In case of loss of personal effects by reasons of the war or through some other accidents the crew shall receive the indemnities provided in the following schedule:

	Outside the Zone.	Within the Zone.
Deck officers and engineers	2500 lire	2000 lire
Petty officers (boatswains and boatswains' men)	2000 lire	....
Ordinary seamen	1500 lire	1500 lire
Apprentice seamen and boys.	1200 lire	1200 lire

Exclusive Port Service.

Deck officers and engineers	1500 lire
Ordinary seamen	1000 lire
Boys, etc.	800 lire

ARTICLE 14

All persons of the crew, whatever their age and their wages, shall be insured against industrial accidents according to the provisions of the law.

In case there are on board licensed captains and engineers these shall be treated in accordance with Article 18 of the model contract of enrolment for steam vessels approved by the royal commission.

There shall in addition be provided collective insurance with the national social insurance fund in case of death from sickness, in favor of the members of the crew in cases in which a pension is not being paid to the survivors in accordance with the provisions of the law on the invalidity fund of the merchant marine. Such insurance shall be written for the sum of 3000 lire in case the enrolled person leaves behind only a widow and of 5000 lire whenever he

Blue Laws Fail

"The willingness with which we undertake to regulate by law the personal habits of private citizens is a source of perpetual astonishment to Europeans," says Raymond B. Fosdick in his book on "American Police Systems."

During the world war the author was chairman of the commission on training camp activities of the war and navy departments.

"Nowhere in the world," he says, "is there so great an anxiety to place the moral regulation of social affairs in the hands of the police, and nowhere are the police so incapable of carrying out such regulations. Our concern, moreover, is for external things, for results that are formal and apparent rather than essential.

"We are less anxious about preventing a man from doing wrong to others than in preventing him from doing what we consider harm to himself. We like to pass laws to compel the individual to do as we think he ought to do for his own good. We attack symptoms rather than causes, and in doing so we create a species of moralistic despotism which overrides the private conscience and destroys liberty where liberty is most precious."

Not a Remedy

News from London, England, shows that the government's latest solution for the unemployed problem is to have employes work part time. Workers declare this is no remedy as short time is now the rule and the number bordering on starvation will be increased.

Other trade unionists declare that the government has taken the first step towards an attempt to reduce wages and that it will solve nothing to share the poverty existing among workers partly employed with those who are totally unemployed.

The plan is denounced as a scheme to shift to the workers the unemployment problem, while the government and employers and other taxpayers would escape responsibility.

Trade unionists call attention to the hysterical pleas for greater production made last year by statesmen and editors, who now urge workers to divide their short time with those who have no work.

Tom Mann, general secretary of the Amalgamated Engineering Union, makes this comment on the government's short-time proposal: "I am in favor of dividing work provided it is done on the payment of a living wage. Of course, the government does not propose this and for my part I will have nothing to do with the scheme."

The government has also notified the building trades that it will give these unions £5 for every ex-service man out of work admitted to membership. The unions are asking how this will guarantee employment for them, and while the officers of the National Federation of Building Trade Operatives have submitted the plan to affiliates, it is referred to as bribe money.

Wage Cut Not Justified

The widely-heralded reduction in living costs averaged 6.7 per cent. during the period June, 1920, to December, 1920, in 32 leading cities, according to the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The June, 1920, cost of living was the highest during the war, being 116.5 per cent. over December, 1913.

This 6.7 per cent. reduction is being used by every publicity force at the command of cheap-wage employers to justify a wage-decrease of 15, 20 and 30 per cent. among the unorganized, despite the fact that at no time during or after the war have wages permitted workers to maintain living standards of 1913.

Decreases during the past six months, averaging 6.7 per cent., are as follows:

Baltimore, 8.2 per cent.; Boston, 6.3 per cent.; Buffalo, 8.9 per cent.; Chicago, 9.9 per cent.; Cleveland and Norfolk, 5.9 per cent. each; Detroit, 7.4 per cent.; Houston, 3.9 per cent.; Jacksonville and Memphis, 4.8 per cent. each; Los Angeles, 2.5 per cent.; Mobile and Pittsburgh, 6.6 per cent. each; New York, 8.1 per cent.; Philadelphia, 6 per cent.; Portland, Me., 7 per cent.; Portland, Ore., 10 per cent.; San Francisco and Atlanta, 5.6 per cent. each; Savannah, 5.1 per cent.; Seattle, 7.8 per cent.; Washington, 6.7 per cent.; Birmingham, 6.1 per cent.; Cincinnati, 8.4 per cent.; Denver, 7.7 per cent.; Indianapolis, 8.4 per cent.; Kansas City, 7.6 per cent.; Minneapolis, 5.4 per cent.; New Orleans, 3.7 per cent.; Richmond, 7.3 per cent.; St. Louis, 9.1 per cent.; Scranton, 8.2 per cent.

It is a significant fact that landed interests and public utilities took no part in these small reductions. Instead, in every instance but one, substantial increases were made during the six months in the cost of housing, fuel and light.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics also shows that the cost of living in December, 1920, was 100.4 per cent. over 1913. This means that if wages are not twice those of pre-war times the conditions of workers are not equal to 1913, and instead of securing better conditions as a result of the war for democracy their standards are lower than before the war.

A Natural Sequence

Latest reports from Topeka, Kan., state that the tinsel has worn off Allen's "can't-strike" law and its supporters have abandoned their cock-sure attitude on the ancient policy of handcuffing workers to their jobs.

The governor is conscious that he is slipping, but that is the extent of his knowledge on this subject. He has recommended that the industrial court, which enforces the law, turn over the management of public utilities to some other commission and permit the court to handle strikes. Last year the industrial court handled 28 disputes and there are some members of the legislature so hard-headed thar they ask if it is not a high price to

Samuel Gompers, president of the A. F. of L., was re-elected president of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, at the convention of that organization held in Mexico City. The next convention will be held in Guatemala City.

A warship recently conveyed 100 Japanese from Sydney to Thursday Island, just off Northern Australia, where transfer was made to a Japanese vessel. The Japanese were discovered in Broome and are alleged to have participated in the recent riots there.

According to information received from Malaga, Spain, the stevedores and dock laborers of that port have refused to load olive oil, wheat, or flour on outbound vessels. They hope by this action to increase the amount of these products on the local markets.

The stewards' strike, which had shipping tied up in Australia and New South Wales, has been settled. The "Tahiti," "Las Vegas" and other ships, which were idle because of the inability of getting marine stewards, are on their way to San Francisco with Australian merchandise and passengers.

As a result of the refusal of the Finnish government to grant a general amnesty to the Socialists still imprisoned for their participation in the revolutionary outbreak of two years ago, the 80 Socialist members of Parliament recently employed obstructionist methods to prevent passage of the annual budget.

A recent report from Melbourne, Australia, states the theory of a basic wage, set by the State, has been blown sky high in Australia, as a result of the government's rejection of an award by its basic wage commission, which has investigated the question for a year. In October, 1919, Federal Premier Hughes said: "If we are to have industrial peace we must be prepared to pay the price, and that price is justice to the workers; nothing else will serve." The commission recommended an average of £5 16 shillings a week, and now the premier rejects the award and says the basic wage shall be £4 a week temporarily, but prices have reached the limit and will probably come down shortly. The collapse of a basic wage by state fiat has awakened the workers to the necessity of depending upon themselves, rather than be subject to the whim of a politician.

The Australian Seamen's Union is demanding a new menu, other than that which is provided under the Navigation Act, and has presented to the Steamship Owners' Federation a new list of requirements. The union is asking that all food be served in enamel utensils, and that a framed menu be furnished for each messroom. They also demand that condensed milk be substituted for concentrated milk; that canned foods take the place of dried foods, that pickles, sauces and mustard be supplied as required, and clean tablecloths be supplied at least three times per week. Eggs and hot rolls are also asked for, in addition to scones for breakfast every day. Soup, roast beef, veal and mutton are also included in the new list of culinary requirements, to say nothing of potatoes, marrow and other vegetables. In the third course plum pudding with sauce, custard, jellies and canned fruit are asked for.

Painless Parker

and His Principles

By Painless Parker

MY principles are to do all the good I can for others and for myself at the same time. I am in the dental business to make money and to give the people good dentistry.

My associates and I use the E. R. Parker System, which is the only plan ever invented to make fine dentistry possible at a fair price. I am not a "cheap" man and don't believe in anything "cheap." But I do claim to do work as well as anybody can do it, often better, and to be able to do it for much less than the dentist who works alone in the old expensive way.

When we treat over a hundred thousand patients a year, we can well afford to work for lower prices than those who treat maybe a hundred patients a year.

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

E. T. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation, has ruled that under existing laws freight vessels may transport merchandise and passengers between United States ports and ports in the Virgin Islands.

The Rolph Navigation and Coal Company announces the arrival of the barkentine "Rolph" at Newcastle, Australia, from Melbourne. She will take coal there for the West Coast of South America.

It has been announced that the steamship "Maquan" would be substituted for the steamship "Nile" in the Pacific Grain Company's charter. The "Maquan" will take grain from Columbia River to the United Kingdom at $15 a ton.

For the last three months heavy shipments of gasoline and fuel-oil have been dispatched from the Texas fields and other oil centers of the United States to the antipodes. Due to the shortage in this State of fuel-oils and gasoline, California did not participate in this exportation to any large extent.

Reporting that a fleet of nearly fifty vessels was on the fishing banks along the West Coast of the Queen Charlotte Islands, the schooner "Democrat," Captain Nels Rorvik, has arrived in Seattle. The "Democrat" is the first vessel to reach Seattle this year from those fishing grounds.

The new SS. "Hawkeye State" made 19½ knots an hour on her speed trial in the Atlantic. This is one of the three Shipping Board steamers of the "535" type, assigned to the Matson Navigation Company for service. She is a sister ship of the "Golden State" and "Silver State."

While docking recently at the port terminals at Astoria, Oregon, the steamer "Pomona" was caught by the side and crashed into pier 2, about fifty feet from the end. A hole was cut into the dock fully twenty feet deep, and one of the steel rails of the railroad track was cut in two. The steamer was not injured.

After the activity of two weeks ago, when grain charters were recorded from Columbia River ports to the United Kingdom at $16 and $15, with the result that several Shipping Board vessels were taken from berths on the mud flats and put into commission for February loading, the charter market has taken a sudden slump back into its former inactivity.

Loaded with 12,000 barrels of gasoline, the motor-ship "Nuuanu" has left for Balboa in command of Captain Thornstrom. The shipment was cleared by George W. McNear, Inc., and is consigned to the United States Government, Canal Zone. The tank motor-ship is owned by the Philippine Vegetable Oil Company, and the cargo was loaded by the Associated Oil Company at Avon.

Bound for Brisbane and Sydney, the motorship "Oronite," under operation of the Standard Oil Company, sailed from San Francisco with a full cargo of oil, gasoline and asphalt. The vessel went out in command of Captain E. C. Genereaux, Jr. The shipment included 7000 barrels of lubricating oil, 5000 barrels of gasoline, 5000 barrels of kerosene and 1000 barrels of asphalt. This is the largest shipment of gasoline and oils to the Antipodes in some time.

The sailing date of the "Creole State" has been postponed for the second time. At first she was scheduled to go out on the Manila-East India run, January 26. This date was changed to February 1, and recently the booking agencies received notice that the ship would not get away until February 3. The operating department of the Pacific Mail said that there was more cargo offering from the East, and that this was the reason for the delay.

Atlantic Coast orders for 4,000,000 feet of lumber have been closed by the Port Blakeley Mill Company of Seattle, this being the first large order received for March and April shipment to the eastern markets via the Panama Canal. It will be filled from Puget Sound. A recent cut in rates by the Intercoastal Steamship Lines enables Douglas fir to be landed in the eastern markets this year in competition with the yellow pine of the South. The rate cut went into effect two weeks ago.

Resumption of a passenger and freight service between New York and Fiume will be inaugurated for the first time in five years with the departure from New York of the Cunard-Anchor Line steamer "Calabria," on February 24. The "Calabria" will carry passengers and freight to Vigo, Patras, Dubrovnik and Trieste, as well as to Fiume. Before the war Fiume was one of the principal ports on the Mediterranean with seven liners of the Cunard concern calling there alone. Excellent railroad connections make Fiume one of the greatest ports on the Mediterranean sea. Trains run direct to all parts of Austria-Hungary, Rumania, Serbia, Croatia, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia.

Owing to the remarkable success of service of the radio compass stations maintained by the navy at points outside San Francisco, for the purpose of giving steamships their bearings in dense fogs, additional stations are to be established on this coast. It has been announced that the following points are to be equipped: Point Hueneme, near Oxnard; Point Fermin, near San Pedro; Point Loma, near San Diego; Imperial Beach, near San Diego. It is also proposed that compass stations be established on Catalina Island and at Point Sur.

Two of the four 20,000-ton Diesel ore carriers which the Bethlehem Steel Corporation will build for its own use will be constructed at the Bay City yards of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. The engines will also be turned out on this Coast. The engines were designed by Arthur West, chief of the department of power of the Bethlehem Steel Company. The ships are being constructed for the account of the Ore Steamship Company, a subsidiary, and will cost in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 each. It is understood that the other two ore carriers will be built at the Sparrows Point yard of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation.

According to information received from the Pacific Steamship Company through the Seattle office, the "Wenatchee" will be the first 535 to be delivered to this coast. She has been allocated to this company for the trans-Pacific run, and is expected to leave Baltimore some time this month. The "Golden State," which comes to the Pacific Mail, will leave Baltimore February 15 and, after touching at Havana, Cristobal, Balboa, La Libertad, San Jose de Guatemala and San Pedro, will arrive at Seattle. The "Golden State" was given a trial trip recently off the Virgin Islands and made nineteen knots, according to advices received by the Pacific Mail from the Baltimore agent. She was built at Newport News.

The power schooner "Olga," 51 days out of Unalaska on a voyage to Seattle, and which had been given up as lost has arrived in Cordova after a long battle with almost continuous gales in the North Pacific. Provisions gave out, according to members of the crew, and for many days they were forced to subsist on dried fish. Pumps were kept working night and day to keep water out of the engine-room. Two reindeer, which were being shipped to a Los Angeles motion picture company, were killed and eaten by the crew after the ship's provisions had been exhausted. Two polar bears, also consigned to the motion picture company, arrived safely. The "Olga" carried a crew of six men. She left Unalaska December 5 and was not again heard from until she arrived at Cordova. The Coast Guard cutter "Snohomish" had been searching for her for the last week.

Robert Dollar, acting as agent for the British, French and Italian governments, has taken over eleven of the German sailing vessels interned during the war in the harbor at Santa Rosalia. All of the ships will be towed to San Francisco for reconditioning. The ship "Hans" left Santa Rosalia in tow of the steamer "Providencia" of the Compagnie Du Boleo. The ship "Egon" will leave there next month and be towed by the steamer "Griffdu" of the Pan-American Line. All of the vessels are badly in need of repairs, having lain idle in the Mexican port since August, 1914. Their hulls are covered with marine growth and their rigging needs complete overhauling. Under the terms of the armistice these ships have been distributed as follows: To Great Britain, 2; Italy, 4; France, 5. After the ships are reconditioned, cargoes will be secured for them and they will be dispatched to their respective countries. No tugs will be sent to bring the remaining ships up the coast, it having been decided to utilize freight steamers which touch at Santa Rosalia for that purpose.

In comparing the manner in which the slump in the world's trade has affected the various large shipping centers, the port of San Francisco shows favorably. The one big, bright spot in the world trade is the Hawaiian Islands, where in addition to the sugar trade, there is demand for every character of commodity. The coast to coast steamship trade continues brisk despite the large number of vessels diverted to this route. Demand for gasoline and oil in Australia, which had occasioned enormous shipments from California, is lessening, but continues fair. Oriental trade, import and export, first of the trades hit, continues poor, while grain shipments, due to seasonal change, are inactive. Gasoline and oil shipments, coastwise and to Balboa, maintain an even keel, and imports from Tampico are increasing. Lumber is at a standstill. More than twenty steam schooners are tied up in the bay, while tramp steamer cargo offerings are nil, and twenty-two Shipping Board steamers are tied up at Benicia. Evidences are not wanting of a material change for the better in the spring, when practically all trades will resume activity.

METHODS DIFFER

The advance of seamen throughout the world has recently begun to keep pace with that of workers ashore. Careful perusal of the Italian contract containing shipping articles for the personnel of tugs, reveals tremendous strides made by the seamen of Italy towards better and living conditions. There are several features of these agreements which are worthy of consideration. The most striking clauses are those dealing with matters of compensation and insurance, and the provisions for remuneration and care, in event of sickness or disability. In addition to war risk provisions, is the insurance of personal effects, and against industrial accidents.

The payments provided for are not large, but the principle is established, and can be extended in accordance with requirements, practice, and time.

The right of a seaman to his own time is recognized and the provisions protecting such right are specific.

In the matter of improvement in general status and conditions, progress of the Italian seamen compares favorably with that of our own. Their methods, however, have been entirely different to the procedure on this side of the Atlantic. While we have adopted a very conservative policy, and endeavored to secure favorable legislation from hostile elements, and by a campaign of education under adverse circumstances, the Italian seamen have been more rapid and direct. While our most potential instrument has been of a legislative quality, the Italian seamen have exerted very successfully and with more effect their economic power.

SABOTAGE IN RARE FORM

As a general rule when the word sabotage is applied in describing an act or acts of individuals or parties; visions of bewhiskered bolsheviki, desperate looking syndicalists, or unkempt I. W. W. are due to confront the imagination of the hearer. When a paragon of conservatism like the San Francisco Chronicle makes use of the term is can be expected to narrate a record of dire destruction. Robert Dollar's fleet of former German sailing craft, which are destined for San Francisco for a thorough overhauling and reconditioning, are quite a topic of interest in maritime circles. Therefore we are not greatly surprised when the fertile imagination of a marine news reporter constructs a fable of the sea from a very ordinary situation. The following interesting item appeared in the shipping news column of the "Chronicle":

"Sabotage of an unusual variety was brought to light when representatives of the Robert Dollar Steamship Company were dispatched to Santa Rosalia, Mexico, to make a survey of the eleven German sailing ships lying in port there. It developed that shortly after their internment the captains of the German crafts ordered the crews to load dirt to a depth of six to eight feet on all of the decks of the vessels. Since internment in 1914 vegetables and tropical fruits have been grown on the improvised land aboard the ships, and from this source the men received the majority of their rations.

"One of the vessels, the 'Hans,' 2869 tons, which sailed from Mexico for San Francisco on January 27 in tow of the steamer 'Providencia,' will be the first of the eleven German sailers to arrive. Shortly before the vessel was to sail a survey showed that the craft's mainmast a few inches below the deck had been perforated by an auger and then puttied up. Other damage had been done to all of the vessels and much preliminary repair was necessary before the ships could put to sea.

"The eleven vessels are to be brought here by the Robert Dollar Company, which is acting for the British, French and Italian governments, to whom the vessels were assigned under the terms of the armistice.

"The action of the German skippers in utilizing the decks of their vessels as truck farms has resulted in much damage, and it is believed that new decks will have to be laid on the ships. After repairs at San Francisco, the vessels will be loaded, if there are any offerings, and dispatched under the flags of their respective governments."

If the foregoing is founded on fact, we are inclined to believe that the captains of the interned vessels found the period of their exile irksome. The duration of their enforced idleness was problematical and those of the crews who were fortunate enough to take leave for more congenial surroundings lost no time in making their departure. On board ship nothing seems to tickle the palate of the average sailorman more than a dose of salad or garden truck.

If the several captains decided to utilize the hundreds of feet of deck space on their ships for raising the various courses of their meals, why call it sabotage? Gardening aboard ship is to say the least uncommon; but there were unusual circumstances.

CHICAGO AWAKES

In a recent call for a mass meeting to consider the unemployment situation, the Chicago Federation of Labor discloses the magnitude of the drive now being waged by employers throughout the United States against organized labor. It says:

"An unemployment situation, manufactured by the labor-bating employers for the purpose of forcing wages down, increasing hours of work and smashing the unions, is now upon us and is growing worse day by day. Coupled with the open drive on wage rates by shut-downs and lay-offs is an insidious, underhanded and un-American, so-called 'open shop' campaign in which the employers are aided, led and advised by the combined manufacturers' association, chambers of commerce and strike-breaking, gunman detective agencies. The purpose of this is to rob workers, during lay-offs, of what meager savings they have, lower their wages, destroy their faith in their unions and then wipe off the map entirely the labor movement of the United States.

"Drunk with their power and the success they achieved in piling up millions by profiteering, the vested interest gang have planned carefully this effort to destroy organized labor. The result of their mismanagement of industry is that the country is about bankrupt, and while these men revel in more wealth than they can manage, millions of workers are out of work and on the quick road to starvation, with the list growing longer every day."

The meeting, which is called for February 6, 1921, will have some very serious matters to consider, owing to the present distressful condition into which the country has been driven; but it is better late than never.

Those of the workers who have been provident and saved from their meagre earnings have been compelled long since to part with whatever surplus their strict economy accumulated. Instead of the prosperity and comforts particularly provided for, they have been forced by circumstances into lower standards of living, and the degradation of our working people still continues.

DERELICTS

The general attitude of modern society towards the element in disregard as human wreckage will have to undergo a complete change, from indifference to one of concern. In the same manner as the thoughtless and ignorant used to laugh at the insane, so have the comfortable members of society habitually scorned and derided the so-called derelict. They have looked upon the submerged as unworthy of consideration, and in the light of a nuisance.

Modern thought teaches that in a great number of instances responsibility of the individual is but a slight incident to the cause of the failure. Lack of education, bad housing, overwork at tender age, insufficient nourishment, and disease, tend to make the individual incompetent for the struggle in life long before arrival at an age of responsibility. Society as at present constituted is the force which creates the great army of unemployables known as derelicts which we observe shuffling through the thoroughfares, or occupying park benches every day of the year.

They are society's problem, and a solution must be found before civilization can be regarded as secure.

The subtle efforts being made, by the Better American Federation, to poison the impressionable minds of our children through distribution of pamphlets in the schools of California, has met with determined opposition from thoughtful people throughout the State. The attempt at placing this printed propaganda before our youths has been denounced by high school teachers in various sections and organized labor everywhere. The State Board of Education has barred all partisan literature from the schools.

Always demand the Union Label!

EXIT "COAL OIL JOHNNY"

As an argument to wage earners of America for investment in the $1.00 Treasury Savings Stamps, and $25.00 Treasury Savings Certificates, the Government Savings Organization of the Treasury Department have issued the following interesting story describing the finish of "Coal Oil Johnny":

"Coal Oil Johnny" is dead. The most widely advertised spendthrift the country ever knew died in poverty at Ft. Crook, Neb., where he was station agent for the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. In the days of his prosperity he spent as much as $100,000 a day. And the days came around as regularly as the sun. When he died he made about $3 a day and the pay car only came around once a month.

Neither the oil that produced his fortune, nor his money, nor the way he spent it brought him luck or happiness. He spent the last fifty years of his life paying for the follies of his youth, in poverty and toil.

John W. Steele, for that was his real name, was born on a farm near Sheakleyville, Pennsylvania, and, as he was orphaned in his youth, he went to live with his aunt, the Widow McClintock, in Venango County, Pennsylvania. Oil was struck on the McClintock farm and the flow was leased on a royalty basis. The Widow McClintock knew farms but not oil and lived as she always had lived, putting the money which rolled in into a big safe in her dining room. One day when Johnny had failed to provide kindling, she threw a dipper full of the fateful oil on the kitchen fire and her interest in earthly affairs ceased at once.

Johnny was sole heir and when the big safe was opened he had over $500,000 in cash to play with. He ran through his find faster than the oil gushed from the wells. He practised every form of extravagance. He bought hotels for a night. He declined to ride in any vehicle which he did not own and the country was studded with cabs he had bought and given back to their drivers after he was through with them. He owned a minstrel show and spent thousands entertaining members of the company. But he did not have a good time. He admitted it himself. In one instance he spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to have a hotel clerk discharged and after his money was gone, the hotel clerk got his job back. When his oil ran out, his money ran out too and he spent the remainder of his life in hard, grinding toil, paying for the "fun" he had not had. Therefore the moral.

A trade union without the right and power to strike is an anomaly. A trade union, the chief use of which is to make a strike impossible, as under the compulsory arbitration system, is a crime against common sense.

"The first step toward a natural and healthy organization of society is to secure to all men their natural, equal and inalienable rights in the material universe."—Henry George.

No man is born without ambitious worldly desires.—Carlyle.

BETTER AMERICA FEDERATION BARRED FROM SCHOOLS

Under the above caption the State Federation of Teachers' Publicity Bureau recently published a pamphlet containing the following:

"During the past month the Better America Federation of Los Angeles, formerly the Commercial Federation of California, has made unusually persistent efforts to place in the hands of each high school student of the State a pamphlet entitled 'America is Calling California.' Under the guise of an intensely patriotic interpretation of the Preamble of the Constitution of the United States this publication demands that students fight all the 'isms' of the agitators, and virulently condemns State ownership of public utilities.

"The B. A. F. is part of the national machine now at work in the effort to destroy labor unions and all forms of liberalism. 'America is Calling' is designed to train up boys and girls in the way the B. A. F. wishes them to go. So long as men and women have the vote they must be 'safely' educated in youth! A few months ago Babson's Statistical Service boasted that 'employers controlled the pulpit, the press and the school.' That was an alarming statement to make. Yet three weeks ago 'America is Calling' was distributed to the high school students of Stockton. A week ago in spite of the protest of the Central Labor Council the pamphlet was officially placed in the hands of the high school students of Oakland.

"'Sin always finds the sinner.' The Los Angeles teachers protested bitterly the ideals fostered by 'America is Calling.' The Sacramento Board of Education bluntly refused its distribution in the Sacramento schools on the ground that it is partisan propaganda. Supt. H. C. Johnson of San Diego appealed to State Supt. Will C. Wood as to the legality of admitting the pamphlet to the public schools. The State Board set down its foot, and another phase in the sinister career of the Commercial Federation of California ended. On January 17 the following statement was issued from the offices of the State Board in Sacramento:

"'Superintendent H. C. Johnson, of the San Diego city schools, has applied to this board for advice concerning the distribution of a pamphlet entitled "America is Calling," published for distribution to students of high schools and colleges by the Better America Federation of California. The question raised is whether the pamphlet contains legally objectionable propaganda.

"'Section 1672a of the Political Code forbids the distribution of propaganda publications in the public schools, unless such propaganda has been approved by the State, county or local board of education.

"'Section 1672 provides that no publication of sectarian, partisan or denominational character must be used or distributed in any public school and provides that upon satisfactory evidence of the violation of this provision, the superintendent of public instruction and the county superintendent must withhold both the State and county apportionments.

Shipping, including the armistice deliveries, totaling 2,054,729 tons, had been turned over to the reparations commission by Germany at the end of 1920. All but 35,000 tons were steamships. Germany is still to deliver about 500,000 tons. The reparations commission up to the end of December had distributed 1,814,173 tons, as follows:

Great Britain, 1,477,839 tons; France, 166,924; Italy, 124,901; Japan, 28,678, and Belgium, 15,831.

Twenty-nine of thirty-eight steamers in South American ports have arrived in Germany and are being repaired for delivery. The nine others have sailed for Germany, one being wrecked on the way.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

A. F. of L. Calls Conference

Washington, Jan. 31.—To consider the "unusual conditions" with which the labor movement now must deal, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor has called an emergency conference of the executives of the 109 national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L., to meet here on February 23.

Unemployment, the "open shop" drive, anti-strike laws and court decisions tending to re-establish slavery in the United States, are the chief "unusual conditions" that now beset the path of the organized workers. What they want is a program of action. Over the items of that program, as they will be proposed by the conservative and the progressive elements in the conference, will wage a lively battle. Chances of the adoption of a positive program of immediate action on the industrial and the political field are fair; chances of the adoption of the Machinists' new policy of getting financial control in various minor branches of industry are good; chances of the re-affirmation of the Montreal declaration of the A. F. of L. in favor of public ownership and democratic operation of railroads are excellent.

Secretary Frank Morrison, in his official statement of the purpose of the conference, makes it merely defensive.

"The call for a meeting," he says, "is for the purpose of considering attacks now being made on the trade union movement. These attacks include attempts to establish the anti-union shop, wage reductions, anti-strike laws, compulsory arbitration, labor injunctions and a publicity that would mold the public mind to accept these backward steps.

"I believe labor will formulate a plan to expose the pretense of men who are only interested in cheap labor and a continuation of their profiteering policy. The trade union movement is alert to the forces against it, and proposes to act vigorously and courageously. Our opponents are mistaken if they imagine they have made the slightest progress in alarming the workers, or that they will humbly accept a policy of reaction.

"The proposed conference will consider the publicity and other methods of our opponents and it is quite possible that labor will launch an offensive movement against those who imagine they control practically every avenue of publicity."

But the railroad labor organizations and the other progressive elements in the Federation are not satisfied with simply resisting attack. They feel that labor has a long way to go, after the attacks cease, and that the best mode of defense, anyhow, is an attack and a rapid march forward into the enemy's country. Hence they propose that the conference shall consider a positive plan of securing industrial democracy, such as was endorsed for the railroad industry in the resolution adopted by 21,000 majority in the Montreal convention last June.

Timothy Healy, recent fraternal delegate from the A. F. of L. to the British Trade Union Congress, and president of the Stationary Firemen, was in Washington on Monday when this call was published. He said that it offered a great opportunity for the rank and file of the labor movement to "get rid of reactionary ideas," and to get together in a solid alignment, with all the liberal forces of the nation, to make the United States a safer place for human freedom and happiness. He predicted that "no reactionary program will go," when the conference meets.

Palmer's Mistake Exposed

Attorney-General Palmer assured the Senate Judiciary Committee this week that the country owes its security from "radicals" to his own foresight and vigor in arresting thousands of "reds," rather than to the conservatism of the labor leadership. Palmer was pitilessly grilled by Senator Walsh of Montana on his illegal methods of breaking down the small trade union strength in certain industrial centers, such as Pittsburgh, Butte and in New England towns. The lack of law or justification for his raids, and for the brutalities and terrorism practiced by Palmer's army of agents and spies, was made clear, as the Attorney-General admitted point after point. But Palmer insisted on one thing—that he had saved the country from revolutionaries, most of whom were active in the trade unions.

Samuel Untermeyer of New York, counsel for the Lockwood Committee which has uncovered the combinations of building contractors, building material men and the Brindell building trades clique, told a big audience of business men in New York the other night that Palmer was chiefly responsible for the whole graft scandal, as he had failed to try to enforce the law. He reviewed briefly Palmer's career in office and said that no department of the Government had ever needed so much to be investigated. That same day twelve eminent lawyers, including Jackson H. Ralston, counsel for the A. F. of L., filed a report with the Senate Judiciary Committee asking that, in view of Palmer's failure to deny more than half of the facts shown by them in their report on "Illegal Practices of the Department of Justice" in connection with his "red raid" and anti-labor activities, that the Senate order a thorough investigation into all the facts. They asked further that Congress enact legislation which would prevent, for the future, such violations of the rights and liberties of the people by public officials.

Point of View Differs

The Supreme Court, on Wednesday, listened to argument for and against the appeal of the Milwaukee Leader for restoration of its second-class mailing privilege. The question at issue was whether Solicitor Lamar or his chief, Postmaster-General Burleson, could permanently deny to a publisher the right to send a newspaper to subscribers in the usual way, simply because Lamar or Burleson disapproved of the kind of statements made in issues of this paper in the past. Questions from the bench brought out the point that Burleson claims the right to determine that a certain kind of newspaper, two years after the war, is non-mailable because it "obstructs recruiting." Burleson's enmity toward the labor movement might lead him at any moment to decide that the editorials in labor papers, for instance, were obstructing recruiting, and hence these labor journals should be thrown out of the mails.

In this connection the notice of all editors and of Mr. Burleson is called to a document sent to the big dailies by the Russian Division of our State Department, consisting of the proceedings and speeches at the Second Congress of the Communist (Third) International, at Moscow last July and August. It comprises 160 pages of Communist literature, most of it dealing with the breakdown of capitalist society. Just why the State Department should circulate at public expense this mass of material, many times "stronger" than the leaflets for the writing or scattering of which there are men and women now serving long sentences in American prisons, is a puzzle of politics. The document can be purchased from the Government Printing Office here.

Congress Not Affected

How Congress is jogging on, these days, while unemployment nears the 3,500,000 mark, is indicated by resolutions adopted recently by the Women's Trade Union League of the District of Columbia. Protest was made against Congress's failure to act on the Towner-Sheppard maternity nursing bill, the Curtis-Gard child labor bill for the district, the Gronna-Anderson bill for regulation of the meat packing monopoly, and the Nolan-Johnson $3 a day minimum wage bill for Federal employes. Protest was made also at the action of the House in seeking to limit the salaries of the expert staff of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor. In short, the organized working women found that Congress is running in high gear toward reaction.

Secretary-Treasurer William Green of the United Mine Workers of America has been here for two days, waiting to testify against the emergency clause in the Calder coal-control bill, before the Senate Committee on Manufactures. This emergency clause authorizes the President to take over and operate the mines and the coal-carrying railroads and ships, if he so determines, when there appears a threatened cutting off of the sufficient production or distribution of coal. Green, as spokesman for the coal miners and the railroad men in this matter, takes the position that organized labor should not be subjected in this fashion to an unlimited strike-crushing authority.

Senator Kenyon, one of the ardent backers of the bill, and who has, it is said, recently declared for the "open shop," admitted today that the bill might be construed as giving the power to prevent strikes. However, he argued, the workers ought to welcome it as a measure for reducing the price of coal.

The United Mine Workers' International announces that it stands behind the 24 West Virginia mountaineers who go on trial at Williamson, W. Va., on charges of first degree murder in connection with the battle with Baldwin-Feltz detectives at Matewan last May. Secretary Green stated here that "This trial is a direct result of the barbarous warfare waged on members of the United Mine Workers by the coal operators of Mingo county. And, so long as lives of our members are at stake, we intend to put at their disposal every means for establishing their innocence of the charge. . . . The U. M. W. A. are determined to see justice done the locked-out miners of Mingo county. These men and their families were evicted from their homes for the 'crime' of joining the union. . . .

"Aggressive action against the rule of coal operators of Mingo county and of the Birmingham district of Alabama is now contemplated. The time has come for a show-down and we intend to force it. It is a case, in both districts, of workers endeavoring to free themselves from a system of peonage that has no place under our form of government."

INTERNAT'L SEAMEN PROGRESS

leaves behind a widow and minor children or minor children only.

If the enrolled person does not leave behind a widow or minor children, but a father over 65 years of age and absolutely disabled for work and a mother 50 years of age and disabled for work, or if the latter is a widow or separated from her husband by the latter's fault and has no other sons of age, or if it is made evident that the enrolled person was the only and principal and necessary support of both, they shall receive the same compensation which would have been paid if the enrolled person had left behind a widow only.

A common law wife of the enrolled person shall be considered equivalent to a legitimate wife, and illegitimate children borne by her shall be considered equivalent to legitimate children.

ARTICLE 15

Employment Office

The personnel for the crews of tugs in registering at the autonomous employment office for seamen shall be treated according to the regulations of this office.

ARTICLE 16

Enrolment

All the personnel of tugs of all kinds and groups shall for all legal purposes and under the conditions of the present contract of enrolment be as a rule enrolled in the harbor master's office.

ARTICLE 17

Each enrolled person shall declare his readiness to delinquish two per cent. of his pay, inclusive of supplements, to the shipowner, who shall be authorized to retain it.

This deduction shall serve to the shipowner as a guarantee that the enrolled person will comply with the obligations assumed. At the end of each quarter the said two per cent. shall, after deductions for the satisfaction of those debts for which the guarantee was retained have been made, be turned over by the owner to the Federation of Seamen and through the latter to its responsible secretary.

The money paid to the Federation of Seamen shall remain deposited with it for the account of the enrolled person, who may dispose of it as he thinks best, the shipowner being released from all responsibility.

The enrolled person declares that without prejudice to his rights of recession he authorizes the co-operative society Garibaldi to draw from the amount of pay coming to him the quota resulting from the schedule of wage rates in accordance with his rank.

For this purpose he authorizes the shipowner to retain the said quota and to pay it to the Garibaldi according to the rules stated in appendix No. 1.

The quota of two per cent. referred to in the present article shall be computed from the amount of pay and sustenance after deducting 20 per cent.

ARTICLE 18

Rates of Pay

(See Article 2)

The rate of the seamen shall be fixed at 720 lire for service rendered in port and within a radius of 50 miles, as per Article 1 of the contract of enrolment for the crews of tugs. If the tugs assigned to the service cannot return to their home ports in time that their respective crews may sleep at their homes each person of the crew shall be granted an allowance of five lire per night.

Basic pay of seamen belonging to the crews of tugs that are assigned to services behind the zone above indicated shall be 780 lire per month.

In addition the following monthly rates of pay shall be in force:

	Within the Zone.	Outside the Zone.
Ordinary seamen	720 lire	780 lire
Firemen	750 lire	810 lire
Trimmers		700 lire
Boys		550 lire
Apprentices (with 6 months of navigation and 6 months of other service)		500 lire
Cabin boys	320 lire
Machinists	1000 lire	1325 lire
Boatswains and boatswain's mates		975 lire

The above rates of pay include also sustenance, the indemnity in accordance with the award of June 30, 1920, and all extras up until now granted.

ARTICLE 19

Minimum Size of Crews

Within the port and zone:

Up to 100 H. P. Indicated (3)

Deck officer, engineer and boy.

From 101 to 300 H. P. Indicated (5)

Deck officer, engineer, fireman, seaman and boy.

Outside the zone:

From 250 to 400 H. P. Indicated (7)

Deck officer, engineer, two firemen, two seamen and one boy.

From 401 to 550 H. P. Indicated (8)

One deck officer, engineer, two firemen, one trimmer, two seamen and one boy.

From 551 to 750 H. P. Indicated (13)

Deck officer, engineer, boatswain, boatswain's mate, three firemen, three seamen, two trimmers and one boy.

N. B.—The size of crews of those tugs the crews of which are larger than the minimum crews shown in the preceding table shall remain unchanged.

Transitory Conditions

Minutes of the meeting of October 29, 1920:

The representatives of the Seamen's Federation, believing that the contract agreed upon shall be valid for all Italian tug boats, requests an explicit declaration in that sense from the representatives of the shipowners.

Mr. E. V. Parodi, who also believes that the request of the representatives of the Federation is correct and legitimate, declares that the resolutions adopted by the commission charged with the drafting of the uniform contract of enrolment for tug boats, although of a general character, do not bind the shipowners of Venezia Giulia.

The representatives of the Seamen's Federation take notice of this declaration and reserve themselves to obtain ratification also by the shipowners of Venezia Giulia.

In the case of the company "Elba," it has been agreed upon that for all tugs the port of Ferraio shall be considered the home port (see indemnity of five lire per night in Article 7).

Minutes of the meeting of June 25, 1920, held in the rooms of the Federation of Independent Shipowners of Genoa (Salita S. Caterina 4):

Present—Messrs. Ferrari, Puri and Pescetto, representing the shipowners.

Present—Mr. U. Poggi, Capt. Gauthier and Mr. Vassalo, representing the Seamen's Federation.

There were also present at the meeting Engineer Belleni, Engineer Fontini, Capt. Cav. Roncallo and Mr. Tantardini, in their capacity of experts called in by the commission.

After lengthy discussions it was agreed to begin drafting a uniform enrolment contract for tugs, taking thereby into account contracts now in force and those proposed by the Seamen's Federation.

For the performance of this work this commission will probably be convened to Rome simultaneously with that convened by the Ministry for July 13, for the purpose of dealing with the personnel of dredges, transport barges, steam dredges and all other floats for local use. This will be done in case it is impossible to make arrangements that the Government commission should sit in Genoa.

The Seamen's Federation is requested to interest itself that this be done.

Genoa, June 25, 1920.

Minutes of the meeting of October 26, 1920, held in the rooms of the Federation of Independent Shipowners of Genoa (Salita S. Caterina 4):

Present—Mr. A. Puri, Capt. Dian and Mr. Pesetto, for the shipowners; Engineers Bitto and Badino, as experts; Messrs. U. Poggi, Lercari and Vassallo, for the Seamen's Federation, and Messrs. O. Ridi and D. Ciechi, as experts.

In order to regulate retroactivity it has been resolved:

1. That for the period between January 1 and June 30, 1920, each individual who has shipped within that period shall be granted the difference between the pay actually received and that allowed by the new enrolment contract, after deduction of the award Massone.

2. That for the period between January 1 and June 30, 1920, with respect to overtime work performed, they shall be paid also for that performed nights and on holidays, the difference between the compensation fixed in the old contract and that fixed in the new contract for overtime work performed during daytime.

3. That for the period subsequent to July 1, 1920, they shall be paid the integral difference between pay and overtime work compensation on the basis of the rates actually in force, with consideration, however, of the difference between the rates for work in daytime and of those for holiday and night work.

4. The new contract shall become applicable in all its parts with November 16, 1920. It is, therefore, resolved that during the period preceding that date all retroactive difference shall be regulated and settled in conformity with the above resolutions.

Genoa, Oct. 29, 1920.

To the gentlemen representing the shipowners and the commission for the drafting of contracts of enrolment, for the personnel of tugs, dredges, steam dredges, pontoons, etc.

We beg to inform you that it seems indispensible that the commission appointed by the shipowners which now has finished drafting the contract relating to the personnel of tugs shall immediately discuss and deliberate improvements to be granted to the personnel of dredges, pontoons, steam dredges, etc.

The personnel of these floats has hitherto abstained from any agitation, the Seamen's Federation having promised to investigate their condition for the purpose of improvement immediately after the contract for tugs has been drafted.

If the Seamen's Federation should be placed by the shipowners in the position of not being able to keep the promise made by it to the interested personnel it declares that it will not be able to predict what illegal movements this same personnel will shortly initiate owing to the desolate economic and moral conditions under which it has been employed for too long a time.

Respectfully,

U. POGGI,
G. LECARI,
D. CIECHI,
F. VASSALO,
O. RIDI.

The communication and agreement were referred to the Committee on International Relations.

BEATING US TO IT

Great Britain lost little time in taking over the large fleet of German sailing craft allocated to her under the terms of the armistice, which ships have been sheltered in various South American harbors on the Pacific since they interned in 1914. Details of this British activity reached local shipping circles and caused profound surprise because of the secrecy of the maneuver.

Over twenty-five big German sailing vessels have been taken from Valparaiso, Iquique and Callao, in Peru, and towed back to England during the past few months.

Like those German ships now at Santa Rosalia, Mexico, this fleet awarded Great Britain were considered the "cream" of the German sailing merchant marine.

Last October the British tugs began their towing of the vessels around Cape Horn and up the Atlantic. Firteen large deep sea towing tugs and over ten British naval destroyers participated in this vast movement of vessels. All the vessels were badly in need of reconditioning and are now being turned out of the British drydocks in first-class shape, ready to enter the various trades under British flags for world competition.

The idea that compulsory arbitration laws encourage the organization of the workers amounts in fact to the paradox of organizing the workers for the primary object of destroying the very power that makes organization itself worth while.

pay three men $5,000 a piece to handle about two disputes a month.

There has been so much politics connected with the board, and such friendship to corporations when they asked for increased rates, that the hard-headed legislators, above referred to, declare that the whole outfit should be probed.

There has been a complete change of sentiment in this State toward the governor's legislation. Less than a year ago he was hailed as the savior of the country, and was given much publicity in his nation-wide campaign for this handcuff legislation, while he hoped that the Vice-Presidential nomination, or possibly President, would be handed him.

Kansas was surely on the map those days, but now many persons who would not listen to trade unionists agree that the toy balloon has bursted. Business men are disgruntled because telephone rates have been raised and they and other citizens are growling because gas rates are higher, while nothing is being done to curb the profiteers.

Cheat Helpless Girls

City officials of Dayton, Ohio, recently uncovered a contemptuous piece of grafting on unorganized girls who strip tobacco in a non-union concern. The girls became suspicious that they were short-weighted, but were afraid to protest. A hint was dropped to the city sealer who made an unexpected visit to the factory and tested the weighing machine. He found that the girls were robbed of four pounds every time they stripped an alleged 20-pound bundle. If each girl stripped four bundles a day the company stole 1,120 pounds.

The company is a strong advocate for "free and independent" workers and insists on "the right to run its own business."

Next War in Air

Great Britain is ready to forego the further construction of battleships and enter an agreement for disarmament because she recognizes that further supremacy in warfare lies in control of the air, is the view of Brigadier-General Mitchell, according to a Washington newspaper. This officer is assistant chief of the United States air service.

The officer pointed out that in none of the pleas from England about disarmament is reference made to restrict the development of air warfare.

"England is basing her policy today on the realization that aircraft can carry bombs sufficiently powerful to destroy the largest warships afloat," he said. "Proceeding from this premise she is working on the point where airplanes, or lighter-than-air machines, can be operated efficiently from the sea."

It makes no difference from the standpoint of war plans, according to General Mitchell, whether battleship construction is increased or decreased, "because the day is coming when surface fleets will be at the mercy of fleets in the air."

Similar views are expressed by Captain Thomas T. Craven, head of naval air service, who declares that it is the belief in England that the airplane will be the dominating factor in another war.

Strikes in Australia

Anti-strike legislation in Australia and its various States has not stopped strikes, according to figures made public by G. H. Knibbs, commonwealth statistician.

In 1913 the number of strikes in the entire commonwealth totaled 208, involving 921 establishments; in 1914, 337 strikes in 1,203 establishments; in 1915, 358 strikes in 942 establishemnts; in 1916, 508 strikes in 1,536 establishments; in 1917, 444 strikes in 1,941 establishments; in 1918, 298 strikes in 1,154 establishments, and in 1919, 460 strikes in 1,713 establishments.

The record for the first quarter of 1920 is 119 strikes in 623 establishments. If this proportion prevails throughout the year it will be found that all records are broken, with 476 strikes in 2,492 establishments.

Many Unemployed

The cry for "greater production" has been forgotten in the face of the most extensive unemployment in Massachusetts since the State Department of Labor and Industries began compiling this data in 1908. The department announces that returns from 1,027 unions, representing 199,022 members, show that 57,425, or 28.9 per cent., were idle the last of December. This is the highest percentage of unemployed ever recorded by the department and shows constant gains during the last few months. In June, 1920, the unemployed constituted 18.8 per cent. of the workers enrolled in labor unions, and in September the percentage had jumped to 19.3.

It's Propaganda, Says Board

"'Unquestionably the pamphlet is designed to spread a particular doctrine or system of principles, and therefore comes under the head of propaganda. This is admitted in the pamphlet. If the pamphlet is partisan propaganda, its distribution is absolutely prohibited by law. Any publication is partisan whose purpose is to secure adherence to a party or faction, or to repel adherence to a party or faction. An examination of the pamphlet shows clearly that one of its purposes, among others, is to secure adherence to a particular faction opposed to government ownership of public utilities. It is not, as its distributors maintain, merely an impartial discussion of the preamble of the Constitution of the United States.

"'The following quotations may be cited:

"'(1) Your students can help in the great fight that must be made against communism, State socialism, and all the other "isms" of the agitators.

Discuss Public Ownership

"'(2) There are other groups who want our government to go into private business just to a limited extent, but we will find that if we let down the bars of our Constitution and permit our government to enter into private business in this line and that line, the agitators will accentuate their activities and we will constantly be compromising by turning over more and more of the private business to the government.

"'The question of State ownership of public utilities is clearly a partisan question, as is also the question of socialism. This board is therefore of the opinion that the pamphlet in question contains partisan propaganda and must be excluded from the public schools of the State.

"'In taking this action, the board is guided by a precedent established over a year ago.

"'At that time charges were made that radical propaganda was being circulated in the public schools. Immediately the board ordered an investigation, which failed to substantiate the charges, except in one or two instances. In such instances the credentials of teachers spreading such propaganda were revoked. The board has always stood firmly and will continue to stand firmly, upon the principle that the public schools shall not be made a battle ground for the settlement of partisan questions.'

"Liberal-minded people are now on the lookout for the new type of sheep's clothing our old acquaintance, 'The Commercial Federation of California,' will next don!"

The attitude of the State Federation of Teachers towards these attempts at deliberate mischief is striking evidence of their intelligence and patriotism. It is perhaps the best expression of their excellent worth that could be given. The proprieties of the action taken by the State Board of Education is highly commendable, due to the fact that it assures protection of our youth from deceptive influences.

Every possible safeguard should be placed around the development of the "young idea" in our schools, in order that our future generation will be endowed with the highest ideals of citizenship. Freedom of the receptive young minds from corrupting suggestions is one of the essentials to the welfare and glory of our nation. We appreciate to the fullest extent the value of services rendered at this time by the State Federation of Teachers in California.

WANT BOOKS OPENED

Paper Handlers' Union No. 1 of New York, suggested to the arbitration board that is considering its wage demands that the books of commercial shop employers be opened.

The employers' representatives on the board did not object to the plan if it included all employers rather than be confined, as the workers proposed, to employers doing a business of $100,000 a year.

The employers stated that their national organization recently completed a survey of nearly 800 printing plants in this city at a cost of $20,000. The work required three months with a staff of 20 accountants. The report showed that the printing industry is highly competitive and is 40 per cent. overequipped. The overequipment is necessary, it was explained, because of the requirements of the patrons for work on short notice. The employers informed the arbitration board that it could have access to the original data obtained by the accountants in that survey, which, they said, while not complete, was better than the partial survey proposed by the union.

MINERS DEFEND MOUNTAINEERS

The twenty-four mountaineers charged with first degree murder at Williamson, W. Va., will have the complete support, moral and material, of the United Mine Workers of America, according to a recent announcement by William Green, national secretary and treasurer of the organization.

The trial is the result of a sensational gun battle in the main street of Matewan on May 19th last, which resulted in ten deaths, including the mayor of the city and seven Baldwin-Feltz guards. The fight is said to have had its origin in the attempts of the guards to arrest Sid Hatfield, chief of police of Matewan. Hatfield, a descendant of the feudists of Hatfield-McCoy fame, is the most prominent in the group of defendants, which includes special police deputies of Matewan and members of the Miners' Union.

In his statement Mr. Green declared:

"The United Mine Workers of America are prepared to afford full support, both moral and material, to the twenty-four defendants in the murder trial at Williamson, W. Va. This trial is a direct result of the barbarous warfare waged on members of the United Mine Workers by the coal operators of Mingo county. And, so long as lives of members of our organization are at stake, we intend to put at their disposal every means for establishing their innocence of the charge. The court, of course, will determine their fate, but we will offer the defense every facility in our power.

"The United Mine Workers are determined to see justice done the locked-out miners of Mingo County. These men and their families were evicted from their homes for the 'crime' of joining the union. The operators employed professional gun men to hasten the eviction. We are insistent that the use of gun men in West Virginia mining areas shall cease. It is time that a republican form of government, as ordained by the Constitution, should be restored in Mingo County and the arbitrary rule of the coal barons brought to an end.

"Today there are many of these evicted miners and their families living in tents on the bare ridges of Mingo. They are enduring hardships unparalleled in the history of American industrial warfare. But they will not return until the operators recognize the government-proclaimed principle of collective bargaining. The organization is supplying them with food and clothing, but is helpless to abate in any great degree the rigors of winter in the tent colonies.

"Aggressive action against the rule of coal operators of Mingo County, W. Va., and the Birmingham district of Alabama, is now contemplated. The time has come for a show-down and we intend to force it. The situation in both areas has nothing in common with the average industrial dispute elsewhere in this country. In both districts it is a case of workers endeavoring to free themselves from a system of peonage that has no place under our form of government."

GERMAN SWEDISH TRADE

Consul Walter H. Sholes, writing from Goteborg, Sweden, states:

Advertising columns of newspapers in western Sweden show unmistakable signs of a reviviscent Germany. The leading newspaper of Goteborg recently appeared with a half-page advertisement of various German manufacturers desirous of a resumption of Swedish-German trade relations. In less than a month these advertisements were augmented and now occupy nearly two pages of this newspaper, which has a national circulation in Sweden.

An examination of these advertisements discloses that Germany appears to be in a position to export the following articles:

Steel-thread mattresses; water-pipe armatures and electrotechnical mountings; plated silverware; machinery for the manufacture of tin cans and covering devices for glass jars; household utensils; wagons, carriages and automobiles; boring machines; marble cutting and sharpening machinery; automobile supplies; furniture; beveled-glass mirrors; metal and lacquered goods of all kinds; artificial silk scarfs and shawls; brush and coal clamps; plumbing supplies; dynamos; brass bands, steel plates, and zinc plates; shoe laces and findings; iron strips, steel wagons, switches, and rails; corset and linen trimmings; graphite; typewriters; clothing and laces (cotton and silk); hats; lead pipes and sheets; pottery; general electrical fixtures; valves and water cocks; hoop iron and steel strips 200 mm. in width, cold rolled, polished and unpolished, annealed, also lead-covered and galvanized; wickerwork furniture; paper boxes and containers; curtains; screw-nut boring devices; porcelain; steel springs of all kinds; kid and goatskin gloves; shoemaker findings; compound steam engines.

Conditions of the German railroads appear especially favorable, as it requires only 10 or 12 days for delivery of freight in all parts of Sweden from Germany by way of the Sassnitz-Trelleborg ferry. It is of interest also to know that American cotton is being shipped to Germany and Austria and is being delivered at the mills within 14 days after its departure from Goteborg. Finished products are received from Austrian mills quite as expeditiously. This condition, together with Germany's gradual resumption of trade with Sweden, has caused no little uneasiness in Swedish manufacturing circles, and demands for higher tariffs are heard on all sides. That this agitation for protective tariff duties will result in a higher tariff in Sweden seems certain.

The prospective competition with German houses will doubtless be felt by American and British exporters who have dominated this market for the past few years.

Swift & Company, meat packers, announce that dividends amounting to $12,000,000 have been paid stockholders the last fiscal year. The company also set aside as surplus a comfortable sized nest egg that totaled $5,170,382.45.

The various plans suggested to remedy the housing shortage have but one drawback—you can't move people into castles in the air.

Labor News

At Youngstown, Ohio, carpenter contractors and Carpenters' Union No. 171 have renewed last year's wage agreement.

Reports from San Diego, Cal., reveal serious conditions of unemployment. There are over 4000 unionists out of work in the city.

The building trades strike that has been waged at Lamar, Col., for several months past has been settled with restoration of full union conditions.

Another handcuff law, patterned after the Kansas anti-strike law, was introduced in the State Legislature of Oklahoma by Senator Leedy, in spite of the fact that such legislation has been denounced by Governor Robertson

The Ladies' Garment Workers' Union of Toledo, Ohio, has signed a contract with the Conde Manufacturing Company and the Alexander Black Cloak Company. The 44-hour week is agreed to and the minimum rate will be $44 a week.

More than 100 members of organized labor were elected to National and State lawmaking bodies and to State offices, so far reported to the A. F. of L. non-partisan political campaign committee. Of these, 15 are Congressmen and 63 are members of State Legislatures.

Seven locals of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union of New York, have voted to strike against dress and waist manufacturers there who refused to sign a new agreement with employes. Officials of the union declared the strike would affect 25,000 workers.

Attempts to stop the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union from holding mass meetings at Garfield, N. J., have been defeated. There are about 1000 workers employed in this industry who suffer under lower conditions than in other parts of New Jersey.

At Ann Arbor, Mich., building trades unions stopped a 10 per cent. wage reduction by the University of Michigan. The unionists notified the superintendent of buildings and grounds that no member of organized labor would be permitted to work there under the new order. The superintendent modified the order as far as unionists are concerned, and said it would only apply to the unorganized.

A strike of workers in the building trades at Boston, Mass., January 20, halted operations on all construction work in which members of the Building Trades Employers' Association were interested. The United Building Trades Council said that 7000 of its members quit; that 4000 others were idle for lack of work, and that 17,000 were at work under wage agreements with contractors calling for continuation of the old basic wage scale of $1 an hour for journeymen.

By arrangements between officials of the building trades unions and representatives of the contractors and builders of the Bay cities, all future disputes arising in the industry will be referred to a board of arbitration. The board consists of Archbishop E. J. Hanna, Ex-Justice of the State Supreme Court Max C. Sloss, and George L. Bell, industrial consultant. The first action of the board will be an investigation of existing wage demands in San Francisco and Oakland. Each side will bear equal expense of arbitration proceedings.

529½ BEACON STREET, SAN PEDRO, CAL.
Seafaring people who desire to take up navigation, San Pedro, situated in the sunny south, is the ideal place. Captain Frerichs has established a Navigation School here and under his undivided personal supervision students will be thoroughly prepared to pass successfully before the United States Steamboat Inspectors.
TERMS ARE REASONABLE

Seattle, Wash., Letter List.

Under a rule adopted by the Seattle Postoffice, letters addressed in care of the Sailors' Union Agency at Seattle can not be held longer than 30 days from date of delivery. If members are unable to call or have their mail forwarded during that period, they should notify the Agent to hold mail until arrived.

"SALVAGE"

SEAMEN, do you know what you are entitled to receive for services that you perform as volunteers in saving life and property at sea? If you don't, get a copy of Axtell's Book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen." It covers this subject completely. Why should you sign papers for a runner from a lawyer's office, to collect what you have earned, if, by knowing the law, you can get it without doing so. Do you know that it is contrary to law and ethics of the profession for a lawyer to employ a runner or pay a runner or any other person any portion of his fee for getting business for him; that such an attorney is not regarded as fit to practice in the majority of States in the United States? In cases where a lawyer represents the whole crew, including officers and men, 15% is a fair charge, for collecting the money where it does not involve litigation. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and the Statutes of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other.

Overtime, personal injuries, wrongful discharge, waiting time, penalties are fully discussed in this little volume.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

"Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

"Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.

"As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am

"Respectfully yours,

FRANK MANNING,
Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

Home News

During the year the output of American shipyards comprised 1,783 vessels of 2,860,725 gross tons, officially numbered by the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce.

The number of persons employed in industry the first of this month numbered 3,473,466 less than a year ago, the Department of Labor's employment service announced on the basis of a first nation-wide survey.

Resolutions have been passed by the U. S. Shipping Board recommending for adjustment or disposition, claims arising out of wooden ship contracts; also dealing with prompt settlement of contracts cancelled.

In order to supply China with needed kerosene the Standard Oil Company has found it necessary to operate a fleet of tankers to that country on regular schedule. The latest steamer added to this fleet is the "Algonquin," which left San Francisco for San Pedro to load 3,500,000 gallons of coal oil for the Orient.

A Consulate of the Czecho-Slovak Republic has been established in San Francisco at 244 Kearny street. The Consular district covers the Pacific Coast States, Hawaiian Islands, Alaska and the Philippines. The following officials compose the Consular staff: Engineer, Wenceslaus Masek; agricultural attache, John Kottland; technical attache, Miss Adeline Strecha.

At Toledo, Ohio, soup kitchens have been established to relieve the distress of the city's vast army of unemployed. A day's report of the Social Service Federation showed 2000 men without breakfast, pleading for work. Some of the applicants had as many as eleven children at home unable to contribute to their own support. Many of the men came with worn-out shoes, and clothes so ragged as to expose them to the cold.

The low-wage policy of the government is driving a great number of its most efficient employees out of the Federal service. A list has been compiled by the Bureau of Labor statistics of those who have been forced to seek other means of obtaining a living owing to the high cost of living. The Bureau of Labor statistics points out that the Government can not afford to assume that because 30 years ago a given salary would attract an abundance of workers of at least average ability it will continue to attract and hold them when both the cost of living and the salary level outside have risen conspicuously.

With the arrival at San Francisco of the 12,000-ton tanker "Swiftsure," of the Swiftsure Oil and Transportation Company, it is announced that six sister tank steamers of this company are to follow as rapidly as they are completed. They are the "Swiftarrow," "Swiftstar," "Swiftwind,' "Swifteagle," "Swiftlight" and "Swiftking." Designed by Cocks & Stevens and built at the plant of the Northwestern Bridge and Iron Company in Portland, they represent the very latest in tank steamers. Each will load fuel and supplies before proceeding to Tampico, whence they will be operated in the Atlantic oil trade. Capt. George Bridgett, port captain for the company, is to put the new ships in commission.

Domestic and Naval

The much-heralded steamship "Creole State" has arrived in San Francisco after a nineteen-day trip from Baltimore. The passenger list was extremely small and almost entirely composed of tourists coming west for the winter season.

Shipping and business interests at San Francisco are behind the fight of Fire Chief Thomas R. Murphy to secure from the present Legislature restoration to service of the two fire tugs now tied up because of lack of funds. "If the port is to develop into a great world port every protection from fire hazard must be given to overseas trade."

Admiral W. H. Bullard, Director of the Naval Communication Service, in a paper read before the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, recently, said wireless telegraphy was making navigation simple and safe. "There will be a time when ships will be without chronometers and will be in constant wireless touch with New York until they reach the British Channel," said Admiral Bullard. "This is not a dream: it is near at hand. The depth of water under the ship can now be accurately determined by the hydrophone, which works on the reflection from the ocean bottom of the sound of the ship's propeller. By this device shallow water can be avoided."

The Transportes Maritimos do Estado of Portugal will shortly inaugurate two navigation lines to South America. One of the lines will offer passenger service as well as freight service to the ports of Amazonas, and its itinerary will be as follows: Hamburg, Antwerp, Havre, Vigo, Lisbon, Funchal, Para, and Manaos, returning to Hamburg by the same route. Other ships, carrying cargo alone, will go from Para to Maranhao, Parahyba and Ceara. The second line will begin also at Hamburg and will end at Buenos Aires, with the following stops: Antwerp, Havre, Vigo, Lisbon, Funchal, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro and Santos. The steamers destined for this service have luxurious accommodations.

According to advices from Panama under date of January 20, the Atlantic fleet has passed through the Panama Canal and joined with the ships of the Pacific. The combined fleets will leave Panama Saturday for Callao and Valparaiso. Both the United States Atlantic fleet and the seaplane division attached to it, arrived at Colon, the seaplanes completing a 700-mile flight from Quantanamo, with two intermediate landings, which was marred by only one forced descent. The flyers preceded the warships by several hours. During the flight from Kingston to Old Providence Island, about 200 miles off the Nicaraguan coast, one of the seaplanes came down in Serano Kay, and was escorted on to the canal by the tender "Sandpiper." Plans provide for departure of the warships from Panama southward, the fleets to meet as a combined fleet until January 29, when the Atlantic fleet will head for Callao, and the Pacific fleet for Valparaiso, the date set for the arrival of each at its port being January 31. Each fleet will sail again February 5, the two joining forces on February 7 for battle maaneuvers and arriving at Panama February 16. The separation of the two fleets will occur February 23.

News from Abroad

The President of Brazil has signed a decree reorganizing the Lloyd Brazileiro. The government will retain about 80 per cent. of the stock and offer the balance to public subscription.

The Syndicalist and Communist efforts to bring about a general strike in the Rhineland and in Westphalia have been voted down by the workmen's representatives. The partial operation of some idle plants was begun immediately.

According to a cablegram from Consul General D. I. Murphy, Stockholm, the Swedish Government has imposed a prohibition against the importation of coffee for an indefinite time. The decree became effective from January 12, 1921.

Local offices of the East Asiatic Company announce that the motorship Asia of that line had been selected to make the next sailing from Scandinavian ports for the Pacific Coast. The vessel, it is said, will leave Copenhagen about February 10.

Twenty-two Japanese sailors who arrived at Aparri, a port in North Luzon January 19, report the sinking of the "Sakura Maru" twenty miles off the coast. The coast guard cutter "Midget" was ordered to the scene to pick up any of the remaining passengers and crew surviving.

Trains are arriving daily in Danzig loaded with artillery supplies, bomb-throwers and ammunition for the Polish army, according to wireless reports from Moscow. The Polish army, the dispatch adds, is hurriedly being organized under the direction of French officers.

According to word from Shanghai, received at the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce, Japan is considering the abrogation of import duty on timber and metal used in shipbuilding in order to put the Japanese shipbuilder on the same footing with those of the rest of the world.

The American and German Ministers dined at the same table recently at the Hague, when the Queen gave a state dinner to the heads of the diplomatic missions. It is noteworthy that this is the first time since the war that the representatives of these two countries have appeared under such circumstances.

Famine is officially declared to exist in one of the districts of India, while there is a food scarcity in many other districts as the result of lack of winter rains for the crops, it has been announced by the India Office at London, England. More than 77,000 persons are already receiving relief.

The citizens of Vienna, Austria, have demanded death penalties or whipping-posts for profiteers. The chief of the technical trades unions declared: "We have guns at hand. We warn you that from January 20 we will be beyond the law and will act without pity for profiteers. If you must make an example, you must choose millionaires and not the little felows." He also demanded a plebiscite on the question of fusion with Germany as of March 1. Professor Wolkan, representing the salaried classes, cried: "Austria is dead; long live Germany." A demonstration, considered by the police as an ugly augury, was held in the hotel district. Crowds paraded back and forth shouting threats against profiteers. A strike of postal employes now affects three-quarters of the employes.

Taylor's Nautical Academy
Established 1888
Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

INTERNATIONAL AIDS SEAMEN ABROAD

Secretary Reports Assistance to Seamen of Holland, Denmark and Canada

To the Officers and Delegates of the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the International, Seamen's Union of America, Greetings:

In compliance with established rules, a report is hereby submitted for your consideration on matters which are deemed of sufficient importance to engage your attention, and as the President in his annual report is covering the most important questions concerning our movement, it becomes unnecessary to repeat in that respect and, therefore, the Secretary-Treasurer's report will be limited to financial matters relating to work in the office as well as such questions that necessitated actions between conventions.

The nation in general and the Seamen's movement especially has, during the past year passed through a period of stress and uncertainties—been confronted with problems of peace and reconstruction. We mark the close of a year which technically left us in a state of war—laboring in thoughts of peace while under laws of war—struggling to preserve liberties and freedom while the tide of reaction ran high—meeting oppositions of men and institutions allied politically and economically, against our movement in behalf of the rights of Seamen. It is under these conditions that we meet to deliberate at this Convention.

A. F. of L. Non-partisan Political Campaign

During the month of March, 1920, the International Office was informed that the Atlantic City Convention of the American Federation of Labor had levied a one cent ($.01) assessment on the membership of all International Unions to defray the expenses of a non-partisan political campaign inaugurated by the Federation, and acting in accordance with the previous usage, the Secretary-Treasurer submitted the information to the Executive Board who favored the payment of said assessment which amounted to $800 as our share on a membership of 80,000.

In August last year said committee submitted a financial appeal to carry on this work to all affiliated organizations, and after due consideration the Executive Board authorized that $500 be donated from the International Treasury as our part in this work of the Federation.

Agreements Between Unions and Shipowners

With the exception of the Lake Carriers' Association, which is the largest organization of shipowners on the Great Lakes, and who continue its anti-union policy in the operation of its vessels, it can be reported that during the year 1920 nearly all of the District Unions have been successful in negotiating better working agreements, wage scales and overtime rates between the employers and the Unions than has ever before been possible to obtain.

As the Unions have always advocated wage agreements as one of the best means to overcome labor disputes, the shipowners of the different districts who have subscribed to this policy are to be congratulated for their friendly co-operation in this respect which serves the best interest of their own affairs as well as a telling factor in maintaining tranquillity in the nation's seafaring industries.

It is to be hoped that the Government, the Shipowners and the Union will continue and improve upon this policy, thereby making it possible for our nation to develop its proper place among other maritime nations of the world.

Such copies of agreements as have been received by the International Office are herewith included for future reference and will be attached to the proceedings in appendix form, viz.: A, B, C, D, E.

Appeal from Decision in the Poughkeepsie Case

In July, Agent Ingraham at Norfolk, Va., advised that the Circuit Court of Appeals had sustained the decision of the lower court in the Poughkeepsie Case. This information was at once transmitted to the Executive Board who instructed Attorney Bowden to enter a motion for a stay of issuance of the mandate of the Court of Appeals in order to apply to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of Certiorari. This the attorney complied with, since then information has been received which shows that the writ was denied by the Supreme Court and the cost in this part of the Poughkeepsie Case, amounting to nearly $4,000, has been paid from the International Treasury.

Assistance Extended Vice-President Flynn

Since June, 1920, it has been evident that Vice-President Flynn has experienced a gradual decline in health to such an extent that his physician advised certain treatments at a special sanitarium in hopes of obtaining complete recovery.

Our representatives at San Francisco, having given consideration to this matter, recommended to the Board that the regular allowance for International Officers be extended to him during his illness with the proviso that this Convention give said action its attention.

In view of these circumstances which deserves sympathy, and considering Flynn's service in our previous work, it would add to our strength to be able to bring him back to perfect health, and in this attempt the International has assisted since October first.

Canadian Seamen

The membership of the Sailors, Firemen and Cooks' Union of Canada made preparation during the season of 1920 for presentation of their demands for an increase in wages on September the first, and as expected the Canadian shipowners underestimated the strength of the Union and the temper of the men by refusing to consider the demands. As a result a strike was called September 15 to which the men responded in such a manner that the ships found themselves without crews as soon as they arrived in port, and that action made it urgent for the owners to try and protect their own interests by dealing with the Union's representatives.

The strike lasted less than two weeks, and by October first the men were back on their ships, having gained recognition of the Union and an advance in wages of $10 per month in all departments as well as establishing a uniform scale both for the upper and lower lake ports on all of the larger Canadian vessels on the Great Lakes.

Prior to the strike the several Canadian Steamship Companies paid the following varied scale to the seamen:

	Per month
Ordinary seamen	$ 55-$ 75
Coal passers	55- 75
Second cooks and porters	65- 75
Watchmen and lookouts	65- 95
Wheelsmen	90- 100
Firemen and oilers	90- 100
Stewards, 2nd class ships	110- 125
Stewards, 1st class ships	120- 135

The companies who paid the smallest wages granted a $10 per month bonus to men who stayed all season.

After the settlement of the strike the following scale of wages was agreed to between both parties and the bonus system was abolished entirely:

	Per month
Wheelsmen, firemen and oilers	$110
Lookoutmen	95
Watchmen	95
Deckhands	70
Coalpassers	70
Porters	70
Second cooks	80
Stewards, 2nd class ships	130
Stewards, 1st class ships	145

The difference in wages paid to seamen on Canadian ships and that paid to seamen on American ships on the Great Lakes is now reduced to $20 per month to the lowest or inexperienced and $15 per month to the highest or experienced seamen and considering the maritime laws of Canada, which are of no value to the Canadian seamen, it must be conceded that good progress and results have been obtained for these men through their organization and from the assistance rendered them by the International Seamen's Union.

The International office has since July, 1919, taken care of the financial end as well as all of the office work necessary to operate an organization of this kind without any cost to the Sailors, Firemen and Cooks' Union of Canada, and during November, 1920, the records, books and paraphernalia were turned over to them in up-to-date condition.

With reference to this organization it can be reported that during a period of fifteen months, in which the International contributed the service of some of its best men as well as funds, over 2,000 members were enrolled in said Union, and a cash balance of over $1,500 was left them to maintain the conditions and increases in wages which in some instances amounted to more than $45 per month to the individual seaman.

Charters

After considerable exchange of communications between the Alaska Fishermen's Union, the Deep-Sea Fishermen's Union and the International office, it was agreed that The Fish-trap, Pile-drivers and Web-workers' Union of Bel-

THE THREE-SHIFT SYSTEM

There is no real obstacle to the steel industry as a whole changing from the two- to the three-shift day. Both economic and humanitarian considerations indicate that this change is inevitable and, on account of present conditions, may even now be at hand. It would directly relieve about 150,000 workers now on the twelve-hour day, and afford work for at least 50,000 more who are now unemployed.

These statements epitomize the conclusions reached at one of the largest gatherings of engineers ever arranged in this country—a joint meeting of the Taylor Society, the metropolitan and management sections of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. The occasion was the presentation and discussion of a report on "The Three-Shift System in the Steel Industry," prepared by Horace B. Drury, formerly of the department of economics, Ohio State University, and recently with the Industrial Relations Division of the United States Shipping Board. Mr. Drury, during three months of study and field investigation, visited about twenty independent steel plants already running on a three-shift basis, representing about 40 per cent. of the industry. His general conclusions may be summarized as follows:

1. The managers of those steel plants which have made the change are all glad it has been done. They are convinced that it was "good business." Increased alertness of the men, with improved quality of product, less waste, and less wear and tear of equipment have been reported; also less absenteeism and less carelessness; and a better spirit has prevailed among the men. In some cases the output has been increased and the costs lowered.

2. The workers have been so glad to get the shorter hours that they have been willing to make substantial concessions in daily wages.

3. While in many cases the adoption of the three-shift day may result in slightly higher labor costs, this need not be the case. Whether labor costs are increased or not depends primarily on the preparation and skill of the management in bringing the change about. The extreme cost under the worst conditions of change might amount to 21 cents per ton of pig iron selling for $40. The increase for open-hearth work might amount to 25 cents per ton. Thus the total increase in labor cost for a steel ingot would be not more than 46 cents. If the entire steel industry—blast furnaces, steel works, and rolling mills—went on three shifts with no increase in efficiency, careful analysis shows that it could not add more than 3 per cent. to the total cost of making the finished steel rail, bar, or sheet. As the change would bring into play many factors making for increased efficiency, it is probable that costs in the long run would actually be lowered.

4. The experience of those plants which have made the change, together with the present fact of considerable and increasing unemployment in the steel industry, makes the immediate change largely a matter of the will to undertake it by those directly concerned.

In the typical American steel plant more than half of the men are still employed twelve hours a day. In those continuous-operation processes which make up the heart of the steel industry, such as the blast furnace, the open-hearth furnace, and most types of rolling mill, together with the various auxiliary departments necessary to support these processes and make a complete plant, the proportion of twelve-hour workers is considerably more than half. There are probably 150,000 such twelve-hour workers in the country. In blast-furnace plants and often in open-hearth departments these men work seven days a week. Once in two weeks they have eighteen-hour or twenty-four-hour turns. For a long time it was supposed in the steel industry that no other system of operation would work. Leading steel manufacturers told the Senate Committee which investigated the steel strike that the men wanted to work twelve hours a day in order to get twelve hours' pay. It was also said that modern machinery had so lightened labor in the steel industry and work was so intermittent that a twelve-hours' duty involved no physical hardship.

Prior to the war there were undoubtedly many men in the steel industry who desired the twelve-hour day. The typical steel worker has been the newly-arrived foreigner, often unmarried, whose greatest desire was to earn a lot of money to send or take back to Europe. Other reasons for the continuance of the twelve-hour day in this industry long after other industries as a whole have made the change are the shortage of labor during recent years, the shortage of houses, the large size of most of the plants (making them unwieldy and slow to adopt any radical change), and the general freedom of the industry from labor unions and the pressure which they are able to exert.

Some of these conditions are rapidly changing. The growth of the eight-hour day idea in Europe means that the immigrant to this country will be less passive than heretofore. As men are being laid off in the steel industry the shortage-of-labor argument no longer holds except in isolated cases. In addition the steel strike played a considerable part in awakening the desires of the employes and strengthening the movement toward a better organization of the workers. According to Mr. Drury all the evidence indicates that most of the men now feel that twelve hours' work—which, with going and coming, means thirteen hours—cannot give them enough time for home life, let alone education in English or activity in community affairs. It is hardly open to question that a regular twelve-hour day, not to mention the seven-day week, is a strain on the health of the worker. He would be better off physically and in all that depends upon physical welfare with the shorter day of eight hours.

Nor can the larger though less tangible question of humanitarianism be ignored. The higher development of the individual cannot come except by leisure waking hours for education and cultural development. When he has but a scant two hours in the day for this purpose, we can hardly expect much growth in the ideals of American citizenship. So from the point of view of both individual and national welfare, the logic of the situation points to the adoption of the shorter day.

The general drift in other continuous-process industries in the United States is also having its effect on the mind of the steel worker. The chemical, glass, coal-mining, and paper industries are examples of those in which the shift has already been made or in which the process is well under way. No other industry in America now practices the twelve-hour day to any great extent.

The adoption of the eight-hour day as the universal practice in the steel industry itself in other countries is another influence on our own workers. England, France, Belgium, Germany, Sweden, Italy, and Spain have all gone over to the three-shift system. How long can we expect the employes of this one industry and country alone to acquiesce in a condition which the world has outgrown? To continue it longer violates the public sense of what is just and what is truly American—The Nation.

SUSTAINS SEAMEN'S ACT

In THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL for January 5th we reported the case of three Lascar firemen who had been inveigled into a false shipping agreement in the British S. S. "Manica," by collusion between the master of said ship and the British consul, or consul's clerk.

In that case the Lascars had been engaged at the going rate of wages for firemen—ninety dollars per month, but through their ignorance were finally induced to set their marks to a practically indefinite agreement on doctored articles taken from another ship of the same line at 23 rupees—about $7.50 per month. After serving five months the Lascars were refused their wages in New York on the ground that they had signed to be paid off in Calcutta in January, 1921. An action in their behalf was brought in the Municipal Court, New York City, to recover full wages at the rate of $90 per month and immediate discharge, according to the verbal agreement previously entered into with them before articles were signed, and in accordance with the treatment accorded all other members of the crew.

The jury found in their favor without reserve and a judgment was entered accordingly in their behalf, ordering their payment at the rate of $90 per month each, irrespective of any fictitious stipulations that might have been surreptitiously inserted in the articles after a verbal agreement had been reached. This verdict is directly in line with the principles and practice of the United States Courts in Admiralty since the year ONE, yet Mr. Silas B. Axtell, attorney for the Lascars, now informs us that the British owners have entered an appeal on the general ground that the jury's verdict is "excessive." At the end of that appeal we venture to predict they are going to find something still more excessive. If they intend to persist in their old-time policy of working the American Merchant Marine off the ocean again we must endeavor to persuade our American Courts to protect American interests.

The greatest of faults, I should say, is to be conscious of none.—Carlyle.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Contributed by American Federation of Labor

So Passes the Glory

Governor Allen and his "can't-strike" law have passed the peak of popularity and are now headed toward the down grade.

At the last session of the Legislature the Governor was monarch of all he surveyed, with the press of the Nation and moving pictures acclaiming him the man who has "solved the labor problem."

Labor steadied itself to receive the shock. The workers have seen these freak "statesmen" appear and disappear, and Allen is proving no exception to the rule.

He opens the new year with a Legislature of different mold than the previous one and the workers, instead of acting on the defensive against the whirl of opposition last year, are now conducting an offensive battle.

In his message to the lawmakers, Governor Allen "sensed" the coming storm against his industrial court, which has been most generous to corporations that demanded rate increases. The Governor now favors a new commission to handle corporations, and this, he says, will give his industrial court more time to handle the labor cases. This means an added cost of from $60,000 to $100,000 a year to the taxpayers and some of the legislators are reaching for their tomahawks.

The Governor has officially declared that "it would be a disaster to a great cause" if his law "were allowed to drift into disuse." The House of Representatives has called on the judges of the Allen court to give an account of their doings, and thinking men agree that the Governor's dream is over.

Comment Not Essential

Late news from Melbourne, Australia, states that President Brooks of the Employers' Federation refuses to divulge the names of contributors to the fund of £25,000 presented to Federal Premier Hughes. Mr. Brooks was chairman of the committee which had charge of the fund. He says it is not intended that the public should know from what sources the money was received.

The gift to Premier Hughes was made just prior to his rejection of a basic wage award, made by a royal commission, after a year's investigation. In October, 1919, the premier announced that the government would accept the award. Now he rejects it. His action, together with the gift and the conditions surrounding it, is creating comment among Australian workers.

Enjoined From Talking

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Striking employes of the Lucey Manufacturing Corporation must not inform seekers of employment that a strike exists at that plant, according to an injunction by Chancellor Garvin. The order would close the mouths of the strikers, who are also prohibited from "interfering" with the corporation's business.

Printed notice that a strike is on at this plant is also enjoined.

Union Baiting Unpopular

During its convention in the City of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the Master Builders' Association rejected the policy of anti-union shop and declared for arbitration and mediation.

The employers indorsed collective bargaining and ignored the demand of former President Mills that wages be reduced 30 per cent.

The anti-unionists found poor soil in that city to propagate their doctrine of discord, due to the fact that Cedar Rapids has an agreement between employers and employed, which provides for arbitration and mediation of industrial disputes.

May Penalize Employers

The Supreme Court of the State of California has upheld the 1917 amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act, which provides that where an injury is caused by the serious and wilful misconduct of an employer, the compensation otherwise due for the injury shall be increased 50 per cent. Such penalty must be paid by the employer personally and cannot be insured against.

The decision strengthens the hand of the State Industrial Accident Commission in its "safety first" campaign.

GOOD FOOD FOR FISHERMEN

Recent experiments conducted in the laboratories of the University of California have determined that peanut brittle has the highest food value based upon heat units or calories.

The recorded value per pound of this candy is 2150 calories, exceeding the value of bread, flour, any of the cereals or their products, meat and eggs.

Peanut brittle is highest also in protein value due to the incorporation of nuts in the candy.

The fat content of the brittle and chocolate caramel is about the same, and similarly with reference to the sugar.

The lowest fuel value per pound is noted for the marshmallow, but this candy has a greater net value to the body than bread because there is practically no waste.

Chocolate caramels contain from two to four times as much protein as cooked rice.

Ice cream does not possess fifty per cent. of the caloric value of candy.

Despite the high caloric value of candies, Professor M. E. Jaffa of the Division of Nutrition does not advocate the consumption of this edible as the main part of the meal. Candy has its place as a dessert or as an "in-between." Malted milk is classed as an "in-between," also.

During the year 1920 20,338 settlers entered Canada from the United States through the ports of the western provinces, according to a statement issued by the Canadian immigration officer at Winnipeg. These settlers were possessed of wealth amounting to $7,759,083 and brought with them effects valued at $2,323,745. Seventy-five per cent of these people settled on farm lands. March, April, and August were the three leading months during which the immigrants entered Canada.

No government can be free which assumes to dictate the disposition of man's labor.

World's Workers

Ontario teachers have applied to the minister of education for a 10 per cent. wage increase. Last year they asked for a 25 per cent. advance, but received 15 per cent.

The American-coined phrase "Tell it to the King of Denmark" seems to have been adopted by the unemployed of that country. Copenhagen advices state that a procession of unemployed, estimated to number 48,000, carrying flags left the City Hall square recently and marched to the King's palace demanding work.

Unemployment has reached a serious stage in many sections of South Africa. The condition of the diggers in the diamond fields at Bleemhof and other places is pitiable. Entire families are starving. Most of them are living in miserable shacks, shockingly overcrowded. In spite of this suffering of the workers, the diamond companies have had a record-breaking year.

Sweden is undergoing a period of economic readjustment involving the closing down of factories and reduction of wages in an effort to cut the cost of production. Swedish manufacturers declare they are compelled to do this in order to place their manufactories on a level which will enable them to compete with German, American and English production.

Late news from London states that M. Krassin, who returned to Moscow from London, where he acted as Russian Soviet trade commissioner, declared in an interview that it may be supposed, after the conclusion of a commercial treaty between Russia and Great Britain, that America will enter trade relations with Soviet Russia, although the American action will only be made clear after the final transfer of the Presidential power to President-elect Harding, according to Moscow advices.

A trade union educational campaign among the workers of Alberta province, Canada, was ordered by the Alberta Federation of Labor, at its convention in Edmonton. The campaign will be directed by the Federation's officials, and will include the distribution of literature upon economic and sociological subjects. The convention also called upon the provincial government to provide for a system of classes for non-English-speaking residents of Alberta. A policy of restricting immigration until the employment situation is in a more settled state was favored.

LABOR

The presence of distress resulting from unemployment is being felt in Chile. Recent advices reveal clashes between the workers and military at the San Gregorio nitrate plant in Antofogasta province, in which twenty of the soldiers were killed. After the encounter, the workmen, who outnumbered the guard, are reported to have proceeded to the office of Daniel Jones, the administrator of the plant, and assassinated him. Having become dissatisfied with arrangements made to provide foodstuffs, the dispatches state that the workmen threatened to kill the administrator unless he gave up the keys to the commissariat. The attitude of the men led the garrison to take extra precautions for defending the stores, and reinforcements were sent for, but these failed to arrive before the clash. The workers are alleged to have exploded dynamite and used guns.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

"The Golden State," Shipping Board 535 passenger liner, has been formally delivered to the Pacific Mail as operator, according to advices to the company from Baltimore. She is to sail from Baltimore for San Francisco February 15.

Silver sand, which is used in manufacture of glass, continues to arrive on the Pacific Coast from Belgium. The motor-ship "Borgland" and the "Kaypeeka" recently unloaded cargoes of the sand at San Francisco.

The value of exports cleared through the Portland customs-house for January was approximately $4,978,810, according to figures compiled from daily records kept by the Merchants' Exchange. Twenty-one vessels carried the cargoes.

The Russian Volunteer Fleet steamer "Penza," en route from Hongkong to Cuba with a consignment of 719 coolies aboard for the sugar plantations there, was held at Honolulu when the craft reported upon her arrival that five men and a child had succumbed to smallpox.

Hearings will be held at Washington by the Shipping Board February 21, to discuss with representatives of the Pacific Coast ports the establishment of trade routes and the allocation of vessels for these routes from Pacific Coast ports to ports in the Far East.

A new commercial wireless station has just been completed at Seattle by the Puget Sound Wireless Telegraph Company. The new plant, which is located on a five-acre tract on Magnolia Bluff, has a sending radius of 1000 miles. It is officially open for business and is licensed by the Department of Commerce.

Exports from Astoria to foreign ports during the six months ending on December 31 represented a total value of $3,565,881.90, the greater part of the export being wheat and lumber. This exceeds the value of exports during the entire twelve months ending June 30 of last year by $293,827.90. The exports for that fiscal year represented a value of $3,272,054.

Despite rumors being circulated that the turbiners "Yale" and "Harvard" can not be ready for service between Los Angeles and San Francisco on May 15, as announced, it is stated by shipping men who have just examined the vessels at San Pedro that the "Yale" reconditioning is nearly finished and that the "Harvard" is not far behind. The "Yale" was given her dock trial a few days ago.

The plea of the Luckenbach Company that the Shipping Board buy back the Mary Luckenbach at the top tonnage prices will not be considered by the Shipping Board, according to recent information. The Luckenbach Company made the request following the purchase by the Board of a Green Star Steamship Corporation ship in the East, which had been purchased from the Board by the Green Star Company originally. The Board did not make any explanation of its refusal.

The summary of the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce for the Port of San Francisco for January shows that 685 vessels of 1,151,890 aggregate tons arrived or departed last month, as compared with 796 vessels of 1,085,311 tons in January of last year. Following are the comparative totals: Arrivals last month, steam, 547,165 tons; sail, 38,524 tons. January, 1920, steam, 454,305 tons; sail, 50,125 tons. Departures last month, steam, 531,450 tons; sail, 34,751 tons. January, 1920, steam, 517,965 tons; sail, 62,916 tons.

A report from London to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce recently stated that the motorship "Balcatta" of the Pacific Motorship Company, previously reported in difficulties near Valparaiso, had since been abandoned in a waterlogged condition and subsequently manned again. The motorship arrived at Valparaiso January 23 and started to Talcahuano for repairs. She became so waterlogged that the crew anchored her in ten fathoms of water and abandoned ship. Later the crew returned and tugs were sent to the vessel's assistance.

According to advices from San Pedro, all port records were broken in January in number of steamers which entered and cleared in the aggregate amount of tonnage of the steamers, according to the report of the port warden. There were fifty-four vessels with a deadweight displacement of 495,200 tons requiring the service of the port pilots last month. The cargo carried by these steamers amounted to more than $100,000,000 in value. The steamers represented British, Japanese, Dutch, Norwegian and American registry. The report does not include the coastwise trade.

Since the abrupt halt in grain chartering last week, the charter market has been featureless. There is the usual movement of oil, and a few lumber inquiries are in the air. Copra charters are becoming more and more conspicuous by their absence. Now that the slump seems to be feeling bottom, there is much speculation as to the time when it will end. Opinions on this subject by leading shipping men seem to run from six months to two years, with some placing their hopes in even the more distant future. On the average, however, one year appears to be the generally accepted period allowed for its continuance. Freight offerings remain about the same, with the intercostal vessels pretty well filled and with others carrying about one-third capacity.

It is the intention of the Vancouver, B. C., Board of Trade section, which is forming a shipping bureau, to have installed a wireless plant of a radius of 3000 miles. Negotiations are under way with the Marconi Company. It is proposed to construct a station that will link up with the powerful wireless plants at Carnavon, Wales; at Lyons, France; Nauen, Germany; Cavite, P. I., and Funibashi, Japan. A. R. Dockerill has been appointed chairman for 1921 of the shipping section of the Vancouver Board of Trade.

Reports that the Coast Guard cutter "Bear," which has been in service in the Bering sea for nearly half a century, is to be made a training ship for the Coast Guard service have been received in shipping circles with surprise. Since Admiral, the Commander Schley, rescued seven survivors of the Greely Arctic expedition with the "Bear" that ship has been in almost continuous service in the northern waters. She is well known to natives and to the "sour doughs" of Alaska. She joined the Arctic patrol shortly after being acquired by the Coast Guard service from the whaling and sealing trade for which she was intended when built in Scotland in 1874. The "Bear" is to be stationed at San Diego, according to the report.

Direct service from Scandinavian countries and Antwerp to San Francisco via the Johnson Line will be inaugurated by the new motorship "Canada," now loading at Christiania, it was announced by W. R. Grace & Co., Pacific Coast agents. Hereafter the Johnson Line motorships, of which four of the largest will be kept in this trade, will proceed direct from Antwerp to San Francisco via the Panama Canal. The eastbound service, which has not included South American calls, remains unchanged. The "Canada," like the other motor-ships in this service, has accoommodations for a limited number of passengers. She is loading a cargo of general merchandise and silver sand and is expected to sail from Christiania about the middle of this month.

Demonstrating that even in these troublous times it is possible to fill the holds of a steamer once in a while, the European-Pacific Line recently dispatched the Shipping Board steamer "Pomona" for Liverpool, London, Hamburg and Antwerp with the largest cargo ever sent out on this line. The "Pomona," in command of Captain Ryer, had 10,450 deadweight tons of freight, or about 12,000 measurement tons, according to Williams, Dimond & Co., the operators. This is one of the very few cargoes for foreign ports, not under charter, which has gone out in weeks. More than 800 tons of the Pomona's burden consisted of several consignments of grain loaded at Seattle, Vancouver and Portland. The additional space was taken by 2000 tons of general merchandise, embracing lubricating oil, canned goods and dried fruit from San Francisco, and cotton from San Pedro. As in other recent cargoes to Europe, the great preponderance of foodstuffs is again in evidence.

Taking six days and nineteen hours from Honolulu instead of five days, of which she is capable, the "Siberia Maru" recently arrived at San Francisco from Yokohama, Dairen, Shanghai, Manila and Honolulu. She carried 146 cabin passengers and 3938 tons of cargo, much of which was rice and raw silk. She carried a valuable consignment of treasure in her strong boxes, consigned to the Yokohama Specie Bank, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank and the American National Bank. The trip was uneventful, except for heavy weather between Yokohama and Honolulu. Initiating a new port of call in Japan, the "Siberia" stopped at Dairen this trip and filled her bunkers, instead of at Nagasaki. The coal at Dairen is of inferior quality, according to experts, and it was due to this that the slow time was made. The official charts posted daily for the information of the passengers showed daily runs of 243, 256, 275 and 303 miles, when the ship is capable of making 400 miles in favorable weather and can keep up an average of 350 easily. The coal consumption was more than twenty-five tons a day in excess of former records and the speed was below normal. Whether the T. K. K. will continue to use Dairen coal after the Siberia's clear demonstration of its inferiority has not been announced as yet.

GREETINGS

With the ever present perception that this publication is a "Journal of Seamen, by Seamen, for Seamen," we extend greetings to all members of the several sub-groups in every district within jurisdiction of the International Seamen's Union of America.

We desire to keep in close touch with the sentiments, hopes, and aspirations of seamen everywhere; therefore suggest, that any member, or agent of any branch who has a thought to express, or a plan for the benefit of our craft, will forward their ideas to the JOURNAL, in order that the membership as a whole will receive the benefit of constructive mental effort. We shall be anxious at all times to obtain all the real live news pertaining to our profession. News of the sea and ships, and of the great world-wide industrial struggle. An opportunity of observation is frequently presented to many of our members while in actual pursuit of their calling, and we trust that these incidents will not be permitted to remain unrecorded. Give to all of us the benefit of whatever humor or moral a story may contain by forwarding same to the SEAMEN'S JOURNAL.

COMMERCIAL RUTHLESSNESS

To quote the immortal Shakespeare, "It is glorious to have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant." During certain recurring periods of time, men and organizations have temporarily occupied a position where they could exercise the utmost force. To take advantage of such power would have often proved tyrannous.

Labor has often possessed a strength that could have been used with ruthlessness, to the utter destruction of its opponents; but the workers have ever been moderate in the exercise of their power. There have been occasions when the very foundations of our civilization have depended upon their behavior, but they have never abused the possession of strength.

The same cannot be said of the employers or their associations. The following from one of Babson's Reports on Labor, issued shortly after the outbreak of the World War, gives an insight into the line of thought permeating employing and financial circles:

"The prospect for legislation during the year to come is that it will be conservative. This promises to be true both in the State Legislatures and in Congress at Washington. The intense interest manifested by Americans in events upon the other side of the ocean will serve to distract attention from the elections in the United States. This will mean that many conservatives, who have been out of office for the season, will return to their former political positions, and that radical candidacies will succeed but rarely this fall.

"For several years past labor and social legislation has come thick and fast. Clients must look for a temporary lessening of the pet plans of the legislative reformers. . .

"Conservatism in legislation should apply simply for the period during which the attention of the country is riveted upon the war.

"Educated people are well aware by this time that the closing of the stock exchanges is a serious matter for the whole nation; but this thought has occurred to but few of the laboring classes. Those workmen who have thought at all of the stock exchanges have been of the opinion that they existed only for the rich.

"The present distress furnishes an opportunity for employers to open the eyes of their working people to the truth that the exchanges have a function!

"Under the present system the closing of the exchanges acts as a tremendous drag on business, and this should be made clear whenever opportunity offers."

Failure to understand the real substance of the report is impossible. The suggestions are made direct to financial interests to satiate desire with abhorrent ruthlessness. Cunning instincts are prepared to take advantage of our people while their attention is distracted by the struggle of the nations; reactionaries are encouraged to creep back into the State and National Legislatures while the populace is off its guard, while the most subtle means are to be used to destroy labor and social legislation.

Although America's active participation in the World War caused a period of delay, the ingenious scheme has succeeded in so far as the return of reactionaries to State Legislatures and Congress at Washington is concerned.

We have now reached the stage when the other choice expression, which required heavier type to impress, can be made to apply. "The present distress furnishes an opportunity for employers to open the eyes of their working people to the truth that the exchanges have a function."

Nowhere throughout the length and breadth of the land are the employers overlooking the opportunity. The present period of distress is deliberately aggravated and used as a weapon in a warfare upon Labor, the brutality of which knows no bounds. Babson, the financial expert, in efforts to please, has given expression to the spirit of commercialism. Those of us who were inclined to view the course of events with optimism are forced to give way to overwhelming pessimism. Realization of present conditions, and their dangerous trend, precludes assumption of the brighter view. The truth is forced upon us that Capital is a senseless, soulless thing, which has been created and worshiped by man to his soul's destruction. It is the Moloch to which the groans of men, the wails of women, and the cries of little children are sacrifice.

Without human attributes it wields a giant's strength, with unchecked tyranny. However, we still have hopes for the future of our race, when we reflect upon the fact that Goliath, at the appointed time, met his David.

AN ORIGINAL EXPERIMENT

The time has not yet arrived for trade-unionists to display an exuberance of enthusiasm over success of the new method of industrial self-defense as applied by the International Association of Machinists of Norfolk, Va.

The practicability of the "Norfolk Idea" on an extensive scale is at present a matter of uncertainty, owing to the fact that its introduction was somewhat in the nature of a surprise. Therefore to be successful it did not meet with the same obstacles which further operation of the plan would be sure to encounter. The principle of co-operation enters largely into the scheme, and so far in this case, operates successfully and with promise.

Owing to present unsettled conditions everybody is intensely eager to evolve a method whereby industrial battles can be fought with the least possible discomfiture to those not directly involved. Any scheme which promises to keep production going during industrial strife is sure to be received with acclamation. If the plan should develop into an attack upon Capital as represented by the large employers, with the dollars as contained in the treasuries of trades unions, the riddle is already read. We have never yet observed a minnow demolish a shark.

The combined treasuries of every union in the country could be put to investment in the same manner as the Machinists of Norfolk, only to result in action by financial interests that would close off raw materials, withhold credits, block markets, and otherwise isolate or cripple such investments. Much as we welcome the introduction of new ideas into the Labor Movement, and earnestly desire their success, we are inclined to believe that unless the Norfolk Idea is strongly supported by solidarity of the workers, the experiment will be of no great material benefit.

REFLECTIONS FROM ATLANTIC

Five years ago American ship owners and affiliated interests poured vials of wrath upon Senator La Follette and Andrew Furuseth for the act which they induced the Congress to pass lifting the standards of American workers afloat.

From an advertisement by a committee of American shipbuilders on "Pulling Together for a Permanent Merchant Marine," now appearing in many magazines, we quote:

"The Seaman's Act of 1915, which has made seafaring an attractive vocation for Americans is gradually equalizing the cost of operation as between American and foreign vessels. The Seaman's law, therefore, should remain in force in substantially its present form."

The conservative mind resists change because it lacks imagination, not because it is bad. Demonstrate that a change is good and it will applaud. But it must be shown. It cannot foresee.

Progressives should, therefore, not be deterred by conservative opposition. Most of the benefits which society enjoys have had to be initiated by radicals and enforced by liberals to the accompaniment of conservative protests and groans.

Yet when they make good, the scoffing becomes praise.

DUTIES KNOWN AND FULFILLED

The following article from the San Francisco Examiner, under date of February 7, 1921, reveals the fact that the Pacific Coast Steam Schooner Sailor is the peer of any. He knows his duty and can be relied upon at the crucial period to perform that duty to the utmost:

One of the women passengers aboard the steamer "Klamath," when she ran on dangerous rocks off the Northern California coast early Saturday morning, was Mrs. L. Slingerland, wife of the Western Union wire chief at Reno, Nev. She suffered a fractured rib when the disabled craft gave a sudden lurch. Yesterday Mrs. Slingerland furnished "The Examiner" with the story of the experience of the women on board the stranded ship.

By MRS. L. SLINGERLAND

Point Arena, Feb. 6.—No one but those who actually saw them work will know what a wonderful crew the "Klamath" had when she went on the rocks at Del Mar Friday night.

Without any aid from shore, the crew got lines to the rocks towering over the ship and carried all of the passengers in safety to the bluffs overhanging our little ship, pounded higher and higher on the beach by a surf running so high that it was frequently sweeping the decks.

It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when a sailor leaped into the tossing sea in an attempt to swim to the nearest rocks, about two hundred feet away. He had two lines tied to him, so that if one parted he could still make the other fast.

Seaman's Battle Against Waves Anxiously Watched

We all held our breath while he fought those angry waves, and you can imagine our feelings when he called from the rocks that he had anchored both lines. Then they rigged a breeches buoy and started taking the women ashore.

There were only four of us, Mrs. C. Buckley of Lemola, Wash.; the two McGillen girls, who were on their way from San Francisco to make their home in Portland, and myself.

We all made the trip safely and then came Mrs. Buckley's little girl, eighteen months old. She didn't cry once during all of the excitement. They put her in an ash can and then lashed it to the back of a sailor, who rode across safely in the breeches buoy. When he landed on the rocks with the baby, there was almost as much cheering as when the other sailor had gotten ashore with the first lines. When Mrs. Buckley looked into the can to lift out the child, she was snuggled in the bottom just as unconcerned as if she were riding along the street in her perambulator.

We all waited on the rocks from about 2:30 in the morning until 5:30, when it got light enough for us to see what we were doing. Then a line was thrown over the top of the cliffs above us and a sailor went up, hand over hand, to the top. Three of them went up and held the rope while the rest of us made the trip. The sailors had to carry us women up. It took two of them to handle me, because I'm a little heavier than most women. But I made it all right.

Comment on the foregoing would be superfluous, and from our point of view in bad form. There are some of the duties that we as seamen are expected to perform, and failure to meet the standard degrades our calling. Such duties, of course, can never be valued from a dollar and cent standpoint, for which we are duly thankful.

The efficiency of our Pacific Coast steam schooner sailor has always been a matter of pride with us; therefore we can be excused for exultation in the grateful expressions of a lady who has become one of the beneficiaries of that efficiency.

No one loves the man whom he fears.—Aristotle.

DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

(By Andrew Furuseth)

"And by giving all possible assistance to our employers in caring for their gear and property."—Preamble Constitution Sailors' Union of the Pacific.

In my last short communication to the JOURNAL I dealt with the question of skill in seamanship. In order to be able to give all possible assistance to our employers in caring for their gear and property, the first condition is skill in the work that as seamen we have to do. Without that skill it matters not how much we desire to do it, we cannot do it.

Back of the necessity for skill and the caring for gear and property, lie some centuries of experience absorbed by the seamen of different races, different nations and different times. Why should we be anxious to take care of the vessel, of the vessel's gear, of the vessel's appliances, of the vessel's boats? We are only wage-workers getting a certain pay for obeying orders. I fancy I can hear these questions put to me, and this is written in order to give such answer as I can to the above queries. My answer is that the seamen are the Merchant Marine, the sea-power, the calling, and the vessels are the tools with which we ply our calling, or if you please, our trade. We are not seamen because of the wages we get; we are seamen because of the knowledge we have, and the life we lead, because of the work we do, and we are good or bad in proportion as we do the work good or bad.

My second answer to them is this: upon the soundness of the vessel depends the life of the crew. And please remember that when I speak of the crew I speak of everybody on board of the vessel, the master excluded; when I speak of the seamen, I speak of everybody on board of the vessel, the master included. Of course, I do not speak of passengers. The safety of the crew depends upon the soundness of the vessel, upon how the vessel's gear is kept, upon whether her appliances are in a first-rate condition, ready to be used at all times, and upon whether her boats are in a proper condition and ready to be lowered into the water at all times. The seaman sometimes pays for his own neglect with his life. If he hath not the skill and the willingness to do the work of a seaman, he pays for his lack of skill and his neglect with his life under conditions that are all too plentiful at sea. The ship is to the seaman what the horse is to the dispatch rider, the gun to the hunter. As the rider takes the best of care of his horse in order that he may safely get to his destination, so the seaman takes the best of care of his ship with all that applies, in order that he may get safely to his destination. The hunter takes care of his gun and has it cleaned and in first-class condition, because upon the gun depends whether he shall be successful as a hunter or not, and sometimes his life depends upon whether the gun is in first-class condition or not.

My third answer is that when a seaman can do and really does his work he is a much more valuable man to the vessel. He is kept by the vessel. He is entrusted with important repair jobs. He rigs the different gear needed to take in and dis-

(By Laurence Todd.)

Viva Mexico

Pity the poor Mexican! In the Federal District of Mexico, in which the capital is located, there were 187 strikes in the past six months, and not one of them was lost by the workers.

That is the news brought home by President Johnston of the International Association of Machinists, who has been attending the Second Pan-American Labor Congress, and who interviewed most of the members of the Obregon cabinet as well as the active trade union officials. He also discovered that unemployment is far less serious a problem below the Rio Grande than in this country.

While the workers in the United States have been mutely receiving blow after blow from the courts, the White House, the two branches of Congress and from the State governments, the while they have been waiting for the final decision by the Supreme Court that all trade union funds may be seized for damages if a trade union engages in a strike—all this while the Mexicans have been traveling the opposite road. They have been getting rid of the very oppressions that are now being fastened upon their brothers in the States.

For example, the State legislatures are considering a drastic anti-strike program, which provides for a so-called Industrial Court, empowered to act as judge, jury and jailer, against the labor movement. Uniform texts of such a bill have reached the Plumb Plan League at Washington from the State capitals of Montana, Ohio, Oregon, Colorado and elsewhere.

Astonishing Progress Revealed

On the other hand, Mexico forbids, under her Constitution, the employment of strike-breakers to take the places of union men. It prescribes that if a man is dismissed for union membership or for going on strike, his employer must give him the choice of re-employment or three months' wages. And it expressly declares, that labor associations, formed to protect the interests of the working classes, "are not monopolies."

Best of all, Mexico seems now to have a government that is thoroughly pro-labor. Half of the cabinet are trade unionists. The rest are Socialists or other radicals who have risked their lives in the war to rid Mexico of peonage and landlordism. Today a labor college, for the training of labor organizers and political leaders for the working class, is one of the institutions in Mexico City which has the especial help of the government.

Americans are Impressed

Johnston and the dozen other A. F. of L. union officials who attended the Pan-American Labor Congress were deeply impressed by the enthusiasm and determination of the Mexicans in establishing their new government beyond any danger of future overthrow by the forces set at that job by the American oil operators and mine owners. They came back resolved to put up a fight against every attempt in Congress or elsewhere in the country to start a Mexican war propaganda. They brought home likewise the resolve to show the Mexican peons that the spirit of organized labor in the States will not be broken by the "open shop" and "industrial court" drive, nor by the Supreme Court's bombing raids.

Adopting new Ideas

Secretary-Treasurer Davison of the Machinists, who stayed at home and became famous meanwhile as the promoter of the "Norfolk idea" of putting trade union funds behind fair employers in the lock-out game, thinks that the Machinists have stumbled upon the key to a defeat of the organized anti-union employers. He said today that the response coming from all classes of organized labor, from the general press, from colleges, business and professional organizations, to the publication of the facts as to how the Machinists saved a friendly employer in Norfolk from the dictation of the banks, indicates that here is a method that the bosses cannot meet. Everyone likes a scheme of industrial self-defense that will keep production going. Everyone appreciates a plan which saves money and material and time. The Machinists offer a plan which involves simply the use of their own members' savings, through their own bank, in providing employment at productive labor for their own people. It is co-operation, applied as a means of industrial warfare instead of merely a savings club.

It is only fair to observe that none of the international presidents who control the policy of the A. F. of L. have publicly endorsed the constructive tactics developed under the name of the "Norfolk Idea." They look on, skeptically, to see whether the big banking combine in Wall Street will permit the Machinists to continue to finance factories without shutting off their supply of raw materials. And in any event these officials look askance at ideas suggested by the one powerful organization that challenges their hold upon the Federation.

Churches are Powerless

Warnings of coming industrial storm are heard every day in the capital, since the numbers of the unemployed have gone up past four million. The railroad workers have served notice that they will not submit to a wage reduction, which the companies have formally demanded from the National Railroad Labor Board. They will quit their jobs first. And the heads of the Interchurch World Movement, Industrial Department, state frankly that they believe that a One Big Union strike of steel workers is coming, unless Congress finds means to abolish the 12-hour day and secure collective bargaining for them.

This testimony of the church leaders, given before the Senate Committee on Labor, on Thursday, was coupled with a remarkable disclosure as to the forlorn-hope offer of the A. F. of L. strike committee to have the Interchurch committee mediate a settlement in which the unions should not appear at all.

Bishop McConnell of Pittsburgh, chairman, and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, vice-chairman of the steel investigating committee of the Interchurch, testified that, when the strike was seen to be in a bad way, and when Gary had told the Senate investigators that he was always willing to meet his own employes, the strike committee came to the Interchurch committee with this request. The churchmen told the trade union committee that they would do nothing unless the strike committee, by a formal vote of the spokesmen of all the 24 internationals in charge of the strike, should agree to officially withdraw from the settlement, and let the churchmen mediate with Gary on behalf of the employes in his own plants.

Righteous Efforts Fail

According to the story told by Bishop McConnell, the spokesmen of all the A. F. of L. internationals involved in the strike met and voted to accept the plan. A written authorization was sent him, signed by them. He then went to Gary, and asked Gary to deal with the Interchurch committee as mediator for Gary's own employes, in arranging a settlement with those employes. Gary flatly refused.

So the first and only time that organized labor, in a big struggle, placed its cause in the hands of the Christian Church in order to get the right and wrong of the matter judged upon its own merits, organized capital spurned the church.

In this connection Bishop McConnell brought out the fact that Attorney General Palmer's spies in the Pittsburgh district were active in circulating anonymous attacks upon the Interchurch committee and its work, and in arresting union men under pretense that they were "dangerous reds." The Ohio Manufacturers' Association published some of these attacks under the title "Anarchists and the Interchurch World Movement," but later was compelled to send out a crawling letter of retraction and apology.

Leads to One Big Union

The A. F. of L. organizing campaign has failed, in the opinion of Bishop McConnell, but it has sown the seed from which a new organiing campaign, to be started by some new organization—probably a One Big Union—will reap a greater strike than the last one. As a means of preventing such a strike, and of compromising or statisfying some of the more urgent needs of the steel wrokers, the Interchurch report urges that Congress create a commission to deal with the 12-hour day, the 7-day week, the right of the workers to deal with their employers through their chosen spokesmen, etc. Quite as urgent as these reforms, it says, is the abolition of private detective agencies such as were used by the steel companies, and which maintained a dangerous intimacy with the Department of Justice.

Alfred James, legislative agent for the United Mine Workers, has drafted a proposed amendment to the Calder coal-control bill, that is almost as revolutionary as the proposed abolition of private gunmen in industry. It provides that while gathering data on the wages and cost of living and standards of living of the coal miners, as now provided by the bill, the Department of Labor shall investigate in the same way into the incomes, cost of living and standard and habit of living of the coal operators, the members of coal sales companies, coal retailers, etc., and their families.

He asks that the public be given the comparison as to what sort of life each party to the transaction gets out of it.

Ultimate success in a labor struggle does not always depend upon the ability to continue fighting. Not infrequently it is the ability to quit that decides the issue.

INTERNATIONAL AIDS SEAMEN

lingham and Anacortes, Washington, be admitted into the International Seamen's Union as independent organizations, and in view of such opinion from the Unions of the Pacific District the question of charters for these men was referred to the Executive Board, who authorized their issuance.

As these men are engaged in the fishing industries of Puget Sound and Alaska, and come in close contact with members of other Fishermen's Unions, it is suggested that some plan be agreed upon whereby they can become part of the already established Unions of Fishermen in that district, and in so doing we will better solidify and strengthen that part of the International Union.

Donation for the British Columbia Seamen's Strike

In May, 1920, the Seamen of British Columbia became involved in a general strike against the shipowners of that locality for improvement of conditions and an increase in wages, and finding themselves unable to carry on the struggle for any length of time on their own resources, an appeal for financial assistance was made to the International Seamen's Union through Vice-President Gill, who indorsed the appeal.

Liberal financial assistance was given these men by the Unions in the Pacific District, and after due consideration, the Executive Board donated from the International Treasury one thousand ($1,000) dollars which was expended among the Sailors, Firemen and Cooks under the supervision of Vice-President Gill.

The strike was of short duration and resulted in the men winning most of the demands for which they contended but failed in establishing full recognition of the Unions with the shipowners of that locality.

Dutch and Danish Seamen's Strike

The officers of the International Seafarers' Federation informed President Furuseth that the Dutch Seamen during the month of February became involved in a general strike caused by the longshoremen against the Dutch shipowners for what is termed international wages and requested that the International Seamen's Union come to their assistance financially.

Being true to our motto—"The Brotherhood of the Sea"—a call for voluntary donations in behalf of the Dutch Seamen was sent to all District Unions from the International office. This call obtained for these men $7,500, which is evidence that the International Seamen's Union of America demonstrates by actions that "Our Motto" is not merely a theory or name.

In support of the Danish Seamen's strike, $1,000 was contributed from the International Treasury, and same was divided among the Sailors, Firemen and Cooks' Unions of Denmark by President Furuseth, who visited said country on his way to the Brussels Convention of the International Seafarers' Federation.

Election of Delegates to the American Federation of Labor Convention

The San Francisco Convention elected President Furuseth as delegate to the Conventions of the Seafarers' Federation, and the American Federation of Labor, but since the date set by the Seafarers' Federation was changed from August 5 to June 12, it became necessary to elect a delegate to the American Federation of Labor in place of President Furuseth, who could not attend.

As the time for filling the vacancy was very limited, it became necessary to confine the election of a delegate to the members of the Board, who by nearly unanimous vote selected Vice-President Flynn.

With reference to occurrences of this character, it may be well for the Convention to consider the advisability of electing alternates to fill such vacancies as may take place in the future regarding representatives at Conventions.

Financial Progress of District Unions

From a financial point of view, the past year has exceeded all expectations in that nearly all of the District Unions have increased their treasuries materially. The total income for the various crafts amounted to nearly two million dollars ($2,000,000), while the total expenditures consumed a little over one million and a half ($1,500,000) which leaves a total gain of nearly four hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($450,000) during said period.

Reviewing the information concerning the membership and finances which has been obtained from secretaries of District Unions and compiled in this report, it is evident that the International Union is in a very healthy condition and should prove to the individual that never before has such progress been made, nor such results obtained as are now enjoyed by the men who compose the largest and best conducted organization of seamen now in existence.

Considering these achievements and realizing the general industrial depression which affects every industry, it is the duty of all (officers and members) to safeguard the Unions, economize in expenditures and utilize all energy and ability that we possess in order that we may hold what has been gained and prepare ourselves to share in further benefits for all seamen when the tide turns.

International Seafarers' Federation

From report of the delegates who attended the Convention of the Seafarers' Federation, it is evident that the seamen of all nations are in harmony with its principle, and it affords them an opportunity to meet, exchange ideas, and formulate policies that will eventually bring about a better understanding of Seamen's questions in an international sense.

As the International Seamen's Union represents the only body of "Free Seamen" in the world, it is important that this Convention give attention to the question of representation at future Conventions, and at the same time consider the need of increasing our voting strength in the Federation.

While the expense of sending three delegates to the last Convention of the Federation exceeded six thousand dollars ($6,000) it must be considered that the time needed for the two Conventions consumed about three months and the opportunity it affords us to assist in elevating the standard of other nations' seamen, is in itself good reason for continuing and is an economic protection to ourselves.

Organizing

The San Francisco Convention of the International Seamen's Union granted to the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union of the Great Lakes two organizers for a period of six months and in agreement with said union and the International office the work of organizers was commenced at the opening of navigation and terminated the latter part of July in accordance with the limitation imposed by said convention as to the amount of funds to be expended for that purpose.

The result of this work during such brief period of time added over five hundred members to the roll of the Lake Cooks, while a total of $5,781 in funds was collected for said Union, and the expense from the International Treasury in this respect amounted to less than $2,500, which was paid direct from the International office to the organizers employed at the rate of $45 per week.

As the majority of the membership of the Lake Cooks are employed on passenger vessels the season of income is very brief for said Union, and to maintain itself financially until the next season of navigation opens up, it has been necessary to reduce all operating expenses to a minimum.

Publicity Work

At several of the previous conventions, representatives of the different Unions have expressed and encouraged the idea of publicity regarding the beneficial features of the Seamen's Act, and the International Office has in this respect distributed among various classes of institutions all such available material bearing on the subject as time and service would permit.

Attorney Axtell, of New York, who through his law practice, experienced great need for a clearer understanding of Seamen's legislation by judges and others, informed the President that he had of his own volition expended in publicity during the year a considerable amount of money and suggested that same be brought to the attention of the Board. This was done, and the Secretary-Treasurer received authority to reimburse Mr. Axtell to the amount of $500, which was used principally for printing, typewriting and postage in his publicity work.

Conclusion

We have closed a year's work which must be gratifying to even the most pessimistic. The seamen's movement has gained in strength and influence and the record of achievements made during this period is certainly a source of pride to every member.

True expressions of the demands of the seamen for progress and enlargements in our sphere of life have been given by all representatives and the methods used to obtain the objects for which we are striving reflect themselves in a steady upward tendency of seamen's conditions.

In the year to come our problems and responsibilities will not be lessened. Issues of far-reaching importance must be met by new policies. But viewing the past accomplishments we are confident of our future wisdom and ability. And we call upon every seaman to be vigilant in defense of our principles and to increase our strength everywhere so that obstacles in our struggle can triumphantly be surmounted by a fortified consciousness of our rights.

In concluding this report, I avail myself of the opportunity of expressing my sincere thanks for the helpful co-operation extended during the year by the officers of the International, representatives of district unions and the membership in general and trust that the delegates will deal with existing conditions in a practical way, cultivating and extending good will in all of our work so that the results of our actions may become more helpful to the men we represent.

Respectfully and fraternally submitted,

T. A. HANSON,
Secretary-Treasurer.

APPENDIX B

Memorandum of Agreement

Memorandum of Agreement made and entered into at Buffalo, N. Y., April 28th, 1920, by and between Great Lakes Transit Corporation and Firemen's Union, Sailors' Union and the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union, to cover the season of 1920 from April 1st.

WITNESSETH: That on boats of the Great Lakes Transit Corporation there shall be an increase in wages of Twenty-five (25%) Per Cent for men employed in the deck, fireroom, and the steward's department over last year's scale.

The Eight (8) Hour day in port and the Three (3) Watch System to be put into operation in the deck and fireroom departments. This to be done wherever possible without increasing the number of the crew with the exception of two additional coal passers.

That there shall be paid overtime to Deck and Fireroom Departments when cargo is being loaded or unloaded on Sundays and Holidays, and over eight (8) hours on other days, at the rate of Fifty-five Cents (55c) per hour for ordinary seamen, Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for able seamen, and firemen and oilers Forty Cents (40c) per hour.

THE NORFOLK IDEA

Labor's answer to recent legal and legislative setbacks may be to fight capital with capital itself.

An experiment now called "the Norfolk idea," conducted by the International Association of Machinists, is being much discussed and, it is said, is about to be repeated on the Pacific Coast. In brief, the Norfolk idea is the use of capital assets and credit of organized labor in the fight to force employers to meet its demands.

Type of Strategy Employed

As explained by E. O. Davison, secretary of the machinists, there was a strike in the Crescent Iron Works at Norfolk, Va., late in 1920. The labor union strategy was simple: The outstanding obligations of the Crescent Iron Works were bought up, and control thus having been gained, support was furnished through extension of credit and active co-operation of affiliated branches of organized labor.

Mr. Davison, who was one of the originators of the idea, estimated yesterday that his association saved more than $200,000 cash in that contest, while the saving to its members was probably double that amount.

"Instead of a long struggle in which our members each drew $8 per week in strike benefits," he said, "we succeeded in keeping them all employed at top wages. The industry in Norfolk was saved an expensive period of inactivity and the city was saved the loss in trade which would have resulted."

Found $40,000 Mortgage

When the Ironmasters' Association declared for an open shop in the summer of 1920, investigation disclosed that there was an outstanding mortgage of $40,000 on the Crescent works a few days overdue.

Mr. Davison, acting for the union, attempted to buy up the mortgage but the bank holding it refused to sell. Further inquiry disclosing that many of the bank's depositors were members of the unions, steps were taken which resulted in a sudden decrease of the institution's deposits on hand. The offer to purchase the mortgage being then renewed, the bank consented to the sale, Mr. Davison explained.

A "show down" with the management of the Crescent Iron Works followed immediately, Mr. Davison said. The outcome being the reopening of that plant as a strictly union shop.

Now Employs 360 Men

"The Crescent shop had employed 40 machinists," Mr. Davison said, "but these were working overtime. We obtained the adoption of a schedule which permitted the employment of a force of 60 men on an eight-hour basis, and later to the use of three shifts a day. By changing the personnel so as to allow each employe to get in three days a week, we soon had this one plant giving work to more than 360 men, all but 40 of whom would have been idle under the old system."

Soon, however, according to Mr. Davison, Norfolk bankers refused to advance credit for current transactions to the Crescent works, and jobbers, he said, refused to sell it equipment. The machinists' union at once deposited with a Norfolk bank sufficient cash to cover immediate needs and met the remaining problem by arranging with out-of-town firms for the articles needed to complete the work at hand.

Merchants Reopen Accounts.

"When he had explained these plans to local merchants," Secretary Davison explained, "they readily consented to reopening their accounts with the Crescent."

Influence of the union also was utilized to obtain orders for the plant which it now controlled. This was accomplished largely through co-operation with members of the Norfolk Pilots' Association and through the friendship of the closely unionized crews of most foreign ships which put into Norfolk for repairs, Mr. Davison said.

The union then extended its operations by moving to the assistance of the small shops which were in financial difficulties. Learning that a considerable sum was due for work on vessels of the United States Shipping Board, an arrangement was made whereby the Mount Vernon Savings Bank, of Washington, D. C., which is controlled outright by the International Association of Machinists, purchased those accounts and negotiated their settlement direct with the shipping board headquarters here.

Assistance of the Washington bank to the Norfolk firms was conditioned frankly on their continuing operation as "union shops," it was admitted, as were other transactions through which the bank deposited with Norfolk institutions sums equal to loans they had made to shops in the vicinity. These deposits would be allowed to remain only so long as the Virginia bank continued to carry the paper of the plants with which the union was co-operating.

Unions Are Inquiring

Officials of the machinists' association said yesterday they had received thousands of letters from labor organizations throughout the United States asking for details of the new plan and for advice as to its adaptability to local conditions.

Proponents of the Norfolk idea insist that it offers a legitimate, economical and expeditious way of obtaining relief at least in isolated cases. Whether it could be used by labor in disputes affecting larger areas and consequently in opposition to more strongly organized opposition, Mr. Davison thought would have to wait further development. The union did not aim at worker ownership, he declared, but simply moved to prevent what it considered utilization of capital, produced by its members, against their own interest.—Washington Post.

charge cargo, and being reliable and trustworthy, he is placed in the hold to see that the cargo is stowed in such a way as to be safe and in accordance with the mate's orders. But, you say, I am not asked to do these things. My answer is you are asked to do them on the Pacific. In the majority of instances you do them on the Pacific. You are permitted to do those things, you do them, and you stay on board of the vessel on the Pacific because you are capable of doing them, because you do them and are willing to do them. Of course, you may have been on board of a vessel where the boats were in bad shape; when they were put over the side they filled. The davits were so rusted up that they would not turn, and sometimes men paid for that neglect with their lives. You have been on board of vessels where the hoisting gear was so unskilfully rigged and of such bad quality that it carried away, and men paid for that with their lives or limbs. You have probably been on vessels where there was one man on the lookout and one man at the wheel, an officer on the bridge and everybody else asleep. The lookout had to leave the forecastle head; there was a collision either with another ship or with a reef, and men paid for that with their lives. The insurance company paid the loss, so far as the owner and shipper of freight were concerned.

My final answer is that whether you are appreciated or not, whether you are ordered to keep the gear and appliances in order or not, is not your lookout, that happened because the officers of the vessel do not have such knowledge in seamanship as they should have prior to being permitted to sail as officers. It matters not whether you are ordered to do the work or not, you cannot help the fact that you do not get the order, that thing which matters to you is that you are capable and willing to do the work and willing to do it right, honestly and faithfully when you are ordered to do it. Some day the shipowners will again learn the value of skill, of efficiency in the crew, and they will insist upon it in the officers and in the crew; and seamanship will again become what it once was and you will again be a member of a calling which earns enough money, through its labor, to have a home where there is a wife and some small ones. Some of you may laugh and look upon this as a dream. Let me assure you that it is not a dream. It is not as great a dream as was the dream that we should again become free men. We did gain freedom, not because the shipowners wanted to give it to us, but because we insisted upon it long enough and strongly enough to convince those who had the power to give it to us. In that struggle we educated a large number of the shipowners and a large number of the officers. In this struggle for the restoration of skill, for the repossession of the sea-lore, we shall have to educate some of the owners; we shall have to educate some of the officers. If we mean to be true to what we promised to ourselves in our darkest days, then we must do whatever we can collectively and individually to restore the skill in seamanship and to re-acquire the knowledge of the sea-lore and respect that is due from others to our calling. We shall thus re-conquer our true place among men.

Assistant Trade Commissioner Julian E. Gillespie reports from Constantinople that another attempt is to be made to establish a direct passenger steamship line between Constantinople and New York. The "Vladimir," a 12,000-ton Russian steamer, which brought refugees from the Crimea, will sail from Constantinople. If the venture is successful, the "Kherson," an 18,000-ton Russian steamer, will be placed in service. Present plans call for stops at Smyrna and Piræus.

FIGHTING THE TEREDO

Scientists of the University of California have been called into the gigantic fight against the teredo, or ship worm, which last year caused a damage of $15,000,000 alone by destroying waterfront structures and piling from Oleum to Martinez, on the Sacramento river.

In the effort to combat the ravages of these destructive worms, scientific knowledge and skill are being matched against the power of swarming numbers and the prolificacy of the teredo.

Dr. Charles Atwood Kofoid, in his report on the activities of the San Francisco Bay Marine Piling Committee of the American Wood-Preservers' Association, declares that a single infected pile in 25 feet of water and its 100 square feet of surface affords shelter for upwards of 150,000 teredos, each of which is capable of producing more than 2,000,000 larvae per year.

The committee of which Professor Kofoid is a member was appointed in June of last year as the first step in the offensive to meet the situation which had already become critical.

This pile worm, called the teredo navalis, first appeared in the Mare Island dikes in 1913-14, and has since spread upstream from that source as far as Antioch and Rio Vista. It has long been known in Europe as a destroyer of wharves, of dikes in Holland, and of wooden structures in brackish waters generally on European coasts.

Menacing all unprotected and untreated timber structures throughout San Francisco bay, the teredo sallies forth on its errand of destruction against pilings, docks, ferry slips, and wharves.

These worms, some of which are two or three feet in length, are so active in their work that it is possible to hear the rasping of their tools on the wood by placing the ear against the exposed top of the pile.

HOLLAND'S FOREIGN TRADE

Recent consular reports show Holland's imports during the year 1920 amounted to 3,333,000,000 guilders. Computed at the average exchange rate for the year, this would amount to exactly a billion of dollars. The imports for the previous year amounted to 2,826,000,000 guilders and at the normal exchange of 1919 would be equivalent to $1,130,000,000. The export trade during 1920 amounted to 1,702,000,000 guilders, and computed at the average exchange for the year would be equivalent to $567,000,000. During 1919 the export trade amounted to 1,141,000,000 guilders, and at the prevailing exchange of the year would be equal to $564,000,000. Gold and silver are not included in the above statistics.

The declared exportation at Amsterdam during 1920 amounted to 78,888,249 guilders; at Rotterdam, 18,024,189; at the Hague others, 2,189,963, or a total consignment to the United States of 99,866,099 guilders, as compared with a total of 86,264,000 in 1919.

Heligoland, the German fortress in the North Sea, is fast disappearing, and the Heligoland of 1890, the year in which Great Britain exchanged the island for rights on the East African coast, is reappearing. The change has been brought about by the inter-allied naval and military mission, which under the peace treaty is charged with the demolition of the military and naval works on the island. During the twenty-eight years the Germans were in possession they fortified it at a cost of $175,000,000. Artificial cliffs were constructed and the area of the island was increased by dredging the Elbe (at the mouth of which it stands) and depositing the material on Heligoland. Great gun emplacements were constructed, harbors were made for war craft, and later airship sheds were built. Now they have all gone. The great twelve-inch guns have been cut up into sections like round cheese, the emplacements destroyed by pick and powder, and the harbor works and the aircraft stations are being dismantled, and it is all being done by German labor under the superintendence of Allied officers.

The line of demarcation between trade unions that properly embrace men of different callings and those that should contain only men of a particular craft lies between those callings that are interchangeable, i. e., at which certain men work by turns, and those to which men are exclusively confined. In the former case the workers may, and in fact should, organize together; in the latter they should organize separately.

Working Rules for Unlicensed Members of the Deck Department

1. Any work for the safety of the vessel, her cargo, passengers and crew shall be done at any time without extra compensation.
2. Working hours on week days in port shall be from 8 A. M. to 12 M., and from 1 P. M. to 5 P. M. All unnecessary ship work performed before and after these hours shall be paid for at overtime rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for able seamen and Fifty-five Cents (55c) per hour for ordinary seamen, which is practically time and one-half.
3. All unnecessary work on Sundays or holidays specified in the Seamen's Law, to be paid at the same rate, viz: Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for able seamen and Fifty-five Cents (55c) for ordinary seamen.
4. Unnecessary work to mean scrubbing, cleaning brass, shifting the ship from one berth to another, sweeping, opening gangways, taking off hatches, handling slings, pennants and reeving off same.
5. When handling cargo the overtime rate to be the same as the organized longshoremen in that industry, but in no case shall it be less than Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for able seamen and ordinary seamen.
6. One-half hour to be allowed on vessels when coming through the Soo, overtime rate to be paid for time in excess of that.
7. When entering port one-half hour to be allowed for docking or tying up. All work in excess of this to be paid for at overtime rate.
8. Sea watches to be set at 12 noon on day of departure and to continue until noon on day of arrival.
9. All overtime of the deck crew should be checked by the officer on watch with a member of the crew, selected by the crew immediately after the work has been performed. Slips for same being made out showing the nature of the work, the time and place.

Labor News

There is a movement on foot to establish the cossack strikebreaking machine in the State of Wyoming.

The workers in all departments of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company have received a wage cut of 15 per cent. at Pueblo, Col.

The workers of the Wayne Knitting Mills at Fort Wayne, Ind., recently went out on strike in protest against a 25 per cent. reduction in wages.

At New Haven, Conn., a wage reduction of 10 per cent. which affects the pay envelopes of 6000 workers, has been declared by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company.

The National Association of Manufacturers appeals to the public to end the "buying strike." Trade unionists suggest that these union busters call on some injunction judge to issue one of his favorite "thou-shalt-not" commands.

Opposition to wage cuts has been registered by organized steam shovel and dredgemen of Baltimore, Md., at a meeting in that city. The unionists notified the employers that their plan will be resisted, as wages of steam shovelmen have increased but 4.28 per cent. over pre-war rates.

Decision to combat any movement for the open shop and to oppose wage decreases until the cost of living shall have been materially reduced was recently made at a session of the executive board of the United Shoe Workers of America at Rochester, N. Y.

Sixty-five per cent. of the women in the organized trades of New York City are out of work. Local employers have been working toward longer hours and a 40 per cent. decrease in wages, according to reports submitted at the regular monthly meeting of the Women's Trade Union League.

Iowa trade unionists are opposing the Kime bill, patterned after Allen's "can't-strike" law in Kansas. Employing interests are dangling three plums of $6000 a year each before legislators and others, who are led to believe that they would be "ideal" members of the Iowa industrial court.

At a meeting of employing printers of North Carolina an organization was perfected to oppose the 44-hour week in commercial shops, which the International Typographical Union will enforce. The employers were urged to contribute to a financial war chest.

The smartest attorneys in the pay of coal owners will assist in the prosecution of citizens of Matewan, West Virginia, who resisted an invasion of Baldwin-Feltz thugs last May, which resulted in the death of several persons. The gunmen were attempting to evict striking miners without due process of law.

Nearly five thousand men are out of work at Rockford, Ill., according to conservative estimates. Many of the larger factories are closed down or else working on part-time basis. Building operations are also at a standstill, throwing many hundreds out of work.

At Los Angeles, Calif., more than 50,000 moving picture actors and other workers are now unemployed. A 50 per cent. reduction in motion picture production is contemplated by the big film corporations. The following plants are now closed altogether: Famous Players, Lasky, Goldwyn, Fox, Metro, Vitagraph and Universal.

529½ BEACON STREET, SAN PEDRO, CAL.
Seafaring people who desire to take up navigation, San Pedro, situated in the sunny south, is the ideal place. Captain Frerichs has established a Navigation School here and under his undivided personal supervision students will be thoroughly prepared to pass successfully before the United States Steamboat Inspectors.
TERMS ARE REASONABLE

"SALVAGE"

SEAMEN, do you know what you are entitled to receive for services that you perform as volunteers in saving life and property at sea? If you don't, get a copy of Axtell's Book, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen." It covers this subject completely. Why should you sign papers for a runner from a lawyer's office, to collect what you have earned, if, by knowing the law, you can get it without doing so. Do you know that it is contrary to law and ethics of the profession for a lawyer to employ a runner or pay a runner or any other person any portion of his fee for getting business for him; that such an attorney is not regarded as fit to practice in the majority of States in the United States? In cases where a lawyer represents the whole crew, including officers and men, 15% is a fair charge, for collecting the money where it does not involve litigation. This book contains a complete digest of the Constitution of the United States and the Statutes of the United States pertaining to seamen, officers, consuls and owners, their rights and duties to themselves and to each other.

Overtime, personal injuries, wrongful discharge, waiting time, penalties are fully discussed in this little volume.

The actual cost of publication is 65c. The price is $1.00 in single copies. In orders of ten, a discount of 10% is allowed. In lots of twenty 20% is allowed, in lots of twenty-five 25% discount, in lots of one hundred 30% discount. In other words, in lots of one hundred there is 5% to cover cost of shipment.

The author, Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for the International Seamen's Union of America, in nine fights before the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Seamen's Act, Attorney for the Seamen's, Firemen's and Cooks' organizations in innumerable legal battles, is the leading authority on the law pertaining to seamen.

There are only 2000 copies of this book to be disposed of. They are going at the rate of 250 per week by mail order alone.

This is what Harry Olsen, who initiated Mr. Axtell into the Sailors' Union of the Pacific before he went on board the "West Calumb" as ordinary seaman in September, 1919, says:

> "Your book, 'Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen,' ought to be in the hands of every seaman. Knowing the law would settle a good many disputes which now arise. I will do my best to further the sale of the book and to start with I enclose P. O. Money Order for $20.00 for which kindly forward twenty books as soon as you can."

The following is quoted from a letter just received from Frank Manning, an American Seaman, who met with a serious accident on board an American ship. After stating the facts in his case and asking for assistance and advice, he says:

"Orunds Hospital, Copenhagen, Denmark, October 27, 1920.

"As I am not up in the Maritime Law whatever and do not pretend to know the least thing about it, it is no good for me to get into any arguments over here with these people because an uneducated person cannot cope with them. Well, Mr. Axtell, hoping to hear from you and hoping this finds you in good health, I am

"Respectfully yours,

FRANK MANNING,
Copenhagen, Denmark."

Every seaman should have one of these books, "Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen."

INFORMATION WANTED

Fred Klein, who left New Orleans on the S. S. "Lake Ferona" in March, 1920, is inquired for by his father, L. Klein. Address, care the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, 543 Bienville Street, New Orleans, La. Charles Thoresen, Agent.

Why Increased Taxes?

Every citizen of California is a taxpayer.

Taxation is, therefore, your concern.

You pay direct on property, or you pay indirect taxes through transportation, light and power costs, in interest rates, or in the cost of merchandise and rent.

So you want answers to these two questions:

1—How much money is actually needed by the State, with proper economy, and Why?

2—How shall this money be raised, and Why?

What the Tax Investigation and Economy League IS

Three hundred thousand of our people, security holders in public utilities, banks and other companies taxed for state purposes, together with an equal number of employees of these companies, are represented by the Tax Investigation & Economy League, which has been organized to learn and make public the facts about the actual needs of the State government. Non-partisan and non-political, this league invites the co-operation of every citizen.

Such Facts as These are Pertinent

Governor Johnson's	1915	budget	for	two	years	called for $36,000,000
Governor Stephens'	1919	budget	"	"	"	called for $47,000,000
Governor Stephens'	1921	budget	"	"	"	calls for $81,000,000

—An increase of $45,000,000 over the budget of six years ago—
—An increase of $34,000,000 over the budget of 2 years ago—
—An increase of $15,000,000 over the budget of two years ago even after we allow for all the appropriations and expenditures authorized by the people at the November elections.

It Is Time for Economy

For all of us the era of extravagance should be ended. That our present state organization costs too much and is full of unnecessary duplications, and unnecessary expenses, is agreed by state officials and the public alike.

We ought to know, and we want to know now, how much money is being wasted. We ought to know whether the new demands on our pocketbooks are necessary demands.

No Ad Valorem Tax

One thing is already sure. If the $15,000,000 now asked, in addition to the money voted last November is saved to the public,

—Our existing revenue will pay all our bills—we will have a surplus in the treasury two years hence—there will be no ad valorem tax.

The legislature is the authority that shall determine how much money shall be raised, and what rates of taxation are fair.
It is the privilege and duty of every citizen who has facts to present, and conclusions based on these facts, to assist his representatives in reaching a just decision.

You will be kept advised of the results of our investigation.
Your own views and conclusions are respectfully invited.

Domestic and Naval

A number of shipping companies and Chambers of Commerce have condemned Senator Jones' bill to transfer from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Labor the duty of enforcing navigation laws, insofar as they relate to persons employed in maritime occupations.

The steamship "Sussex," which ran on the West Breakwater in Limon Bay in the night of January 3, was pulled off in the morning of January 11 by the tugs "Corgona" and "Tavernilla" and the salvage steamer "Favorite," and towed to dock in Cristobal. Over 1,700 tons of cargo had been discharged into lighters from her No. 1 and No. 2 holds before she could be drawn off the rocks. The vessel must be overhauled before proceeding.

An electric light of 1,000,000 candle power is to be installed in the Santa Barbara lighthouse. The lamp itself is not 1,000,000 candle power, but the light is intensified by the use of refractors ingeniously cut and placed. In clear weather the light will not be visible any farther than the old oil lamp, which shines twenty miles. The light is 178 feet above sea level and twenty miles is the horizon limit. But in thick or foggy weather the new light, according to Captain Harry Rhodes, lighthouse superintendent, will be visible two or three miles in place of one mile, the limit of the oil lamp's beams.

Four San Francisco-built destroyers, the "Shirk," "Wood," "Kidder" and "Yarborough," are to join the Pacific destroyer squadrons based at San Diego, Calif., early in February, as announced by Commander Milton Davis, commander of the reserve destroyer divisions, Pacific fleet. All of these vessels will be attached to Division 44. The new destroyer "Sloat," another San Francisco-built boat, has already arrived from Mare Island. Carrying a number of reserve officers, the destroyer "La Vallette" is slated for a cruise to Manzanillo, Mazatlan and Acapulco. The destroyer "Woodbury" has been assigned to duty as a torpedo training ship. This vessel will be used exclusively in training reserve officers and men in firing torpedoes. It will make cruises to the drill grounds about twice a month for this purpose.

The British steamship "Bahia Castillo" arrived at Cristobal on December 28 from London, via Bermuda and Kingston, bound for Sydney and Melbourne with 59 first-class, 170 second-class, and 288 third-class passengers, of whom the greater part are young Englishwomen who are the wives or fiancées of Colonial soldiers and are going out to Australia to make their homes. There are 306 women, 85 children under 16 years of age, and 126 men among the passengers. After clearing the Canal the "Bahia Castillo" developed trouble with the packing ring in the stern tube around the starboard propeller shaft, with considerable leakage into the shaft alley, and returned to Balboa, where she went into dry dock on January 3. New rings were made at Balboa shops, the springs which hold them in place were renewed, and the vessel sailed again in the morning of January 9. During their stay many of the passengers were entertained in the homes of Canal employees.

News from Abroad

Ex-service men raided cafes and restaurants at Montreal, dispersing without disorder after meals had been served to them. The city has decided to serve free meals to the unemployed.

A recent report from Assistant Trade Commissioner Donald L. Breed of Prague, says a contract has been made between the Skoda Works at Pilsen and Rumania for the building of 80 locomotives and repairing of 500.

A London dispatch to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce states that the steamer "Orani," from Hull to San Francisco, which was previously reported ashore off Humber River, has been floated and has proceeded on the voyage. The damage, if any, was not learned.

The South American trade, which has been dull, has been further hampered by the closing of the nitrate mines in Chile, according to advices to W. R. Grace & Co. Not one mine has been working since January 1 because of the lack of demand for the mineral. Since nitrate forms the principal export of the west coast of South America, shipping is severely hit.

Among the handicaps to the development of trade between the United States and Poland are the irregularity and slowness of postal communication and the lack of direct cable connection. With a view to offsetting these difficulties it was planned to erect a powerful wireless station at Warsaw, and negotiations to this end were started some time ago. A cable from Trade Commissioner Van Norman, at Warsaw, states that the contract for the wireless is to be awarded to an American concern.

British coal output for the year 1920 approximated 231,000,000 tons compared to 229,000,000 tons in 1919. During the five weeks from November 13 to December 18, which constituted a test period of output to determine the right of the miners to higher wages, the weekly production averaged 5,215,160 tons. This is at the rate of 260,758,000 tons annually, allowing for two weeks of holidays in the year. On this basis of output British miners are entitled to receive during this month an increase of 1 shilling and 6 pence per day in addition to the 2 shillings per day granted in adjustment of the recent strike. The January wage rate, therefore, will be 3 shillings and 6 pence per day above the prestrike wage, which averaged 18 shillings and 3 pence per day.

Mobs, such as formed during the revolution in the streets of Paris, continue to gather in Vienna. Shouting threats, singing martial airs and rumbling menacingly, the mobs follow wagons on which are erected great replicas of gallows. Labor organizations threaten to become involved. From the temper of the crowds which march through the streets the labor threat may be followed by action. Flight of profiteers left many stores closed. Vienna is at present more than ever a city of contrasts. While thousands of starving persons parade the streets with their gruesome talisman, hundreds wine and dine in something like the old splendor. Those with money spend it recklessly, and smart dining places are filled with men careless of their kronen, accompanied by handsomely gowned and jeweled women.

Taylor's Nautical Academy
Established 1888
Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.
THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.
The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.
There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS SUMMARIZED

Abstracts of Committee and Delegates Report

Following is the fourth installment of an epitome of convention proceedings, obtainable from data furnished by Comrade Silver, manager of the Journal, who was one of the Pacific Coast delegates to the International Convention:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AUDIT

Delegate Cartledge, chairman of the committee, reported as follows:

To the Twenty-fourth Convention of the International Seamen's Union of America.

Comrades:

After careful examination of all bills, books and accounts for the fiscal year from January 12, 1920, to January 15, 1921, your committee on audit can report that we have found all receipts and disbursements properly accounted for and find same to be correct.

In connection with the same, we take great pleasure in complimenting the secretary-treasurer on the careful and highly efficient manner in which he has kept the books and accounts for the year ending 1920.

We beg further to report that, in answer to a telegram sent to the First National Bank of Chicago, requesting balance on hand by Secretary-Treasurer T. A. Hanson, we received a reply on January 12, 1921, as follows:

Telegram

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 12, 1921.

W. L. Cartledge, Chairman,
Committee on Audit,
Intl. Seamen's Union Convention,
Hotel Walton, Phila, Pa.

Balance requested amounts to thirty-seven thousand fifty dollars, seventy-one cents.

First National Bank.

The difference in the balance on hand of the bank and the secretary-treasurer's financial statement is $14.80, which is a payment of per capita tax from the Fishtrap, Pile Drivers and Web Workers' Union of Bellingham, not deposited in the bank before closing of the report, hence the difference, but same has been verified and found correct.

(Signed)
W. L. CARTLEDGE, Chairman.
S. A. SILVER, Secretary.

Committee—O. Christiansen, John R. Folan, William Ross. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS

Delegate Rosenberg, for the committee, reported as follows:

SEAMEN'S HANDBOOK FOR SHORE LEAVE

Third Day's Proceedings

Your committee commends the information contained in "Seamen's Handbook for Shore Leave" to the attention of all seamen. This booklet, issued by the Social Service Bureau of the United States Merchant Marine, is a handy reference guide for all ports of the world. Affiliated unions are hereby advised to take such steps as they deem advisable to get this booklet distributed among their members. We further recommend that the thanks of the convention be hereby extended to Mrs. Alice S. Howard (Mrs. Henry Howard) for the painstaking labor given in the compilation of this valuable handbook.

The report of the committee was adopted.

On Resolution No. 22, printed in the third days' proceedings, your committee submits the following substitute:

RESOLUTION NO. 22

Whereas, Warren K. Billings and Thomas J. Mooney, now serving life sentences in the penitentiary, did not have fair trials as guaranteed under the laws of the State of California; and

Whereas, The exposures of the star witness for the prosecution, Oxman, and the exposures and confessions of other witnesses in these trials, also the late confession of Policeman Draper Hand, showing the official frame-up to convict Billings and Mooney, a frame-up subversive of the principles of law and fairness—all cry aloud for action to secure new trials for these men; and

Whereas, The Governor of California steadfastly refuses to exercise his official prerogative to take needed steps to enable these men to have a new trial, therefore be it

Resolved, By the International Seamen's Union of America, in convention assembled, that we hereby ask the prosecuting attorney and the Grand Jury of San Francisco, Calif., to take measures toward securing new trials for Billings and Mooney.

The committee recommends the adoption of the substitute resolution.

The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

RESOLUTION NO. 14

Submitted by Gus Ericson

Whereas, The International Movement of the Seamen has increased by leaps and bounds; and

Whereas, Practically all the Maritime Unions of the world have weekly or monthly periodicals, giving a very good understanding of the working conditions and similar matters that are and should be of vital interest to all seamen. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Convention of the International Union of America instruct the secretary to communicate with the principal seamen's unions of the world and procure literature from these organizations, to be distributed to all the branches of the International Seamen's Union of America, for the best benefit to the membership along educational and international lines.

The committee recommends concurrence in the resolution.

The recommendation of the committee was adopted.

DUPLEX PRINTING COMPANY CASE

Duplex Printing Press Co., Appellants vs.
Emil J. Deering and Others

The report of the President dealing with this case was referred to your committee, together with Appendix 13. We find that this is a six to three decision. The decision was delivered by Justice Pitney. The dissenting opinion was submitted by Justices Brandeis, Holmes and Clark.

As we understand the decision of the court, it holds that the Clayton Act instead of limiting the Sherman Anti-Trust Law has extended it so that litigants may now have redress which before the passage of the Clayton Act was denied them. The decision holds that the exemptions provided by the Clayton Act only covers those who are direct parties to the dispute. Thus the exemptions seem to be applicable to the crew of a vessel who may therefore strike, picket and boycott, but it does not cover the organization of which the crew happens to be members and so brings the organization, if it shall intervene, under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law as defined in the case of Lawlor vs. Loewe and in other decisions. This is as we believe, properly and strongly criticized in the minority opinion, but we must fully realize that it is the decision with which we really have to deal. It is a decision which strips us and other workmen of the protection which we with other workmen believed to be granted to us by the passage of the Clayton Act. The real vice of the decision, however, is that it takes no cognizance of that part of Section 6 of the Clayton Act which reads as follows:

> "That the labor power of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."

The purpose of this definition of what the labor power of a human being is not, was to remind the courts of the real definition of property. Such definition excludes the labor power of a human being, because such labor power can not be disposed of by sale, inheritance or bequest. It is inherent in a human being and cannot be separated from such human being except by death. The failure of the court to take cognizance of and give effect to the part of the statue just quoted, is in our opinion so fatal to the whole decision that it is a clear miscarriage of justice and is so destructive of the freedom of an individual citizen that those specifically involved in this case ought to appeal to the court for a rehearing, to the end that the meaning of the above quoted statute and its bearing upon this case may be properly argued and considered by the court. The decision itself is so destructive of the ownership of property by the working people, that the reasonable tendency will be that the working people either will strip themselves of such property as they have or will cease to be thrifty and thus to accumulate property or both.

Your committee recommends that the International Seamen's Union of America, through its executive board, offers to co-operate with unions directly interested in any effort to obtain a rehearing of this case or in any appeal to Congress for needed changes in the law.

We further recommend that the decision and the dissenting opinion in this case, together with comments thereon by President Furuseth, be inserted in the proceedings as an appendix.

President Furuseth again emphasized the gravity of the decision and urged upon the members the necessity of acquainting themselves with its details and of lending their every effort to the movement for a rehearing or an amendment of the law.

The report of the committee was adopted.

On the same subject the committee submitted the following resolution and recommended its adoption:

RESOLUTION NO. 24

Whereas, The Duplex Printing Press decision here, the court order to dissolve the French Confederation of Labor, and other information coming from other countries, strongly indicates a world-wide purpose to destroy organizations of labor by abolishing the rights of combination, of free speech, of free press, of locomotion, and of asylum, and

Whereas, These rights are not only inherent in our system, through the Declaration of Independence, but are specifically protected by our Bill of Rights, National and State; and

Whereas, Such reactionary measures would, if adopted here in the United States, destroy the foundations upon which the polity of the United States is built; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the International Seamen's Union of America, that we issue the most solemn warning, and call upon all real Americans to come together in defense of freedom under American ideals as laid down in the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights, to the end that human freedom shall not perish from the earth.

Delegate Rosenberg spoke briefly in support of the resolution, emphasizing the necessity for action.

The resolution was unanimously adopted by the convention.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ORGANIZATION

Delegate Conway, for the committee, submitted a partial report, as follows:

RESOLUTION NO. 5

Submitted by Delegation Sailors' Union of the Great Lakes

Whereas, The need for co-operation between the organizations of Deck Officers, Engineers and the I. S. U. of A. is now apparent to all, and

Whereas, This need may possibly be overlooked or underestimated, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a committee be elected by this convention to meet the representatives of the Masters, Mates and Pilots and Marine Engineers Benevolent Association, for the purpose of bringing about this co-operation which should result in bringing about the highest standard of skill in the operation of ships.

Your committee recommends concurrence in the resolution.

Delegates Grange, O'Brien, Milligan, Anderson, Rosenberg, and President Furuseth supported the resolution, while Delegates Griffin and Nelson took the opposite position on the question. In the discussion offered by those supporting the resolution, it was brought out that it did not provide for an alliance with the Masters, Mates and Pilots and Engineers, but simply for the appointment of a committee to discuss the feasibility of having a general understanding and meeting on some common ground.

The delegates from the Pacific Coast explained how the Seafarers' Council on that coast, which includes representatives of the sailors, firemen, cooks, masters, mates, pilots and engineers had worked out successfully through meeting at regular intervals and through having an identity of interest.

President Furuseth explained the conditions of the maritime law which would prevent putting into operation certain measures suggested by some of the delegates in their remarks along the lines of [illegible] between the masters, mates and pilots, the engineers and [illegible]. He stated that something could be accomplished, however, by all of these agencies getting together at intervals and discussing questions of general policy and of [illegible] by using the influence and power they have whenever they possibly can without risking their licenses in so doing.

Delegate O'Brien moved as an amendment to the report of the committee that a committee of [illegible] be appointed. The amendment was seconded, and the report of the committee as [illegible].

RESOLUTION NO. 8

Submitted by H. P. Griffin, D. E. Grange and R. T. Kaizer

[illegible] that [illegible] be granted to the M. C. and S. Union of the Great Lakes for the year 1921.

Your committee recommends that two organizers be granted, and we further recommend that the Seafarers' Union of the Great Lakes make a special effort to organize the steamers of their union, especially during the close on the lakes. The committee believes that the [illegible] should [illegible] to the [illegible] expenses [illegible].

Delegate Conway made a brief statement in support of the report, and stated that while the Seafarers' Union of the Great Lakes had made some mistakes, the fact remained that it was an organization struggling for its existence. He emphasized the fact that the committee had made recommendations to the effect that the Cooks' Union make an effort to reduce expenses at certain times of the year, and that unless they did so, the executive board had the power to discontinue the services of the organizers.

The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

RESOLUTION NO. 10

Submitted by Robert Farmer

Whereas, The President of the I. S. U. of A. is permanently located in Washington, D. C., and

Whereas, The duties of the secretary-treasurer are extensive and demand all the time he can give to the performance of his duty, and

Whereas, The officers of the I. S. U. of A. ought to be in closest touch with the legislative power of the U. S. A., as far as labor laws and maritime laws in particular, are concerned, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the office of the I. S. U. of A. be moved from Chicago, Ill., to Washington, D. C., so the president and secretary-treasurer can work together from the same place and office for the best interest of I. S. U. of A. as a whole.

Your committee non-concurs in the resolution to remove the headquarters to Washington and would recommend, in lieu thereof, that whenever the president must be absent from Washington for such length of time as shall make a substitute necessary, he shall call to Washington such member of the executive board as may be able to serve, and in case no such member of the executive board is available, the executive board may select some member for such duty.

The recommendation of the committee was unanimously adopted.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

"Continued Antagonism to the Seamen's Act"

Referring to that part of the President's report referred to us and especially to the extra or additional clauses being inserted in the articles, we desire to call special attention to each one of these clauses and to warn the membership against ignoring any such extra clauses whatsoever. Some of these clauses are nothing but a repetition of the actual law as it now stands. Some of them become so near to inconsistency with the real law that it will take a judge after a proper trial to determine whether it is inconsistent with existing law or not. Some of them deal purely with matters of safety and while as such are oil carrying vessels they are not seriously objectionable. They are not needed, because the master may make such rules with reference to lights and fire as shall appear necessary for the protection of the lives on board and the property under his charge, but there are others which seek through consent of the individual seaman to get away from the law itself and from admiralty decisions based upon the court, "Consulate of the Sea," "Scroll of Oleron," "Laws of Visby" and even of the Rhodian law.

Shipowners who impose these extra agreements upon the seamen in their service evidently do so in the hope of having the agreement so signed taking the place of the law through the force that some judge may assign to such special clauses basing their decisions upon the principles of the common law.

Of course all these paragraphs are ostensibly based upon the following, found on page 63, Navigation Laws 1915:

"7th. In regulations as to conduct on board and as to fires, short allowance of provisions, or other lawful punishments for misconduct which may be sanctioned by Congress or authorized by the Secretary of Commerce and not contrary to or not otherwise provided for by law, which the parties agree to adopt."

Dealing more specifically with some of the most dangerous of these clauses, that are of such nature as to be broadly construed, they will deprive the seamen not only of the protection which the law itself gives to him but also of any possible redress, because he is through them deprived of his right to appeal to the Court of Admiralty. One of them goes so far as to make the seamen agree that to disobey any of the extra provisions inserted shall constitute disobedience to lawful command. One clause leaves it to the option of the Master in what port to terminate the voyage. It may be at any port on the eastern coast of the United States, in Maine or Texas or any port between. The seaman may be held by the vessel and be compelled to go with her from the port where the cargo is discharged to any bunkering or dry-docking port at the Master's option. But this is by no means the worst of these extra legal insertions. The one provision found in nearly all of these insertions to the effect that the Shipping Commissioner shall act as arbitrator of any or all disputes and that such decision as he may make shall be final is intended to deprive the seaman of the right to appeal to the courts. The Shipping Commissioners Act gives no such power to the Commissioner, unless there is a submission in writing and such submission is made after the dispute has arisen and not prior to entering into the agreement. It has no right in the articles. I have discussed this clause with the Commissioner of Navigation and he admitted that it is not strictly according to law; but if the men are not willing to sign such clause, they need not. This is nothing short of inviting the men to strike to get the law enforced. If the seaman does this all the blame is heaped on him.

Perhaps the worst of these clauses is the one which provides that the men may upon the owners' will, be transferred from the vessel on which they have shipped to any other vessel belonging to the same firm. This changes the fundamental concept of the seaman's service. Under existing law he serves the vessel, he signs on the vessel.

He is to fulfil his engagement or contract with the vessel, unless she be transferred to some other national flag. He does not know the owner. His duty is to the vessel, not to the owner. His remedy is from the vessel while she is afloat and only from the owner when the vessel is no more. The seaman is bound to the vessel and the vessel is bound to him under the common hazard. This new agreement binds the seaman to the owner. He will be working for the owner of the vessel, not for the vessel. His grievance will be against the owner. His remedy is to come from the owner. But the owner may be in New York and the vessel in San Francisco or Hongkong or Antwerp. The old principle is that "the shipping articles carry in their womb the entire law maritime," and that any special clauses inserted into the articles will be scanned with care. These insertions into the articles—leaving it to the Master's opinion where the vessel shall go, where the voyage shall end, that the Shipping Commissioner shall have judicial powers, and that the seamen are to serve the owner of the vessel, and not the vessel, have their origin in England. They are the inventions of the International Shipping Federation Ltd. and were imposed upon the seaman when he was helpless to resist.

Your committee recommends that a protest against these insertions be submitted to the Secretary of Commerce and to the Shipping Board.

Second, that when committees meet with employers for the purpose of entering into agreements to be made part of the agreements to prohibit insertions in the articles of clauses not specifically agreed to at the conference.

Third, that the separate subdivisions of the International in which these clauses are used should take up these separate clauses and thoroughly discuss them in the meetings, to the end that seamen may be properly acquainted with them and their dangers.

Fourth, that where there is no agreement or where the agreements will justify such action, we recommend that the seaman should refuse to sign any articles in which such clauses are inserted.

The recommendations of the committee were adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Delegate O'Brien, chairman of the committee, reported as follows:

Your Committee on International Relations begs leave to report its findings and recommendations on the following questions, referred to it for consideration:

(President's Report)

The committee endorses that part of the President's report on the International Seafarers' Federation which reads as follows:

"You will see from the report that the Secretariat, Executive Council, of the Seafarers' Federation meets four times a year, and that the Federation pays the expenses of the attendance of one delegate for each country; but there seems no good reason why we should send such delegate more than once in each year. I believe that we should send one delegate to the Secretariat meeting to be held in August this year."

We recommend that this convention elect one delegate to represent this organization in the meeting of the Secretariat to be held in August, 1921.

Second, we recommend that question of representation in International Seafarers' Federation at Geneva, Switzerland, in August, 1922, be referred to our next convention.

The recommendation of the committee was adopted.

SECRETARY-TREASURER'S REPORT

International Seafarers' Federation

Your committee, recognizing the impossibility of sending delegates to Europe without incurring expense, and knowing that it is necessary for us and for the seamen of the world to be in close touch with each other in order that our interests may be safeguarded, endorses the Secretary-Treasurer's report and recommends that our per capita tax to the Seafarers' Federation remain on the same basis.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Seamen's Law Defense

Three marine organizations have created the seafarers' council to protect the La-Follette seamen's law. The organizations are the International Seamen's union, the National Association of Masters, Mates and Pilots and the National Engineers' Benevolent association. A committee has developed a program which includes the setting up of a local seafarers' council, or triple alliance, in each of the principal ports of the country.

"If we do not misjudge existing tendencies," says the committee, "we shall shortly have to meet the most serious efforts on the part of the shipping interests to so change the laws governing the personnel, the vessels and inspection service as to place us in a very difficult and disagreeable position.

"We believe that laws injurious to the merchant marine will be proposed. We believe that by working together and making the best use of our technical and other knowledge, we may be able to either prevent such legislation or to so modify it as to cause it to do the least hearm.

"We believe that the merchant marine service needs further laws for its protection and development; that the United States inspection service needs greater freedom from shipowners' influence in order to properly perform its very difficult and, to the public, most important duties. We believe that by co-operation we may be able to assist in these matters.

"We know that certain very inportant provisions of the seamen's act have failed to effectuate. We believe that by such co-operation we can improve upon the situation and thereby assist in bringing the operating wage cost of foreign competitors up to the American standard."

Solidarity Not Dead

The world war has not permanently divided workers in the opposing nations, according to this story, printed in the Cotton Factory Times of Manchester, England:

"Beneath the surface controversies that seem to rend asunder the whole international labor movement there exists a reality of solidarity, an example of which has just been furnished by the shipwrights' strike in this country. The shipwrights, it will be remembered; struck against the attempt of the employers' federation to reduce wages 12 shillings a week and the strike still continues. The employers turned to German yards to do the work for them at rates which the low exchange would make cheap. But at this point the German Ship Joiners' union came in. Acting through the International Wood Workers' union they placed an embargo on any blackleg work from Britain. The ship "Themistocles" of the Aberdeen line was sent to Hamburg for repairs, but the German union prohibited the work. This practical solidarity is going to matter more for the future Anglo-German relations than any amount of displomatic conferences."

Employers Favor Divided Action

Up to a few weeks ago big business insisted that the labor provisions of the Cummins-Esch law was the last word in statesmanship. Justice to the railroad employes was the glad refrain, and the public joined in shouts of joy, for "our leading citizens" spoke.

Now big business has been blocked in an attempt to smash these labor provisions, which have been in operation less than a year.

When big business found the law interfered with arbitrary wage reductions railroad managers were ordered to scrap it by rushing the railway labor board off its feet.

"We are on the verge of bankruptcy!" they shrieked.

But the favorite device—scaring the people—has failed.

The proposal is so crude, so lacking in the methods of an artistic Captain Kidd, that no one, outside of office boys for big business, has been found who is courageous enough to defend it.

The law provides regular and orderly methods to change wages or working conditions, but big business favored direct action—they demanded that the law be set aside and they be given a free hand.

And these direct actionists are responsible for the law that they would now ignore because it does not suit their purpose.

No propaganda ever equaled that conducted by the railroads and allied interests for the Cummins-Esch law, for "can't-strike" laws and for higher freight and passenger rates.

They succeeded in two instances, but labor defeated their plan to make strikes criminal. The present railway labor board —two representatives of employes, railroads and the public—was agreed to.

The sincerity of the railroads is now shown in their attempt to defeat the purpose and the spirit of the law.

No group of employers ever made such a sudden about-face, or so quickly ignored a public opinion they created. Neither did the defenders of such a group so quickly muffle brass-throated notes that were pitched in defense of "can't-strike" legislation and higher rates.

If it were necessary to prove the need for solidarity among railroad employes, reaction again presents the evidence.

Wages and Prices

"Labor is the human side of industry and must be considered in the terms of men and women and children," says J. R. Clynes, of London, England, trade unionist and member of parliament, in discussing wages and prices in a local newspaper. Clynes was British food controller during a portion of the world war.

"Sacrifice can not be carried far by the families of wage earners," he said. "Life standards must be maintained.

"Prices were raised very soon after the war began, and long prior to any demand for increased wages. Indeed, that demand arose only because the pressure of ascend-

Legislation which would prescribe the manner in which all civilian guards in Germany are to be disbanded is now being drafted by the Ministry of the Interior. After being submitted to the Cabinet the measure will be presented to the Reichstag for approval.

A Buenos Aires dispatch states that two persons were killed and a number of others were wounded in a recent clash between laborers and police at Villaguay, province of Entre Rios. The police, the account states, resisted an attempt by the laborers to release an imprisoned comrade. Further labor troubles are expected to arise.

German sailors thrown out of employment by the delivery to the allies of the German merchant fleet are to be reimbursed to the extent of $14,292,000. Two-thirds of the sum is to be paid by the shipowners and one-third by the Government. An agreement to this effect was reached at Hamburg on Feb. 4 after two years' negotiations.

Martial law has been proclaimed in the industrial districts of Bohemia. Over 50,000 miners in the Kladno colliers are on strike and have established a soviet, confiscated large estates and are in undisputed control of this district. Labor in German Bohemia has declared its solidarity with the Prague movement and a general strike has been initiated.

Reports from Amsterdam state nearly 8000 of the 10,800 members of the Diamond Workers' Union there are idle and the bottom seems to have fallen out of the world's diamond market. Experts in precious stones in that city and in Antwerp say an era of financial strengency has supplanted the epoch of free spending to such an extent that precious stones have become a drug on the market, although prices are being maintained.

Eight hundred trade union delegates met in London, January 27, to consider unemployment problems. They approved the Labor party program, which includes government work or maintenance for all; prohibition of overtime in the various crafts; road building and other public works; reduction in military commitments, and peace with Russia. A committee was appointed to present these demands to the government and the convention adjourned until February 23, when it was said a strike may be considered if the government fails to act.

Judge Beeby, president of the New South Wales board of trade, has ruled in favor of a 44-hour week in the building trades. "The adoption of a 44-hour working week in the building trades group of industries," he said, "will not seriously injure the trade of any of the said industries or result in serious public mischief or a sudden increase in the cost of building operations. There will be some addition to building cost resulting from the sudden introduction of a universal 44-hour week, but some of this can be recouped by improved methods of production and by the creation of a more intimate industrial relationship between management and workers. Better organization of the industry and improvement in plant and methods will make up for most of the decrease in production flowing directly from the shorter working week."

Painless Parker

and His Name

By Painless Parker

I AM the man who made the name "Painless" famous in dentistry. All over the country there are dentists who have put the word "Painless" in front of their names, and they all got the cue from me. Whether they are able to do painless dentistry as successfully as I have done is another matter.

In all our twenty-eight Parker Dental Offices painless methods are employed. My associates have been trained to use them, and really they have become so skilled that I have to hustle to keep up with them.

Anybody who neglects his teeth because of the fear of pain is fooling himself. You can't realize what can be done without hurting until you actually have some dental work done the E. R. Parker System way.

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

Pacific Coast Marine

A London dispatch to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce states that a telegram from Barcelona has been received saying that the steamer "Fresno" was on fire and probably about 600 tons damaged to the extent of about 50 per cent. Some of the cargo was discharged on the dock.

A reduction of $4 has been announced by Struthers & Dixon on the canned fish rates from Pacific Coast ports to the Orient. The former rate of $16 has been slashed to $12. Salmon and sardines have been taken out of the regular tariff quotations, according to the freight department of Struthers & Dixon and given a rating of their own.

W. R. Grace & Co. have chartered the American schooner "George E. Billings," 1105 tons, to carry lumber from the Columbia River to Callao for $25. The schooner "H. K. Hall," 1105 tons, has been chartered by J. J. Moore & Co. to carry redwood from Humboldt Bay to Sydney at $20. The British steamer "City of Vancouver," 3525 tons, has been chartered to load wheat from Portland to the United Kingdom by Kerr, Gifford & Co.

Numerous applications have been filed for the position of traveling inspector of hulls and boilers for this district. The vacancy occurred, following the resignation of Captain Joseph J. Meaney some months ago. Among those named as likely candidates is Captain Joseph Liddy. Other well-known shipmasters are mentioned as appointees to the position. Captain Meaney resigned to assume command of the freighter "West Inskip," which is at present lying in port at Boston.

On March 9 the 10,000-ton freighter "Eurymachus" of the Blue Funnel line will sail from Liverpool for San Francisco direct. The "Eurymachus" is one of the fastest vessels in operation between Europe and San Francisco, and is expected to make the direct run via the canal in thirty days. On her last entry the craft brought a shipment of $10,000,000 in gold and silver bullion from the Orient. The "Eurymachus" will clear for the return trip April 9 for Liverpool and Glasgow.

The tanger "Gargoyle," 10,000 tons, built by the Moore shipyards for the Vacuum Oil Company, completed her trial trip and was pronounced in good condition by officials of the oil company and those representing the builders who made the trip to Point Reyes. The "Gargoyle" behaved very well in her run up the coast and developed a speed approximating 14 knots. She is built to carry about 75,000 barrels of oil. The Vacuum Company has not announced where the first run will be.

Eastern newspapers and shipping publications are profuse in their praise of the new Shipping Board 535 liner "Hawkeye State," assigned to the Matson Navigation Company to run between Baltimore, San Francisco and Honolulu. The vessel recently made a remarkable showing on her trial run at Baltimore. One New York paper declared that the "Hawkeye State" was the largest vessel built for the Shipping Board and "probably the finest passenger ship ever built in the United States."

Under date of February 2, Chairman Benson announced that the agreement between the United States Shipping Board, and crews of Government merchant ships on the Pacific Coast, would be terminated after thirty days. The termination is to be preceded by a conference to be held at Washington, D. C., for the purpose of negotiating a new wage and working condition agreement. All masters, mates, deck officers, foremen, seamen, and other employes on Government merchant ships on the Pacific are affected.

Broken in four pieces the steamer "Klamath," which recently smashed upon the rocky coast near Del Mar landing, is rapidly being beaten into small pieces, according to Capt. Cecil Brown, marine surveyor, who returned from the scene of the wreck. According to Brown, who acts for the underwriters, the vessel's hull is filled with holes. She has broken aft, amidships and forward. Brown succeeded in taking all the small removable articles from the wreck. He intends making an effort to salve the engines from the steamer within the next two weeks.

Travel demands to and from the Hawaiian Islands are much greater than in the past, probably 25 per cent. greater, according to officials of the Matson Navigation Company, and bookings on the Matson Line are being severely taxed for this summer, despite the addition of the "Hawkeye State" and "Buckeye State" to the fleet. Reservations are already being made into 1922 upon special requests, but the company declares that thus far all immediate demands have been met. Travel from Honolulu to San Francisco is particularly heavy.

The tanker "Dilworth," which was turned back to the Shipping Board upon her arrival at San Francisco from Prince Rupert, has been taken over by Struthers & Dixon, agents for the Shipping Board tankers on this coast. She will be held here until a cargo offers. The tankers are used for carrying fuel oil to tanks in Manila and Shanghai, from where Shipping Board oil burners are "bunkered." As the tanks are all full at present, there is nothing for the "Dilworth" to do but wait until oil is needed. She will not be used in the molasses trade, as was believed, according to Struthers & Dixon.

The first of the fleet of eleven German sailing ships bought by the Robert Dollar Company from the British Admirality, to whom they were assigned by the terms of the peace treaty, arrived in San Francisco recently in tow of the steamer "Providencia." The "Hans" is one of the few surviving sailing vessels of the type which made the American flag famous half a century ago in every port in the world. She was built to carry heavy freight in the days before the steamer was perfected and although she has been in continuous service for many years, with the exception of the time she was interned at Santa Rosalia during the war, she seems to be in fair condition.

Advices to the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce received recently are that the motorship "Balcatta" was towed into Talcahuano, bottom up, on February 10. The records in the Chamber of Commerce show that the "Balcatta," from San Francisco November 27, struck on Lobitas rocks, near Talara bay, got off, and proceeded to Paita, arriving there December 29. She was examined and was to proceed to Callao December 31. She arrived at Callao January 6, leaking slightly, with her machinery damaged. A later report stated that she was leaking at the rate of twenty-four inches an hour.

Shipping interests have petitioned for the installation of Government wireless apparatus at all stations of the coast guard along the Pacific coast, as a further means of quick assistance to vessels in distress or for protection of life on wrecked vessels. Wireless sets at each coast guard station would permit the life savers to pick up "S O S" calls and render prompt aid. District Superintendent of the Coast Guard Captain Peter Jensen states that the installation of wireless equipment at these coast guard stations would be invaluable. It has been pointed out that the government has much wireless equipment at coast navy yards which was purchased during the war and which could be utilized.

Due to the fact that a regular traffic in stowaways is suspected by the officials of the Matson Line, steps are to be initiated for abatement of the evil. Hereafter stowaways who attempt to go to San Francisco from Hawaii on vessels of the Matson line will be transferred to passing steamers on the high seas and sent back to Honolulu. This plan was announced recently when officials of the Matson Company declared they had uncovered a plot to bring Orientals as well as Hawaiians into this port by stowing them aboard their steamers. As soon as a stowaway is discovered on one of the steamers, wireless calls will be sent broadcast and the nearest westbound Matson vessel will go to the scene and take the stowaway to the islands. It is said that men placing stowaways aboard the steamers have asked as high as $80 a head.

The motor-ship "Siam," which caused a flurry of excitement on the coast because of her race against time to meet a time charter at Vancouver involving $45,000, which expired February 15, arrived at Vancouver two days before expiration of the time limit. The "Siam" was chartered to carry grain from Vancouver to the United Kingdom. She came all the way from Europe in ballast to meet the charter time limit, arriving at San Francisco last week and being met by a crew of sixty carpenters, who began immediately the work of lining her. In the "Siam" is reflected the condition of the charter market all over the world. It is rather unusual to bring a ship half way across the world in ballast to take on a cargo for the ports from which she came.

The "Wolverine State," second of the 502's to be delivered to the Pacific Mail for the Manila-East India service, has arrived in San Francisco. An innovation in the Pacific Mail passenger service was made on the trip in the form of a daily bulletin of ship happenings distributed to everyone on board. It was edited by Poggi and proved popular among the passengers. The paper told of the doings aboard ships and also loosed some secrets which are ordinarily circulated among the passengers by word of mouth. Captain Porta suggested the idea in order that rumors might be carried authentically. Poggi's publication carried the news of the ship and advised the passengers of the things which were to be sighted. This service was in addition to the regular wireless bulletins that are a part of the regular service.

JUSTICE MUST PREVAIL

The Preparedness Day bomb cases continue to engage attention in all parts of the civilized world. They have developed into a serious problem, demanding immediate attention and righteous solution. As tides of prejudice and intolerance recede, the slime of the most sinister conspiracy in modern times is revealed. Exposure upon exposure, and confession after confession, has succeeded in producing utter collapse of the fraudulent mass of evidence upon which the cases were fabricated.

The expose of Oxman and confessions of Estelle Smith have been closely followed by impeachment of the testimony given by the Edeau women, which was further discredited by the confessions of Draper Hand, who was one of the police investigators connected with the trials.

Recently Richard W. Smith, who was also connected with the police department investigations, disclosed the physical impossibility of the defendants' guilt, by statements that proved the Mooneys far removed from the scene at the time of the explosion. He also corroborated their alibi, and added the charges that Fickert knew of the innocence of Tom and Rena Mooney before he prosecuted them for the Preparedness Day bomb deaths; inasmuch as he was with Smith when the latter identified the Mooneys as the couple he himself had seen on the roof of the Eilers Building, at a time which precluded the possibility of their participation in the outrage.

At the present time, as we go to press John McDonald, whose testimony ranked second in importance only to that of Oxman, is a burdensome responsibility to District Attorney Brady until such time as his confessions are properly recorded before the San Francisco Grand Jury. The unfortunate victim of narcotic habits was one of the deciding factors for conviction. With oppressive guilt upon his conscience, agitated by failure to receive the promised share of the $17,000 reward, he is now ready to lay bare his own inhuman part in the frame-up. He admits that his testimony at all the trials was false, and that he was coached and drilled to such extent that he almost believed his own despicable lies.

Mutual interests of certain social and political elements have succeeded in sustaining this diabolical travesty on justice in California. For sake of the integrity of our jurisprudence, if not for the commonest attributes of humanity, the ends of justice must be served. Those who wilfully persist in blocking the fulfilment of a fair and impartial trial are a menace to the happiness and welfare of our people. Let them take heed to themselves of the proverb that "the mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine."

PECULIAR ASPECTS

There is strong ground for belief that the general apathy displayed towards the unfair treatment accorded Mooney and Billings can be traced directly to the fact that a number of reputed leaders connected with the labor movement in San Francisco have manifested extreme enthusiasm in fastening the stigma of guilt upon all of the bomb case defendants from the very inception of investigations. Not only have a number of these "worthies" (?) failed to realize the enormity of their attitude, and the destructive effect of this colossal frame-up upon the progress and welfare of the labor movement, but they have never failed to avail themselves of every opportunity to give aid and comfort to the persecutors. All principles and human attributes seem to have died within them. Even at this late day, with every evidence of the frame-up exposed, machiavellian instincts seem to control from the circle which at one time was considered representative of labor's sentiments and ideas.

The Labor Clarion, an alleged labor paper, and official organ of the San Francisco Labor Council, recently unloaded the following choice editorial comment:

> Another sensation has been thrown to the public in the Mooney case by the publication of an alleged confession made by John MacDonald at Trenton, N. J., last Monday. In the alleged confession MacDonald is said to have sworn to a statement that he was coached in his testimony in the Mooney case by District Attorney Fickert and that he did not tell the truth. If the newspaper stories are true MacDonald has perjured himself in a very serious manner. If he did not tell the truth at the trial then he has been guilty of sending an innocent man to the penitentiary on perjured testimony. If he is not telling the truth now he is endeavoring to liberate a guilty man. In either event, if published stories are true, MacDonald should be in the penitentiary. It has been commonly reported since MacDonald's first appearance in the case that he is a victim of the use of narcotics. If this be true he is a dangerous character to be at large and should be confined in some State institution where he will not be able to do any more damage. The Grand Jury is said to be making an investigation of the entire Mooney matter and it is to be hoped it will go to the bottom of all these newspaper reports and give the facts to the public so that if there has been a miscarriage of justice in the case the wrongs may be righted as nearly as is humanly possible at this late day.

In full accord with forces of oppression, the Labor Clarion determinedly ignores the big issue of the frame-up system. It attacks a creature of the prosecution in a manner calculated to work adversely to the defendants.

The world has stood amazed at the callous indifference displayed by reactionaries in the labor movement at San Francisco towards the aggressive and vicious tactics of labor's enemies. Many seek vainly for plausible explanation for such an attitude. The average worker finds it difficult to understand what can be the real influence responsible for continued prevalence of such conditions, and there seems no reasonable explanation.

When the various aspects of the whole situation are considered, there is some foundation for a suspicion that there might be hidden forces operating of a more potent nature than political or industrial. Such wrongs as are suffered by the victims of a diabolical persecution can never be righted. The long days of mental anguish borne by those nearest and dearest to the injured cannot be erased; but we hope that when the light of exposure is complete, we shall discover the hidden influence responsible and prepare to guard ourselves accordingly.

Making port in a dense fog can no longer be considered a hazardous task for modern ship captains. One of the latest accomplishments in scientific navigation is steering by radio.

Recently while lost in an impenetrable fog off Point Sur, the Shipping Board steamer "Arizonian," feeling her way for the Golden Gate, and not trusting her "dead reckoning," called on Lieutenant McCoy, radio chief at Twelfth Naval District headquarters in the Sheldon building, for aid, which was furnished in a most successful manner.

For eight hours Lieutenant McCoy, up in the Sheldon building, directed the course of the big steamer by wireless and brought her safely to port.

Working from the three apexes of the triangle formed by the radio stations at Point Reyes, Bird Island and Point Montara, Lieutenant McCoy, with the aid of Lieutenant Wilcox, issued instructions every half hour to the captain of the "Arizonian," from whom the sun had been hidden so long he was apprehensive of piling up on the rocks, telling him exactly where he was.

Aiding in the "wireless navigation" was also Radio Operator Glass of the Farallones station.

Acting in behalf of the Vienna office the Post Office Department at Washington requests that senders of parcel-post packages consider the marking of packages for Austria with the notation "If undeliverable, deliver to the poor," or with some similar notation to indicate the wishes of the sender in case the return of the undeliverable package is not desired.

Packages which are returned from Austria as undeliverable are subject to the payment of charges, made up of a sum equal to that originally paid for postage and the sum due for "a return transit charge," imposed by the Austrian postal administration, varying from 40 to 55 cents for each package, according to its weight.

We are compelled to disagree with the opinion expressed in the columns of the Labor Clarion relative to the "Rank and File." Members of organized labor will find interesting matter contained in the columns of the Seattle Union Record, the Butte Bulletin, and the San Francisco Rank and File, at least they champion the cause of the workers.

The JOURNAL is in receipt of an able article by Thomas E. Zant, a unionist of long standing, which is a convincing argument against purchase of the obsolete Spring Valley water system. We agree with the spirit of the argument and as trades unionists have other reasons for opposition to the proposed purchase b the City. We desire to know what individuals or interests will be benefited or strengthened by expenditure of the money, and at present lack the necessary information. We regret that space does not permit reproduction of the article in full.

When speaking of a vessel's tonnage, very few seamen realize the origin of the term. With the inception of the wine trade between France and England, after the Norman conquest 1066, the French wines were shipped in large barrels called "Tonnes," which contained about 250 gallons each. This resulted in a vessel's size being judged or described by the number of "Tonnes" which she could carry.

HOW TO MEASURE A RIVER

The United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, frequently receives letters inquiring for some simple method of determining approximately the flow of creeks or small rivers. The following instructions may be of some value to those who wish to determine roughly the velocity or the volume of a stream.

Choose a place where the channel is straight for 100 to 200 feet and has a nearly constant width and depth; lay off on the bank a line 50 or 100 feet in length, marking each end; then throw small chips into the water and allow them to float downstream, noting the time the chips require to travel the distance laid off on the bank. The surface velocity in feet per second may be found by dividing the distance in feet passed over by the chips by the time in seconds the chips take to travel this distance. The average of several such determinations will give the mean velocity of the surface of the stream. The surface velocity multiplied by 0.80 gives very nearly the average velocity of the whole stream, from surface to bed.

To determine the area of the cross section of the stream, stretch a tape from shore to shore and take the depth of the stream at intervals of 2 to 5 feet. Compute the average of these depths in feet to determine the mean depth of the stream. This average multiplied by the total width in feet will give the area of the cross section of the stream in square feet.

The discharge—that is, the quantity of water flowing in the stream—is found by multiplying the area of the cross section by the average velocity as determined by means of the chips, the result being the discharge in second-feet, or, in other words, the number of cubic feet flowing past the point of measurement every second. A cubic foot contains 7.48 gallons.

PERSEVERANCE REWARDED

Through the good offices of Attorney H. E. Foster of Seattle, Washington, the Journal has been favored with the following interesting record:

February 8, 1921.—I concluded a matter in the United States District Court here today that is of special interest to seamen, as I view it.

Late last fall, J. Strelneck, American A. B., signed for a voyage on the "West Ivis" to points in the Far East and return. While the vessel was at Kobe, Japan, Strelneck, together with about one-half of the crew, left the vessel without a permit. (No permit had at any time been required.) These parties went ashore and visited a life-saving station of course, or rather, a drinking station. Strelneck got too much drink and when he awakened the next morning his brothers had left him and the vessel had cleared for Yokohama. He secured a train and reached Yokohama about the time the vessel was to depart for the United States. The skipper of the vessel had made a regular report to the American Consul that Strelneck had deserted the vessel at Kobe, and he was therefore logged as a deserter. Strelneck was sent out to the vessel on a launch but the skipper would not take him aboard. Strelneck therefore found himself in Yokohama without clothes, without identification papers and with little or no money.

The master of the "Empress of Russia" kindly brought him over to Vancouver and turned him over to the American Consul. The "West Ivis" subsequently touched Vancouver and Strelneck endeavored to go aboard the vessel but the skipper would not permit him to go aboard. The American Consul sent him down to Seattle, his home port. The master of the "West Ivis" made his report to the shipping commission logging Strelneck as a deserter, depriving him of his wages, etc.

Strelneck called upon the shipping commissioner for assistance and was advised that there was no way he could receive assistance. The shipping record showed that he had deserted the vessel at Kobe and had been entered as a deserter at Yokohama and he was regularly logged as such. I talked with the shipping commissioner about the situation and was advised that nothing could be done.

I asked one of the judges of the United States District Court to give me a hearing on the matter, and I had a hearing on oral evidence. As a result of the hearing the judge ordered all entries on the records logging Strelneck as being a deserter expunged from the records and restored him to all his rights and entered an order directing that everything be returned to him, including his wages, etc. As a result of this Mr. Strelneck gets all his possessions and money and is restored all his rights.

Yours truly,
H. E. FOSTER.

The foregoing is a striking example of intelligent action, coupled with perseverance upon the part of Comrade Strelneck. In obtaining his rights he has materially benefited not only himself, but others who might be subject to the same unfair treatment by hostile or over-officious shipmasters.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

THE "SEQUOYA"

In their attempts to undermine American shipping by hoodwinking Oriental labor and setting at naught the provisions of the La Follette law, the British shipowners are manifesting a species of persistency and unscrupulous shrewdness worthy of a better cause.

Mr. James E. Sullivan, leader of the Oriental Seafarers' Union in New York brings us the latest information concerning the doings of the owners of the British steamship "Sequoya," of Hongkong, in dealing with Chinese crews.

On December 29, according to Mr. Sullivan, the "Sequoya" engaged, and signed a Chinese crew, all members of the Oriental Union. The crew signed the usual agreement for one year, at the union scale of wages in each department, to be paid off in the United States north of Cape Hatteras. On February 1st the men were discharged before the ship had left port without cause or excuse, and a complete new crew of other Chinamen were engaged at a flat rate of wages of $60 per month all around.

But Capt. Philips of the "Sequoya" had signed the special contract relating to wages, terms of service, etc., which the members of the Oriental Union insist must be attached to all shipping agreements, especially in foreign ships. Moreover, the owners had paid one month's advance to a Chinese master furnishing the crew which is likewise invariable practice in engaging Chinese crews. It now appears that the owners of the "Sequoya" merely wanted a crew to work by the ship while in port, and as soon as their month's advance had been worked up discharge them and engage a non-union crew at a lower rate of wages. Whack up both advance bonanzas with the Chink boarding masters.

It was an ingenious scheme but it did not work out to the entire satisfaction of its promoters, because Mr. Sullivan of the Oriental Seafarers' Union is himself a native of New York's Chinatown, born and reared in the heart of it, and wise to all the wiles of the "heathen Chinese." The Oriental seamen in New York repose absolute confidence in him, and he has them so well educated in unionism and "Melican" law that they sometimes cause the British shipowner no little concern.

When the crew of the "Sequoya" were ordered ashore they reported at once to Union Headquarters, 66 New Bowery. Mr. Sullivan placed their case in the hands of Attorney Frederick R. Graves with instructions to proceed at once against the "Sequoya" for everything it was possible to secure for those ill-treated Chinamen. Meanwhile a delegation of Chinese members went quietly aboard the ship and induced the $60 crew to leave. Another crew was engaged from some source for the same wages with a like result. The "Sequoya" now lies abandoned in her own neglected brine, to the discomfiture of her owners. The advances have been paid before the ship left port, and if this of course should be aired in court it will be likely to result in benefit to the American Merchant Marine and disaster to further machinations of our British rivals.

For a long time past it has been the common practice of certain classes of British ships trading regularly between New York and Chinese ports, to engage Chinese crews, sign them on for from twelve to eighteen months to trade "to and fro" between the United States and China. These crews were signed for the American rate of wages; and the shipmasters signed the special union contract above referred to. They likewise pay one month's advance to Charlie Yow.

As soon as the ship arrived in Hongkong, however, the crews would be discharged on the ground that this course was lawful since Hongkong is a British port, and the Chinese crews were in their home land. Having got rid of their highly-paid crews the next act on the program would be to ship a new crew of green coolies for $29 in American money, carry them about ten or twelve months at that rate of wages, and eventually dump them ashore in New York with half pay, $14.50 per month, and mark them down as deserters.

This practice, Mr. Sullivan informs us, has been in vogue for a long time, until it received a check from a crew of its own dupes recently, at Honkgong, in the case of the very ship under discussion, the "Sequoya," which clearly shows that in organizing the Oriental Union in New York we have carried the Seamen's Union war into China.

The record in this case has been forwarded from Hongkong to New York by Messrs. George K. Hall Brutton, solicitors at Hongkong, representing thirteen members of the former Chinese crew of the "Sequoya," who have brought suit at that port to recover $22,000 for alleged illegal discharge, full wages for the uncompleted voyages and transportation back to New York.

The record is accompanied by a letter of transmittal from Messrs. Brutton & Co. addressed to the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, and an identical letter addressed to the Oriental Seafarers' Union.

In their letter Messrs. Brutton & Co. set forth the facts in the case, and notify us that a commission is about to be appointed under authority of the Crown to take testimony in New York relative to this case, and that both sides to the controversy will be granted equal opportunity to be heard (viva voce) before the commission through competent interpreters. They therefore advise us to agree on counsel to represent our combined interests before the commission. This letter was dated at Hongkong September 16, 1920, and in compliance therewith Mr. Frederick R. Graves, attorney and proctor, of 256 Broadway, New York City, was retained to represent the unions before the commission.

The commission has now completed its investigations and its report is on the way to Hongkong, where in due course it will be officially submitted to the honorable, the Supreme Court of Hongkong (admiralty jurisdiction), for review and final jurisdiction. Meanwhile we have barely space at present for a brief résumé of the main incidents of this interesting case.

A close scrutiny of the "Sequoya's" shipping articles shows that they were originally opened at Hongkong, the "Sequoya's" port of entry, on June 6, 1919, and were signed by the original crew on June 13, 1919. On September 9, 1919, 22 Chinese seamen were signed at New York on the same articles to replace "deserters." And that was the beginning of trouble.

In addition to the usual stipulations, the following memoranda is attached to the Articles:

"I hereby agree to engage twenty-two (22) men who are now stopping at the Canton Boarding House, 48 Mott Street, New York City, on board the British S. S. 'Sequoya' for a voyage from the port of New York to the Orient, thence to and fro, for a period not exceeding eighteen (18) months, at the American rate of wages as follows: Firemen, $90 per month; crew cook, $90 per month; sailors, $85 per month; quartermasters, $87.50 per month; carpenter, $100 per month; boatswain, $95 per month; storekeeper, $95 per month; oilers, $95 per month.

"I also agree to pay the above-mentioned crew American rate of overtime, sixty (60) cents per hour.

"(Signed) W. PHILIPS,
"Master British S. S. 'Sequoya.'"

This memoranda is sealed with a U. S. 2-cent postage stamp, with Captain Philips' signature as "master" written across its face.

The "Sequoya" arrived at Hongkong on March 29, 1920. Immediately upon arrival the crew were mustered and informed that they would be paid off the following day. On March 30 the crew list and accounts of wages were delivered to the superintendent of the Mercantile Office and the members of the crew engaged at New York were notified to assemble for their wages.

But thirteen of their number saw through the ruse and refused to be browbeaten. Instead of accepting the wages proffered, they demanded full wages for the entire period signed for and transportation to New York, with costs; holding fast to the special contract.

On this demand being denied them they promptly libeled the ship and carried their claims to the Court of Highest Admiralty Jurisdiction in Hongkong through the legal intercession of Messrs. Brutton & Co., as already stated.

If that isn't going some for "docile" Chinamen, may we all be tarred for backstays.

In their defense, the owners rely solely on a typewritten slip pasted on the title page of the Articles at the time they were opened at Hongkong, stating that the voyage was to terminate at that port. But the plaintiffs contend, and we believe rightly so, that the stipulation is not binding upon them since they were not made aware of its existence until they reached Hongkong. Their only understanding when they signed was that they were to "trade to and fro" between the United States and the Orient for a period not exceeding twelve months, at the terms agreed upon, and that they were subject to discharge at either end, according to circumstances at the end of that time.

From our own intimate knowledge of the British shipowners' method of dealing with Orientals, we feel in duty bound to give those Chinamen the benefit of the doubt.

The outcome of this peculiar case is bound to be watched with interest by the organized seamen of the United States.

But we believe the government and shipowners of the United States should sit up and take notice as well. It must be borne in mind that all these men received advances approximating $100 each in the port of New York. This does not, of course, appear on the Articles. It is a separate transaction; for obvious reasons it is kept obscured, but we know that no Chinese seaman ever leaves the Canton Boarding House at 48 Mott Street without signing for it, and that all British and many American ships are still paying it, the provisions of the La Follette law to the contrary notwithstanding. It will be interesting to see whether the Supreme Court of Hongkong will set aside these advances in deference to the American law as being an illegal transaction in the port where the plot to violate the law was consummated.

Chinese are excluded by law from entering the United States and competing with American labor on land. But by the same law they are included among those eligible for service in American ships.

If British or other foreign ships are permitted to bring them here in shiploads for coolie wages and then dump them ashore on American soil, how long will it be before our entire Merchant Marine will become Orientalized and the American youths now in the service will be compelled to take again to the tall timber and remain there for good? When the Chinese Exclusion Act was passed and when it was repeated we had no Merchant Marine to defend, and the intrusion of Chinese seamen into the sea service at that time was unimportant, but now that we have taken a leading place among the maritime nations of the world is it not time that American seamen as well as landsmen should be protected from the menace of coolie labor?

All foreign ships should be prohibited under severe penalty from discharging or otherwise disposing of Oriental crews in the United States.

If the American Shipowners are sincere in their oft-reiterated desire to promote the interests of American shipping they should show proof of that sincerity by joining issue with the Seamen's Unions in opposition to Mongolian invasion, which now menaces the present welfare and future success of our Merchant Marine, and putting aside all antipathies bear a strong and willing hand for the extirpation of this explanation of quasi-slave trade which is slowly but surely undermining American law, American idealism and American commerce at one and the same time. JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

LATEST MILITARY ALIGNMENT

According to information recently sent to Congress by Secretary Baker France has the greatest standing army in the world. Counting its active and reserve forces, Italy is the world's leading military power.

France's regular force is 732,000, consisting of conscripted French and colonial troops; and in addition, it had 1,500,000 men enrolled in the reserves. Italy's regular force numbers 350,000, but its reserve consists of 4,627,000 men, including 3,000,000 mobile militia of the first class, 1,000,000 territorial militia as second line reserves and 114,000 carabiniers and royal guardsmen.

Japan's military forces, according to the secretary's figures, comprise 1,918,000 men, including a regular army of 273,000, a first reserve of 532,000, a second reserve of 667,000, a national army consisting of men between 37 and 40 years, of 246,000 and 200,000 men enrolled for replacements.

Great Britain's army of white troops totals 295,000, the report said, with 130,000 additional native and colonial troops, plus 233,000 men in the territorial armies.

Italy's army expenditures for the current fiscal year were placed at 1,812,000,000 lire; France's at 4,237,000,000 francs; Great Britain's at 190,155,000 pounds and Japan's at 210,000,000 yen.

Regarding the strength of the Japanese army next year, Baker said: "It is known to be in excess of that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1921."

The German army, the report continued, was 150,000 men, allowed until January 1, 1921, under the Versailles treaty.

THE RED PLAGUE.

Surgeon-General H. S. Cumming of the United States Public Health Service calls upon all organized groups to assist in spreading correct information on the red plague—a new name for venereal diseases. Since Congress in 1918 directed the Public Health Service to provide educational and medical facilities for the control of gonorrhea and syphilis, the campaign to eradicate these diseases has come to rank as one of the major public health activities.

"To spread this information," says the Surgeon-General, "associations of parents and teachers have been approached through the mail and through their publications. Letters and pamphlets have been sent to all churches and libraries. Editors of newspapers, fraternal and labor journals have received material for publication. Societies of college students have been asked to discuss the problem at their meetings. Rotary clubs and chambers of commerce have been reached. Efforts are being made to interest employers in industrial establishments, and through them to make available to all employes the information which the Government offers.

"The result of these efforts have been gratifying. Fraternal orders, which carry sickness, accident, and life insurance, have published articles in their official journals.

"Without the co-operation of groups such as these, it would be impossible for the Public Health Service and the State boards of health to reach the great mass of the people. With their assistance this may be accomplished. And it is only when all the people know about the venereal diseases—how they are contracted, and how they may be avoided, and where they may be treated—that they will cease to be a menace to the health and happiness of the American people."

HOW COFFEE WORKERS LIVE

In the annual report of the Bureau of Labor this sidelight on the lives of Porto Rico workers employed in the coffee district is shown:

Normal wages of 50 cents a day for 10 and 12 hours reduced to a weekly income of $1.50 to $2.50 during the eight months of dead season. Fathers and sons are generally barefooted with 50 per cent of the mothers and daughters provided with the poorest kind of footwear, only to be used on Sundays and holidays to attend church.

These workers enjoy no kind of recreation; they never hold meetings, nor do they know of the latest inventions or expressions of the human mind.

They only work hard to eat badly and sleep worse, on hard boards under the most confusing and unsanitary crowding. They grow up to premature old age and death.

Medical attendance hardly reaches these places on time. Municipal governments at times cannot afford the payment of an adequate salary to a physician, requesting of him, only in case of extraordinary emergency, to visit the districts far distant from the town. As a result patients are brought to the consultory of the town doctor and prescriptions are filled gratis so long as the appropriation for such services is not exhausted from the municipal budget.

THE "ZIGZAG" CLOCK

Inventors of the "zigzag" clock, Captains Wyatt and Lewis, two former British naval officers, have presented their claims for awards for their invention, which, they say, made possible the carrying of thousands of troops across the Atlantic during the war. By means of this device the helmsman was able to alter the course of a ship in time to avoid being torpedoed by a submarine. The Royal Commission on Awards and Inventors has taken the matter under consideration. Commander Wyatt read a letter written by Admiral Sir Richard Webb, who declared that "zigzagging" was most efficacious in warding off submarine attack. The witness explained that the clocks were used with large convoys of American troops, which, when preceeding at a rapid rate, had to zigzag, and unless they had some synchronized method of doing so there would very soon have been collisions. Mr. R. Moritz (for the Treasury) agreed that these clocks were an extremely useful anti-submarine weapon. Zigzagging could not have been adopted successfully apart from a clock, but there were other clocks.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Brindell "Labor Boss"

When word reached the officials at American Federation of Labor headquarters here this morning that R. P. Brindell of the New York Dock Builders, president and boss of the New York Building Trades Council, had been found guilty on the first ballot by the jury trying him for extortion of a $5000 bribe for the calling-off of a strike, there was not a word of sympathy for him.

Brindell has fought his way to wealth in New York by the use—and the flagrant misuse—of the building trades unions upon which he has in a few brief years imposed his irresponsible will. No building contractor, no anti-union bigot, no hypocritical aristocrat in the Union League Club could be more resentful at Brindell's arrogant power of a few short weeks ago than have been the bulk of the building trades mechanics in New York City. He had cheated them of what little self-determination the labor movement had given into their hands. A small coterie of well-paid business agents jumped at his finger-crook, but the men who paid their dues were sore. When he fell they shed no tears.

Hugh Frayne, general organizer for the A. F. of L. in New York, realized this state of mind among the union members when he testified for the prosecution.

But, having pointed Brindell out as a boss and not a trade union builder, the labor officials are through with the topic. They see no occasion for apology for the existence and strength of the trade unions in New York or elsewhere. They know that the fact of this conviction will be twisted—in the minds of great numbers of ignorant readers of our "best" magazines into an indictment of the labor movement itself. But they give notice now that these unfortunate citizens will have to enlighten themselves at leisure upon the fact that the real labor issue is the right to organize and bargain collectively for a shorter work-day, better conditions and a higher standard of living. Crimes by individuals can never be made the labor issue.

If individual guilt were of high importance in the labor struggle the railroad labor unions' weekly—"Labor"—points out this week, then Charles M. Schwab would be an issue. His record as a party to the crime of palming off defective and rotten armor plate on the United States Navy, as reported by a House committee to Congress in 1894, is dug up in answer to the statement issued by Congressman Walsh of Massachusetts and a House committee, that Schwab has had a "long and honorable business career, and his devotion to the Government entitles him to this mark of respect" which mark of respect was an apology for inquiring into his ex[illegible] check of $269,000 when he was head of the Shipping Board. If Brindell could taint the whole labor movement, Schwab could make the whole business world of America as fragrant as limburger.

Courts Cause Uneasiness

Instead of worrying over Brindell, organized labor has worried over the forthcoming decision of the Supreme Court in the Coronado Coal Co. case, involving the claim made by coal operators in Arkansas for $400,000 damages against the United Mine Workers for an attempt to organize the miners in their employ. Justice Pitney, who made himself leader of judicial reaction years ago by holding that an employer has a vested right to a free flow of labor to his own factory gate, is expected to dictate the terms of the majority opinion when it comes. This decision will, in all human probability, make every act connected with the growth of labor unions' membership an act subject to damage claims by employers. That is, it will outlaw trade unionism.

For some reason the case still hangs fire in the court. Now that a month's recess has been taken, it cannot be decided until after the emergency conference of the heads of the international and national unions comprising the A. F. of L., which takes place here on February 23d. Had it come down before that date the conference would have been a much more spirited affair than is now likely to be the case.

Cheap Labor Propaganda

When that conference is held, the "open shop" drive will be fully reviewed, and some plan for meeting its press propaganda with counter-propaganda will be offered. In that connection it is significant that the Inter-racial Council, which is an expansion of a Du Pont scheme for promoting immigration of cheap anti-union labor for the basic industries, has had to get rid of W. H. Barr, its president, because of his "open shop" activities. The Inter-racial Council discovered that it could not get a hearing so long as a notorious anti-union promoter such as Barr of the National Founders' Association was its president. Barr has now resigned, saying that he loves the "open shop" campaign more than the Council.

T. Coleman Du Pont, who employed Miss Frances Kellor to organize the Inter-racial Council among the backers of the non-radical foreign language papers, known as the Hammerling syndicate, was almost as enthusiastic an anti-unionist as was Barr. He has tired of his Council, it seems, and may resign and turn it over to some other "angel." Meanwhile, John Frey and John Golden, prominent A. F. of L. spokesmen of the conservative faction, have likewise resigned from the Council because of President Barr's propaganda.

Compromise Found Practical

Better success in reaching a compromise was scored at the Second Pan-American Labor Congress at Mexico City last month. Chester M. Wright, newly-elected joint secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, made public today the text of a resolution unanimously adopted there, establishing a policy of non-interference between the socialism of the Latins and the conservatism of the delegates from this side of the border.

"The aim of our federation," says the resolutions, "must be to find those programs, principles and tactics upon which agreement can be had. This federation has a right to life only because it is of service to the workers, and there is no service in disunity and disharmony.

"Those matters regarded as essential by some, but not by all, should be held in abeyance until the processes of education, understanding and experience develop agreement among all. Any effort to force upon minorities principles or tactics to which they cannot give consent, must, in an international federation such as this, lead to destruction. In like manner any effort of minorities, through strategy or otherwise, to thrust their decisions upon majorities must be equally fatal."

This statement was drafted by the American delegation, and was accepted as a mutual pledge that neither side would henceforth indulge in calling names, but that all would stand together on class issues against their common class enemies.

Workers Demand Freedom

Another part of the resolution deals with the place to be occupied by political and by industrial organizations.

"Political freedom, the right of the workers to have a voice and vote equal to that of every other citizen," it declares, "is the first practical step toward those individual rights which are essential to liberty. But political liberty, working through the executive, legislative and judicial departments of the organized Government of a free people, does not, and should not be permitted to, enter into that personal (non-Governmental) relationship between wage earner and employer through which the terms of employment are determined by the recognition of equality of rights, and the joint agreement of both parties. The principle that governments should exist only with the consent of the governed is identical with the principle that the terms of employment, conditions of labor and the rules and regulations of employment should exist only with the consent of the employed."

Danger that Congress will enact a coal-control law which will authorize the President to break coal strikes or railroad strikes under the pretext of fuel emergency, is for the moment past. There will be no such legislation at this session. A bill may be enacted which simply compels the coal operators and sales agents and dealers to report the cost of production, cost of handling, selling prices and profits in each branch of the industry.

When this information has been furnished for a few months, a bill reducing retail prices but not robbing the workers of their liberty will probably be drafted and fought out in the Senate.

In the logical view, the trade union is organized for peace, with the strike as an ever-present means of securing it upon honorable terms. In the compulsory arbitrationist's view the trade union is organized for peace, with the dictum and authority of a court to maintain it upon any terms. The only purpose actually served by such an organization is to insure at least the appearance of common consent to a judicial despotism that otherwise would be intolerable.

A certain philosopher has said that "instinct guided by reason is never wrong." This observation explains much of the success of trade unionism, which is primarily an expression of the instinct of self-preservation.

Those who regret the limitations of the trade union movement may find some consolation in the reflection that, after all, the only movement that has not fallen short of the highest hopes is that which has not yet been put to the test of practice.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

ing prices was too great for the workers to bear.

"But many factors have increased prices in addition to such higher wages as the workers may have obtained. In many industries and businesses profits have been increased in a greater degree than wages, and advantage has been taken of the artificial conditions in which trade had to be conducted during the war to increase enormously the value of a number of businesses and interests.

"As prices went up without the influence of higher wages, what guarantee is there that prices would be reduced if wages were reduced? It would be difficult to convince the workers that wage reductions, if agreed to, will ensure a substantial reduction in the cost of living."

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

seamen and fishermen, adopted by the Washington Conference, November, 1919.

The Conference adopted three Draft Conventions (proposed treaties). The Conventions are supposed to be ratified by all nations, members of the League, and four recommendations which may or may not be adopted by the nations members of the League.

The Conference divides transportation by water in two, under the names of "Inland Navigation," and "Maritime Navigation," leaving to each nation to define, so far as they are concerned, the meaning of each.

Recommendations provide, with reference to fishermen, an eight-hour day and a forty-eight hour week, with certain limitations to meet "climate and industrial conditions peculiar to inland navigation in each country, and after consultation with the organization of employers and the organization of the workers concerned."

It further recommends that different nations using the same waterways enter into agreement about "the hours of work of persons employed in inland navigation on such waterways."

Your committee is pleased to note that the convention saw fit to recommend the adoption of an eight-hour day and the forty-eight-hour week.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Recommendation Concerning the Establishment of an International Code for Seamen.—The Conference decided that an International Code is desirable and practical, and recommended "that each member of the International Labor Organization undertake the embodiment, in a Seamen's Code, of all its laws and regulations relating to Seamen in their activities as such," to be used for preparing an International Seamen's Code.

Your committee, realizing the backwardness of the laws of some of the nations within the League, fear that they will retard and hinder the adoption of real, progressive laws and measures for seamen, and for that reason we view with suspicion this attempt at this time to bring about an International Code for Seamen.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Recommendation Concerning Unemployment Insurance for Seamen.—The Conference recommended that "each member of the International Labor Organization should establish for seamen an effective system of insurance against unemployment arising out of shipwreck or any other cause, either by means of government insurance or by means of government subventions to industrial organizations, whose rules provide for the payment of benefits to their unemployed members."

Draft Convention Concerning Unemployment Indemnity in Case of Loss or Foundering of the Ship.—"In every case of loss or foundering of any vessel, the owner or person with whom the seamen has contracted for service on board the vessel shall pay to each seaman employed thereon an indemnity against unemployment resulting from such loss or foundering."

"This indemnity shall be paid for the days during which the seaman remains in fact unemployed, at the same rate as the wages payable under the contract, but the total indemnity payable under this convention to any one seaman may be limited to two months' wages."

Draft Convention for Finding Employment for Seamen.—The Conference recommended that, "for the purpose of this Convention, the term 'seamen' include all persons, except officers, employed as members of the crew on vessels engaged in maritime navigation."

"The business of finding employment for seamen shall not be carried on by any person, company, or other agency, as a commercial enterprise for pecuniary gain, nor shall fee be charged directly or indirectly by any person, company, or other agency for finding employment for seamen on any ship."

The Conference further recommended that the law of each country shall provide punishment for violation of the provisions quoted above.

"Committees consisting of an equal number of representation of shipowners and seamen shall be constituted to advise on matter concerning the carrying on of officers for the purpose of providing employment for seamen."

"In connection with the employment of seamen, freedom of choice of ship shall be assured to seamen and freedom of choice of crew shall be assured to shipowners."

Your committee sees the possibility of establishing one of the most effective blacklist systems ever devised if this unemployment insurance scheme goes into effect, unless it be handled by the government and men be assured of perfect freedom in their choice of ships, if this could be possible—and we hardly think it is, when we view the attitude of the governments of some of the countries which are at present compelling men to accept any kind of employment offered, whether they feel fit to do that work or not.

In addition to this, our fears are increased by the recommendation of the Convention to establish offices outside of which no seaman can obtain employment. This, coupled with the unemployment insurance, opens up a question from which all seamen who wish to retain their freedom will be compelled to shrink and must, of necessity, try to avert.

It will be noted that the Draft Convention speaks of finding employment for seamen. Nowhere in the Convention is there any prohibition against any individual or office occupying himself or itself in furnishing ships with men. The offices of the International Shipping Federation, Ltd., or any other office or person, may supply vessels with men. To help seamen to get employment will be an offense; to help vessels get men will not be an offense.

We, therefore, hope that the Convention will

The report of the committee was adopted.

Draft Convention Fixing the Minimum Age for Admission of Children to Employment at Sea.—"Children under the age of fourteen years shall not be employed or work on vessels, other than vessels upon which only members of the same family are employed."

Your committee regrets that the convention did not see the necessity of raising the age limit of children employed at sea to sixteen years, and for that reason we have no further comment to offer.

The report of the committee was adopted.

COMMUNICATION AND FORM OF AGREEMENT FROM ITALIAN SEAMEN'S FEDERATION

Your Committee, having read the communication and agreement from the Italian Seamen's Federation, is glad to note that the Italian Seamen are advancing steadily and constructively, and recommends that the communication and agreement be made part of the proceedings.

The report of the committee was adopted.

APPENDIX NO. 10

Report of Delegates to Open Conference Held at Genoa, Italy

This report has already been printed in the "Seamen's Journal." It contains a fund of information which every seaman should make himself familiar with. It shows that the conference has acted as an organizing force for the Seafarers' Federation by the inquiries regarding requirements for membership made by the following countries: Finland, Spain, Greece, Argentine, Czeko-Slovakia, Canada and Japan. It demonstrates clearly the necessity for a Seafarers' Federation, and as an historic document it is of great value. Your committee commends the delegates to that conference for the really splendid report which they have rendered, thus making it possible for all our members to familiarize themselves with the attitude of both shipowners and seamen toward each other. The committee recommends that whatever of special interest to American Seamen there be in these reports be sifted out by the Committee on Policy and Education, and used in the field of educating our membership and we further recommend that this be printed separately as an appendix.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Delegate O'Brien: Mr. Chairman, this concludes the report of the Committee on International Relations, which is respectfully submitted and signed.

PATRICK O'BRIEN, Chairman;
FRANCIS J. McEVOY,
MILLER JENSEN,
ALFRED TAMKE,
JULIUL NELSON,
JOHN W. ELLISON,
OSWALD STONE.

The report of the Committee on International Relations as a whole was adopted, and the committee discharged with the thanks of the convention.

At 4:40 p. m. the convention adjourned to reconvene at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, January 18th.

Labor News

The Firemen and Oilers' Journal says 21 charters have been issued by the International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers since its last issue.

The Milwaukee branch of the Ford Motor Company has reopened and taken back into employment over 400 men.

Culinary workers of Herrin, Ill., have signed an agreement with hotel and restaurant owners, whereby wages are increased and hours shortened.

The reopening of all departments of the Ford Motor Company's assembling plant at Cambridge, Mass., was recently announced by the New England manager, R. E. Jones. The plant has been closed nearly a month.

The Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has signed a contract with the Conde Manufacturing Company and the Alexander Black Cloak Company of Toledo, Ohio, calling for a 44-hour week, with a minimum wage of $44 per week.

An attempt to establish the Kansas "can't-strike" law in Montana has been defeated in the State legislature. Other pending legislation against the workers includes compulsory arbitration and anti-picketing.

At Pittsburgh, Pa., the Superior Steel Corporation, an independent, employing about 1200 men, has announced that it will resume operations in some departments on a wage scale about 15 per cent. lower than that paid when it shut down.

International and local benefits to organized street car men in Chicago totaled $160,144.37 last year. This includes disability and funeral benefits, collections for sick members and funeral benefits. There was but $1,780 of this amount paid in strike benefits.

At New Haven, Conn., organized heat and frost insulators and asbestos workers have secured a new wage agreement, which raises rates to $1 an hour as against $7 a day, formerly paid. Assistants are advanced from 50 cents to 62½ cents an hour the first year and 68¾ cents an hour thereafter.

According to figures made public by William Green, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, that organization has 552,905 dues-paying members in good standing. There are an additional 50,000 members on strike, and out of work, under exemptions from paying dues, making a total membership exceeding 600,000.

At Pawtucket, R. I., J. and P. Coats, thread manufacturers, have announced that all departments would hereafter be operated 48 hours a week and that a night shift would be started in the spinning department. For some weeks several of the departments have been operated two or three days a week only. The plant employes 2500 on day work.

President Wilson has commuted the sentence of four Russians, Jacob Abrams, Samuel Lipman, Hyman Lachowsky and Mollie Steiner, from fifteen to twenty years in prison to two years and six months, on condition that they be deported to Russia. The Russians, who confessed they were anarchists, have already served about one year and a half. They were convicted for circulation of pamphlets protesting against the intervention by the United States in Russia.

INFORMATION WANTED

Fred Klein, who left New Orleans on the S. S. "Lake Ferona" in March, 1920, is inquired for by his father, L. Klein. Address, care the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, 543 Bienville Street, New Orleans, La. Charles Thoresen, Agent.

Where is the "Deficit"?

"No appropriation should be considered where the need is not urgent."
—Message of Governor Stephens to the 1917 Legislature.

The people voted, in November, additional State costs totaling $18,000,000.

Governor Stephens in his message to the 1921 Legislature declares:

". . . it is because of this voluntary action of the people themselves that the financial difficulties referred to have arisen."

Let Us Consider the Facts

State officials estimate our income for the next two years at	$67,000,000
Charge up against this the 1919-1921 budget, which was $47,000,000, and add the $18,000,000 voted by the people for the next two years. The total is	65,000,000
We still would have left in the treasury . .	$ 2,000,000

Two Million dollars left, after paying every cent the people of California ever voted to pay.

Two Million dollars left, after paying for every State expense at the rate we had to pay when costs were higher than they will be again for many years.

Two Million dollars left, after re-appropriating in full for the vast burden of "unnecessary duplications and unnecessary waste" which Governor Stephens admits now exists in the State government.

Two Million dollars left, after we Californians spend for our State government twice as much as the average citizen of other states.

Who Wants This Money?

Yet Governor Stephens declares "it is because of the voluntary action of the people themselves that the financial difficulties referred to have arisen."

Governor Stephens goes further. He goes $15,000,000 further.

After we have paid every dollar that we paid in 1919-21, and after we have paid every dollar we voted to pay at the November elections—after we have provided a surplus of $2,000,000 for emergencies, Governor Stephens calls for $15,000,000 more.

Other states are economizing. Illinois in one year has reduced her governmental costs $2,500,000.

Yet California State officials call upon the people for $15,000,000 above all amounts previously spent or now authorized.

Already California is spending vastly more than her sister states which are now reducing their budgets. The per capita government costs for actual running expenses (as distinct from interest and new investments) are shown by the 1919 U. S. Census report to be as follows:

Average for all states,	$5.16
Illinois	3.48
California,	7.76

The Things Are True

The people have created no deficit, and there is no deficit.

The extra $15,000,000 now demanded by state officials is over and above all appropriations ever made in the past and all new expenses authorized by the people. No increase of any tax rate is necessary.
Ask your legislator to demand that the state live within its income.

TAX INVESTIGATION AND ECONOMY LEAGUE
HERBERT W. CLARK, President W. V. HILL, Secretary
1504 HUMBOLDT BANK BUILDING - SAN FRANCISCO

"The power to tax is the power to destroy"

Domestic and Naval

Four San Francisco bay ferry systems carried 48,613,911 passengers in 1920, according to the annual report of John K. Bulger, supervising steamboat inspector. The Southern Pacific line was the only one to show a falling off in business.

The S.S. "Maui" on her last trip, from the Hawaiian Islands to San Francisco, carried the largest sugar cargo of any ship this year. The "Maui" brought reports of safe arrival at the Islands of the Eagle boat flotilla which left San Francisco in tow of larger vessels. The little ships were found to be top heavy in a rough sea, and it was necessary to ballast them with pig iron set in cement.

The United States Army transport "Logan" has arrived in San Francisco, after nine months' voyaging around the world. The "Logan" left San Francisco June 2, 1920. Her ports of call were Honolulu, Manila, Vladivostok, Colombia, Singapore, Suez, Trieste, Naples, Gibraltar, New York, Panama, Porto Rico, New York, Panama, Honolulu and San Francisco. She arrived without passengers, having carried about 2500 tons of ammunition from New York to Honolulu, 1500 tons of which will be shipped to Manila.

The report of the inspector general of the steamboat inspection service shows that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, the total number of accidents on vessels, resulting in loss of life, was 192; and that the total number of lives lost was 470, of which 42 were passengers. Of the lives lost, 145 were from suicide, accidental drowning and other causes beyond the power of the steamboat inspection service to prevent, leaving 325 lives lost as fairly chargeable to accidents, collisions, founderings, etc. This was a decrease of 73 in the number of lives lost as compared with the previous fiscal year. Passengers to the number of 368,870,327 were carried on vessels required by law to make report of the number of passengers carried. Dividing this grand total by 42, the total number of passengers lost, shows that 8,782,626 passengers were carried for each passenger lost. This small percentage of lives lost on vessels is probably as low an average as on the various conveyances on land.

Three British warships, gift of the British Government to Canada, and which will form the nucleus of a Canadian navy in Pacific waters, are scheduled to arrive at San Diego from Portsmouth, England, on March 1, en route to Vancouver, according to word received from London by Major H. D. Gerrard, British Consul. The vessels are the three-stacked light cruiser "Aurora" and two thirty-knot destroyers. The "Aurora," which will be the flagship of the Canadian fleet, displaces 3250 tons and is a sister ship of the "Arethusa," "Royalist," "Penelope" and "Undaunted." The cruiser was laid down at Devonport October 12, 1913, [illegible] main battery of two six-inch and six four-inch guns. Upon arrival at Esquimalt, which will be the operating base of the squadron, the British crews will be replaced by Canadian naval reserves. Another cruiser and two more destroyers have been presented to the Canadian Government by the British Admiralty. These vessels will leave England for Pacific waters early in June.

News from Abroad

Reports from Argentina show that the charter market remains about the same. Outward tonnage exceeds demands and many vessels are leaving in ballast, as the demand for shipping space is dull. Dispatch of vessels is slow. Stocks of bunker coal and oil are normal, and the cost of coal alongside pier is £6 15s per ton.

The authorities of Dundee, Scotland, are planning to erect municipal cottages—some 1,200 in all—in the Craigie, Maryfield and Balgay districts. The cottages will cost at least £1,400 ($6,813) each, which will result in an aggregate expenditure by the municipality of something like a million and a half pounds ($7,299,750). The houses will be of two sizes, namely, five and six rooms.

The Tauranga (New Zealand) Harbor board proposes to expend $608,312 on the improvement of the Harbor at that place. Works proposed will, when completed, enable vessels drawing 23 feet to enter the harbor. This is the first step toward developing the harbor to admit overseas steamers in general. Tauranga will be the harbor for an important section of the east coast of the North Island.

Peking dispatches state that Japan has lodged a protest against a contract entered into between the ministry of communications and the American Federal Company for the construction of a wireless plant at Shanghai. The protest is made on the ground that the contract infringes rights acquired two years ago by a Japanese company, on which the sum of five million yen was advanced.

German residents in Japan are reported as steadily increasing in number, now almost double that of prewar days. Most of them are employed in firms and factories as engineers, and it is stated that nearly a hundred applications for positions in Japan have been received from German engineers and experts. The imports of toys, chemicals and dyestuffs from Germany during the first ten months of 1920 amounted to $1,000,000.

The arrest of two members of the Chamber of Deputies, who have been involved in a communist plot against the French Government, is reported from sources connected with the investigation into Communist activities. The deputies alleged to be concerned were prominent in the May Day riots of 1920. The French press is devoting much space to the plot, which it characterizes as a serious one. The newspapers declare that the documents seized leave no doubt that perfect cohesion exists between Moscow and the propaganda in France.

Australia's mandate for the former German islands in the Pacific south of the equator has been published. The League of Nations council also publishes Japan's declaration relative to the category of mandates and article twenty-two of the peace treaty. Japan foregoes the insertion of the clause respecting equal trading opportunities, but this, says the declaration, should not be considered acquiescence by Japan, which submits that the Japanese are subect to discriminatory and disadvantageous treatment in the mandated territories and that Japanese subjects, rights and interests there should be fully respected.

With the Wits

"You say you served in France?" asked the restaurant proprietor, as he sampled the new cook's first soup.

"Yes, sir, officer's cook for two years and wounded twice."

"You're a lucky man. It's a wonder they didn't kill you."

"Do you think that young man good enough to marry our daughter?" asked the mother. "I guess so," replied the father. "You know your folks used to say I wasn't good enough for you." "I know. But my folks were right about it."—Detroit Free Press.

An educator, addressing a class of Missouri students dropped the following gem of wisdom: "Cut your speeches like a woman's dress, long enough to cover the subject, but short enough to be interesting."—Labor Review.

"Why don't you get out and hustle? Hard work never killed anybody," remarked the philosophical gentleman to whom Rastus applied for a little charity.

"You're mistaken dar, boss," replied Rastus. "I'se lost four wives dat way."

Restrictions—"Don't they allow us to raise children in this apartment, house?"

"No," said the janitor.

"Nor kittens, nor puppies, nor parrots?"

"No. Nothing is permitted to be raised here except the rent."—Washington Star.

A Jersey commuter, missing his train one bitter morning, concluded he would spend the day with his wife. He went back to the house, 'round to the kitchen door, and entered. There he found his wife leaning over the stove with her back to him. He came up behind her and kissed her on the back of the neck. Without looking, the wife said:

"Two bottles of milk and a half pint of cream today."

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

SEAMANSHIP AND EFFICIENCY

Report of Committee on Policies and Education

To the Officers and Members of District Unions, International Seamen's Union of America:

Greeting:

All officers and members are urged to give their most earnest co-operation in the work of making effective the plans of the International Seamen's Union of America to improve the standards of seamanship and skill in the American merchant marine, as provided for in the report of the Committee on Policies and Education which was adopted by a unanimous vote at the Philadelphia Convention as follows:

The opening sections of the report of President Furuseth, which were referred to your committee on Policies and Education, are a statement of the general purposes and aims of our International Union, as understood and agreed to by the general membership from the very birth of our organization and express in the actions of many conventions, in the constitution and organization laws under which the District Unions operate, and in the records of the meetings where the members voice their opinions and cast their votes.

The desire for freedom and—freedom having been attained—the purpose to make the highest and best use of our liberties is the keynote.

The seaman's calling is an honorable one and is entitled to be again recognized as one of the world's most honored of professions. It calls for unfaltering courage and virile manhood. It is no place for cowards and shirkers. For a time it suffered degradation and even shame, and press, pulpit and author seem to join in a combined sneer at the men who carry the world's commerce over the waters of the deep, but the real spirit of seamanship, with its stern code that demanded willing sacrifice, undaunted courage, ready initiative and a high order of intelligence, has survived all attacks and through our International Union, is now finding a new and revived expression of itself. The goal of freedom has been attained. The degradation of bondage has been wiped out. The law has performed its function, except in so far as it has not yet been properly enforced by the government.

It now becomes our duty to make the fullest use of the opportunities created by the restoration of our rights as citizens, in such manner as may be best calculated to make good the promise we made to ourselves, as stated by President Furuseth, that our calling shall again take its proper place as one of the most honored professions among men, that men shall so recognize it.

Your committee is in full accord with the report of President Furuseth on this subject and herewith presents for the consideration of the Convention the following recommendations for specific action in relation thereto:

Seamanship and Skill

It may be well at the outset for the delegates to recall the manner in which the Committee on Policies and Education was brought into existence at this Convention. The decision to appoint such a committee was reached after very considerable discussion in the Committee of the Whole, during which the general subject of seamanship and skill was given much attention. The resolution proposing the appointment of a committee was adopted by the Committee of the Whole, reported to the Convention and there approved.

Your attention is respectfully called to the following section of President Furuseth's report:

"We promised ourselves that we would work for the maintenance and development of skill in seamanship, and we should, on shore, as well as on board vessels, do our best in developing such a standard of skill that the vessels need not go to the repair shops, except for general overhauling or to repair damages arising from accidents."

Your committee is of the opinion that the time has now arrived when we can and must make good the promise that skilled seamanship, especially among the members of our International Union, shall be developed to the fullest possible extent. The recent development of the American Merchant Marine, the tremendous increase in the number of its ships, the quick growth of its personnel has created a condition which renders immediate action essential. The life of any industry depends upon its power to meet competition.

The passage of the Seamen's Act established the means through which the cost of operation as between American and foreign vessels has been equalized, in that with the proper enforcement of that law, the cost of operation of foreign vessels automatically rises to the American level. It was not until our International Union had itself worked out the solution of the operating cost problem and had carried on a vigorous campaign for the enactment of the laws necessary to solve the problem that a national understanding of the subject was aroused. The cost of operation having been equalized, or where the equalization has not already taken place, made easily possible if the law be enforced, a decided advantage can be given to the American industry and to American seamen through the quick development of a high order of skilled seamanship and efficiency. The sudden increase in the number of ships and the number of seamen resulting from the war, has intensified the need for some systematic method by which skill and efficiency of American sea labor can be quickly and effectively improved.

It is not likely that any agency other than the International Seamen's Union of America will offer any practical means whereby this can be done. We ourselves must formulate the plans and put them into operation, or, failing to do so, it is we who must suffer the consequences. The best that can be hoped for from others is that after we have undertaken the task and proven our ability to cope with it, they may be persuaded to co-operate with us. We believe that prompt action is as necessary in the interests of the members of our organization as it is for the industry. We, therefore, present for the consideration and action of the Convention the following recommendations on this subject:

1. That the Executive Board be authorized and instructed to secure the services of a vocational expert or experts who shall, under the direction of the Board, make a survey of the entire craft to ascertain its needs in respect to seamanship, general trade skill and efficiency, and to work out plans whereby the knowledge of seamanship in all degrees of skill necessary to the fullest development of all divisions of the craft may be transmitted to the members of all affiliated organizations.

2. The plan must include arrangements whereby the members of the union shall be given opportunities to improve their skill and efficiency in general rigging and repair work on board ship, in all departments thereof.

3. The plan should include lectures on the development and purposes of the craft and its practices, to be accompanied by illustrations in the form of stereopticon views, maps, and, where necessary and possible, moving pictures in such manner as to be interesting, as well as instructive.

4. Lectures and discussions should include information on the question of discipline on board ship, its theory and practice, needs and purposes.

5. Arrangements should be made for the compilation and circulation of printed matter, through which such information of seamanship, skill and efficiency as may be presented in printed form, can be made accessible to the membership. It should be borne in mind that considerable work is involved in the compilation of this kind of information, which, to be of any real value, must be illustrated by drawings, maps and pictures.

6. Technical information on strains, leverages, weights, etc., involved in the use of ships' gear and equipment, should be transmitted to the membership.

7. It should be thoroughly understood that the initial work of this plan should have for its purpose the improvement of seamanship skill and efficiency of the members of the Union who have had some substantial service on board ship, and who have attained the positions of able seamen, firemen and oilers, cooks, etc., with a view of later so developing the system as to fit the needs of the beginners in the calling. The development in this respect will undoubtedly be very rapid, once the plan is in operation.

8. In order that the Executive Board may be enabled to put into effect such plan, the affiliated unions shall immediately be called upon to furnish the sum of $15,000, each District Union to pay into such fund an amount proportionate to its treasury. The money thus contributed shall be placed in an account separate from the general fund of the Union, and shall be used exclusively for the purpose of carrying out the plans herein outlined.

9. The Executive Board shall have authority to call upon the District Union for such additional contributions to the fund from time to time as may, in the judgment of the Board, be necessary.

General Education Campaign

Your committee further recommends that, in connection with the plan for the improvement of seamanship skill and efficiency among our members, shall be carried on a general educational campaign, the purpose of which shall be to arouse among the members of our organization, and among seamen likely to become members of the organization, a better and more complete understanding of the aims and objects of our International Union and its various divisions.

The detailed character of this campaign must be varied to fit the particular needs of the various localities, as indicated by the conditions existing therein.

When much organizing work is needed for the purpose of inducing seamen to join the Union, the campaign should be conducted with a view of obtaining the best organizing results. In other localities where organization is fairly complete, it should deal mainly with the deeper meanings and purposes of organization, the higher duties of its members, their relationship to each other, etc. This campaign, while it may be conducted in places where no vocational education has been started, must in all cases accompany and be included in the activities to be carried on under the plan for improving the vocational knowledge of our membership.

It is not probable, in the judgment of your committee, that the situation on the Great Lakes lends itself, under present conditions, as readily to the vocational plan as do the conditions in the other districts, but this, however, should not delay the holding of educational meetings in the Great Lakes district, and we present, therefore, in order to avoid misunderstanding, the specific recommendation that arrangements be made for educational meetings in the Great Lakes district, just prior to the next opening of navigation in that district.

We further point out that it is unnecessary to delay the general educational work in any district pending the work of gathering material and formulating the details of the vocational plan and that general educational work can and should be undertaken everywhere as quickly as possible.

We desire further to point out that success will depend almost entirely upon the degree of co-operation which may be developed among the District Unions and within the District Unions. While both the general educational work and the vocational plan must remain under the direction of the International Union, neither can be successfully carried out without the willing co-operation of the officers and members of the District Unions. It would be useless, therefore, to seek to force upon some particular District Union certain methods of transmitting vocational knowledge and trade union education to which there was substantial objection within that District Union.

We believe that the Executive Board will exercise good judgment in this respect and that ultimately, as the purposes and objects of the International Union are understood, there will be complete harmony and unity of action on these questions throughout our great International organization.

Your committee recommends that the Executive Board be authorized and instructed to proceed in accordance with this report.

Respectfully submitted,

EIGHTH DAY

Tuesday Morning Session

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ORGANIZATION

Delegate Feeney, for the committee, reported as follows:

RESOLUTION NO. 21

Submitted by Thomas Milligan and James Lynch of the Marine Firemen's Union of the Atlantic

Resolved, That the time is now ripe and opportune for the seamen of America, organized under the banner of the International Seamen's Union of America, to strengthen their position in the industrial field, that the paid representatives of these organized seamen should, in all good faith to the men we represent, work toward that end. Be it further

Resolved, That in order to bring about such conditions as will aid the Seamen of America to barter successfully in the industrial field, certain changes will have to be made in the formation of the organization of the International Seamen's Union of America. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That an amalgamation of the Sailors, Firemen, Cooks and Stewards of the three districts take place, taking in the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Water Tenders' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf, the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, the Marine the Atlantic and Gulf, Sailors' Union of the Great Lakes, Marine Firemen, Oilers, Water Tenders' Union and Coal Passers' Union of the Great Lakes, Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union of the Lakes, Sailors' Union of the Pacific, Marine Firemen, Oilers and Water Tenders' Union of the Pacific, Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union of the Pacific Coast, Eastern Marine Workers' Association, under the International Seamen's Union of America; and, be it further

Resolved, That in the event of this resolution being favorably passed on by this Convention, a constitutional Convention be immediately called for the purpose of formulating a constitution whereby the amalgamation, which will be known as the International Seamen's Union of America, may be effected.

Your committee recommends non-conurrence in this resolution, because it conflicts with the constitutions of the respective District Unions.

A motion was made and seconded to adopt the report of the committee.

Delegate Olander: I know that the time is going fast and that we will have to press the work in hand in order to complete it properly, and yet I think that a little time might very well be given to a question of this kind and that we might touch upon some experiences we have had in the past in matters of this nature; that we ought to endeavor to get, not merely a unanimous expression on the subject, but a unanimous opinion and understanding.

The resolution, as I got its meaning, is for a general solidification of the International Union in the sense of rebuilding it into the form now used by our District Unions—put it all into one, having one general membership and one general system of control. That is not a new proposition. I don't think the authors of it had in mind either the "One Big Union" idea or the I. W. W. System, but rather that they were thinking of a greater unity and some way in which we might all get together without the difficulties that sometimes confront us now.

It has been my experience, and it has been yours, Mr. Chairman, and that of every man here who has been through some of the difficulties we have met, in relation to this question, that nearly all of those who begin thinking and studying this problem, are led to the conclusion—and a very natural one—that the way to get results is to have everybody get together at the same time, and that the way to get them to do that is to have them all in one general organization and under the control or one general vote. But you and I also know that that does not work. It is not that we are opposed to a theory; it is not that we object to what some men call radical notions, but we have been through these things, in addition to seeing them now operating in many parts of the world to the very contrary of the hopes of those who would like to see that kind of organization here in the United States.

On the Great Lakes, when we reorganized years ago, we felt that all ought to be together, and the Constitution of the Sailors' Union of the Great Lakes, then known as the Lake Seamen's Union, was so written as to include in its membership every one on board ship. And we didn't stop at writing the Constitution along those lines; the Cooks were then members of the Lake Seamen's Union, and we invited the Firemen and the Oilers to step in, and we intimated to them that that was the only way they could come into the International Union. We said the same to the firemen and linemen on the tug boats of the Great Lakes, men that properly belonged within the ranks of our International Union. We conducted a live organizing campaign at a time when the spirit of the men was ripe for coming into the organization. I recall that in the Spring of 1900 the membership of the Lake Seamen's Union showed something around three hundred men in good standing. But the spirit was here, and within sixty days over three thousand men had enrolled, the organization shooting up by leaps and bounds. We called for the Cooks and got some of them; we called for the firemen and got some of them, but what was the result?

As soon as there was any organization among the men, so that they could give some organized expression to their thoughts and desires, the Cooks said: "We want a Cooks' organization, where the cook can get together with his fellows and discuss problems concerning his particular section of the craft." That feeling got so acute that, the response not being quick enough, a movement was started to secure a charter from a shore organization. "Anything," was the cry, "to enable the cook to meet with the cook and discuss the problems of the cook, because the sailor does not understand them as we do, and neither does the fireman. We would be quite willing to have them listen to us, but the trouble is when we start discussing these problems of the cook the sailor comes up and tells us what we ought to do, tells us he knows as much about these problems as we do. And that isn't true."

The present tool exactly the same position with reference to their end of the ship. They already had an organization that had been in existence for many years. It had suffered under the same difficulties as the Sailors' Union of the Great Lakes and had dwindled down, but had begun to spring up again.

The only effect of taking that position on the Great Lakes was to keep out of the International Seamen's Union for a number of years—I think it was until 1908, if I am not mistaken—the Firemen's Union, which, without any particular action on our part, automatically assumed membership over the Firemen. The Firemen went there; there wasn't any chance to put them in any other organization.

There were those among us on the Great Lakes who believed that the policy we had started to carry out was a mistaken one, because we found that the sailor, too, felt that the cook could not discuss the problems of the deck, nor could the fireman and oiler, and they, in turn, felt that their problems ought to be decided by them. They were willing that the firemen and the cooks should listen, but the firemen and cooks arose and took a part in that discussion and told the other fellow what they thought of it, and there was fear that the vote might be determined by arguments coming from that division of the craft having the least knowledge of the condition in that particular section of the ship.

Was there anything new about that? It has been the experience of every International Union in this country, every one of them. Those who favor the system of organization on a large scale, as laid down by this resolution, very frequently point to the United Mine Workers as an example of the kind of union they want. Let me tell you that if you examine into the system of the United Mine Workers, you will find that they approach very nearly the system of organization we are using. They use the District form in a somewhat different way than we do. Their International Union isn't one solid unit, it doesn't even keep a membership record in the sense usually spoken of in connection with plans of this kind. It does not carry a treasury; those treasuries lie in the District Unions, precisely as in our case. They have, in their local organizations, brought about a so-called amalgamation involving the different crafts, but on this basis: that the mine workers proper are so overwhelmingly in the maority and the locations in which they work are so isolated, and the number of men outside the actual mine workers—that is to say, the men that are not, in some degree, actual miners, are so few that they are compelled to take these men into their organization in order to have discipline, and in order to give these few men some opportunity for redress of their wrongs. An isolated mining camp, with about a thousand miners, not a handful of engineers, a few firemen, an electrician or two, and nobody else in the town. Manifestly, if these few engineers, that fireman or two, or that electrician were to get any assistance whatsoever, or get any results in an organized sense, they could only do so by accepting membership in the local union of the Miners. But there was rebellion, even against that, and these men sought to form small locals of their own, in some cases only two or three men, and then by the action of those few men seek to influence, through the fact that they could say that it wasn't the action of the larger local, the main local of a thousand or more miners. That kind of a situation necessitated every one coming together in these camps.

But even in that trade, with its isolation, it has special problems. They haven't adopted the general organization plan of one gigantic union, not even among the coal miners, and certainly not in the mining industry, because we have another organization, the Mine, Mill and Smeltermen's Union, and while there has been talk of forming an amalgamation between these two Internationals, it has been purely on the District basis, and they don't seem to be able to get together.

This is all caused by the fact that men, as they get experience on these questions—the fireman, as he gets experience, the cook as he gets experience, the sailor, the miner, the machinist, the electrician, the carpenter—all are alike. An examination of their organizations will show the same degree of feeling aroused on these questions, and they all reach the conclusion that no one understands their trade better than they do themselves, or as well as they do, and that, therefore, no one can be fully trusted to deal directly with the problems of their particular trade except themselves.

I submit that is perfectly sound reasoning. True, we may point to Great Britain and say that the sailors and firemen are all in one organization there. Well, you know they have some difficulty in finding some method of operating the British Union that will give the men some real right of expression, some real opportunity to tell how they feel. In Great Britain it has developed into a General Executive Committee, a central organization, centralizing the power that really speaks for the organization. If that is the only way that we can get results, I would say: "Very well, let's take it." I dislike the thought of centralization of power. I don't like to have any other man hold control over me. I instinctively rebel

Contributed by American Federation of Labor

Immigration for Exploitation

Big business wants immigrants to aid its "open shop" campaign, is the frank statement by Miss Frances Kellor in her book "Immigration and the Future."

Miss Kellor is the organizer and vice-chairman of the Interracial Council and has reorganized the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers. The Interracial Council includes representatives of the largest corporations in the country.

"The United States," writes Miss Kellor, "is now bent upon increasing production and lowering its cost, upon an 'open shop' contest, and to further this it wants immigrant man power.

"The United States needs immigrants with habits of thrift and frugality who will accumulate savings and thus increase capital for new enterprises, and for this it needs immigrant wage earners. In a word, if the incoming immigrant does not contribute some or all of these things, Americans do not want him because his coming will be a failure for himself and for this country."

In a New York financial paper last December Miss Kellor suggested that a board be created to investigate the immigration question with power to amend immigration laws "whenever a statement of conditions is presented which may make it appear necessary or expedient."

This board would consist of five cabinet officials and four other citizens, appointed by the President, one of whom should represent labor.

"Unanimous consent of the members should be necessary to any action by the board to exclude certain classes for a stated period or to limit the number of immigrants of any race, class or occupation of any economic, industrial or other condition temporarily existing in the United States."

The above statements indicate the desire of big business—the creation of a supergovernment that would have sole charge of immigration and the placing of these aliens in attacks on trade unions and a lowering of living standards.

"Thrifty immigrants" are desired so their money can be used by capitalists "for new enterprises."

This is what big business is pleased to term "scientific immigration regulation."

Labor Must Hold Ideals

In an address at an open forum at Denver, Col., Rev. Borden B. Kessler uttered a warning against materialism in the labor movement. He said labor can not defeat the capitalist with the latter's weapons.

"You trade unionists stand for something higher than your opponents do," he said. "You stand for personality and the sacredness of human life. Whether you consider yourself religious or unreligious or anti-religious, I find a religious kinship in your working for the group which sometimes surpasses the spirit of the church.

"A movement is needed which will put the emphasis on persons, not on profits. We have just come through the greatest exhibition of material force that the world has ever seen. It was a war of matter against matter and the greatest amount of matter conquered. We are now inclined to think that force can do anything. That was the state of mind of Germany after 1871, and I am not attacking the government when I say there are people among us who would drive us to the point Germany afterward reached."

Attack Seamen's Act

Vessel interests on the Great Lakes have renewed their opposition to the seamen's law and a committee of the Detroit Chamber of Commerce will invite shippers to a conference to consider urging Congress to modify the act.

Representatives of these companies declared at congressional hearings that there was no necessity for much life-saving equipment on these boats, as none of them went more than five miles from shore. To the Congressman who has never seen these inland seas the thought would be conveyed that they are but enlarged mill ponds. As the law now stands, no vessel carries lifeboats or rafts equal to their passenger capacity, but still the owners object to expense.

Labor Aids World Vets

Organized labor is steady in its support of the government's program for the vocational rehabilitation of war-disabled.

"The army took the individuals and molded them into a mass," said Uel W. Lamkin, director of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. "Now, we must take these men of the mass and turn them back into individuals again."

It is stated that almost weekly come reports of local unions who waived apprenticeship regulations or let down the bars to admit to membership free of charge these boys who risked their lives and suffered injury that now forces them to learn a new trade or calling.

Trouble for Four L's

Operations are not running smooth for the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen these days. O. R. Taylor, a member of this employers' outfit, is mad clear through, and has paid his good money for an advertisement in a local newspaper to unburden his woes, which are substantially as follows:

The legion is a company "union," maintained by lumber owners. The "union's" wage board consists of an equal number of employers and employed. The chairman is an employer. At a recent conference of the board wages were reduced, and now Taylor tells how it happened. One of the employes' representatives was absent and the chairman took it upon himself to fill the vacancy. The appointee "happened" to be an employer and the vote to reduce wages was 5 to 3. The membership of the "union" was not consulted.

World's Workers

At Hamilton, Ontario, organized carpenters have asked contractors to advance rates from 85 cents an hour to $1. Other demands include the union shop, double pay for overtime and weekly pay days.

Statistics relative to Labor hostilities in Spain have recently been published in Barcelona. They show that during the year 1920, 101 persons, comprising employers, managers of works, policemen and employes, were killed, while 176 were wounded. There were eleven bomb explosions resulting in 5 killed and 15 wounded.

Labor troubles are still stirring Barcelona, Spain. Recently shots were exchanged between a number of alleged syndicalists and the caretakers of a large silk factory which resulted in several casualties.

Recently Premier E. G. Theodore declared that anyone who doubted that Australians would soon be called upon to defend their homes against Asiatic invasion, were living in a fool's paradise. Asiatic ideals and aspirations, he added, were a menace to the ideals of the Australian labor party.

"Written with the idea of preparing the public mind for a drive against the wages of building trade workers," is the comment of the Alberta Labor News on a plea by the Calgary Daily Herald for wage reductions because the price of lumber has dropped. "The insinuation that the wages of building tradesmen are, or have been, extortionate, is false and without any justification whatever," says the Labor News. "How can it be said that the wages are in any way unreasonable unless it can be proven that the standard of living in 1913 or 1914 was too high? Does the Herald claim that the wages now received by the workers in the building trades are higher in their buying power than the wages in 1914? And does the Herald believe that the building trades workers should have a lower standard of living than they had in 1914?"

The first Monday of June, 1921, is the date set for the All-Australia Labor Conference. To this congress will be called all representatives of unions and political sections of the Australian Labor party. They will prepare a program on which all Labor Sections are expected to unite to protect and advance the interests of the workers of Australia. Following the congress, a national political conference will be called with a view to placing the decisions arrived at in the platform of the Labor party. (1) A decent wage for all workers; (2) the socialization of industry; (3) the most suitable methods of trade union organization to meet present conditions; (4) the participation of workers in the control of industry generally; (5) representation of the employes upon the management of state-owned industries, such as railways, street car lines, water supply, postal service, etc.; (6) representation of employes on management of private industries similar to that existing in some continental countries and being claimed in England and America; (7) housing; (8) workers' compensation and employers' liability; (9) production and development; (10) standard of comfort, including education; (11) unemployment and sickness insurance, and (12) marketing and the abolition of the middleman.

SEAMEN, YOUR RIGHTS AND DUTIES UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, YOUR RIGHT TO WAGES, OVERTIME, WORKING HOURS, SALVAGE, COMPENSATION IN CASE OF PERSONAL INJURY, COMPENSATION IN CASE OF NEGLECT TO TREAT FOR INJURIES RECEIVED OR ILLNESS, WHAT CONSTITUTES WRONGFUL DISCHARGE, WHAT IS MUTINY, QUESTIONS OF DISCIPLINE.

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

Pacific Coast Marine

After having run ashore in Wrangell narrows, Alaska, recently, the Standard Oil tanker "Atlas" has been repaired on Puget Sound.

The new tanker "Liebre," built for the General Petroleum Company and launched December 15, was given her trial trip on the bay and adjusted her compasses.

By the small margin of ninety minutes only the motorship "Siam" saved her charter by being ready to load cargo on the Sound. Had she failed in her time she would have cost her owners $45,000.

The schooner "Henry Wilson" arrived at Hilo recently with a cargo of lumber from Port Angeles. She took 40 days to complete the trip, one of the longest voyages on record between those ports.

More than 150 cadets in the Coast Guard Service will be taken to Europe for a cruise aboard the U. S. "Mohave," which is being completed at an Oakland shipyard. The "Mohave" is one of three large cutters built for the Coast Guard.

With forty passengers and much freight the steamship "Santa Cruz" arrived at San Francisco last week. In the hold of the "Santa Cruz" were 5084 bundles of gunnies, 6206 bags of bone meal, 1513 sacks of saltpetre, 816 tons of cocoanuts, 752 tons of merchandise and 277 boxes of tea.

The power schooner "Mae Hyman" was towed into San Francisco February 18 by the steamer "South Coast," which picked up the derelict seven miles southwest of Stewart's Point. After taking the craft in tow the "South Coast" also picked up the crew of three who had abandoned her after she struck the rocks.

Recent reports from Honolulu included an announcement that the steamer "Senasta" from New York for Manila, arrived at the Hawaiian Islands with her engines disabled and that it would be necessary to have repairs made before the ship could proceed on her journey. The extent or cause of the disability was not stated.

The British steamship "Pengreep," which has been steaming up the coast at forced speed to fulfill charter provisions, arrived on time at Portland. She was under charter to Strauss & Co. to load grain. Failure to have arrived in time would have cost her owners a large sum, as she sailed in ballast from Europe.

Local steamship officials comment on the apparent revival of trade conditions at Mexican ports, evidenced by the large cargo which the Pacific Steamship Company's steamship "Admiral Farragut" carried from San Francisco. The "Admiral Farragut" is said to have been offered more freight than she is capable of carrying. This is the first time for many months that this has happened.

The "President Roosevelt," said to be the largest motor-driven merchant vessel in the world, has been placed in the service between Scandinavian ports and San Francisco, by the Norway Pacific Steamship Company, it is announced. This makes the third motor ship to be operated to this coast by that corporation. The others are the "Borland" and "George Washington," the latter having arrived Monday.

Another big tanker has been added to the coast fleet of fuel vessels. The "John G. Drum," which was built for the Associated Oil Company, has been launched from the Alameda plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. Upon leaving the ways she was towed by the Rolph tug "Relief" and Peterson's tug "Tatoosh" to the Union Iron Works for installation of her boilers.

Chairman W. S. Benson and other Shipping Board officials at Washington are reported in Eastern papers to have declared that the withdrawal of Government tonnage had about reached an end. A few additional assignments to the various boneyards will be made in the next few months and then the reaction will set in, they said. Thenceforth the vessels will be gradually returned to service. Approximately 350 Shipping Board steamers are now resting on mud banks most of them on the East Coast.

At Hanlon's shipyard recently a novel engineering task was successfully accomplished when the hull of the "Dan F. Hanlon" was pulled out of the water to the ways by the steamship "Homer's" second gear. As the Hanlon yard has no drydock it was necessary to place the hull on the launching ways. The task of getting her out of the water was a problem which baffled marine engineers for a week. Finally the "Hanlon" was pulled up by the tackle. Only twenty-five minutes were necessary to complete the job.

An interesting situation with regard to the inspection of American steamers in Shipping but the "feeder" steamers do not call at American ports for years on end. The Steamboat Inspection Service has resisted the additional duty because of the expense of foreign inspections and the shortage of funds.

Five ex-German sailing vessels of the type bought by the Robert Dollar Company from the British are offerd for sale now by the French government. The ships are at Santa Rosalia, the port where the Dollar purchase was made. They are put on the market because of the refusal of the French government to take them off the hands of Germany, the refusal being due to a lack of funds for the increase of French maritime interests at the present. The Robert Dollar Company is not expected to interest itself in these ships, as they already have a fleet of nearly a dozen which will fill the needs of the company. It is possible however, that some other San Francisco shipping concern may be a bidder.

Refusing to comply with the request of the Luckenbach line and the American-Hawaiian line the Shipping Board has declined to withdraw its five steamers from the operation of the North Atlantic & Western Steamship Company in the intercoastal trade, according to Washington dispatches. This ruling, it is believed, may disrupt the intercoastal conference, as W. A. Harriman, head of the American-Hawaiian line, recently intimated his company would withdraw unless the "Nawsco" line were ejected from this trade. The board, in its decision held that the North Atlantic & Western was the first to connect Boston with the Pacific Coast and for a time was the only line operating between North Atlantic ports and the West Coast.

San Francisco export and import firms are on the verge of a serious crisis which may mean disaster for some of them. The working staffs in the offices have been cut to the bone to save overhead and it was hoped that the saving would tide the companies over until there comes a hint of business resumption. Although the export and import companies have not suffered from the slump as have the shipping corporations that have vast amounts invested in ships and docks they are weaker because of their lack of assets on which money can be borrowed and will be the first to go under, if conditions force the issue to that climax. Many of the larger houses with connections of many years' standing in the Orient have recalled their representatives and are placing them in the home offices in place of newer men. Some of the houses have even discharged telephone operators and private secretaries.

The "Golden State" and "Hawkeye State" are due at San Francisco March 4. Fifteen vessels, all of the same type, are to sail between this port and the Far East. The "Hawkeye State" is carrying passengers to Honolulu via San Francisco under direction of the American Express Company. The "Golden State," under the house flag of the Pacific Mail, will be placed in the China, Japan service after arriving here with her many passengers. These ships are the first two of the longer and speedier type of passenger and cargo liners being built for the shipping board. They are representative of the 535-foot class of which sixteen are being constructed in Atlantic Coast shipyards; with the seven liners of the 522-foot class built for the shipping board by the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, they form the only passenger liners in the immense shipping board fleet.

Mexico has purchased another former United States war craft, making a total of three vessels acquired from local interests within four months. The newest addition is the "Yakqui," formerly one of the eagle type of sub-chasers used extensively during the war in doing patrol duty on the East Coast. Reconditioning of the vessel is now under way at the Frank Stone shipyards in Oakland. The craft will not be ready to leave for Mazatlan before three weeks. Edward S. Hough, well-known consulting engineer, who acted as the agent for the sale of the "Agua Prieta" and the "Machias," the other two vessels purchased by the Mexican Government, performed a similar service in reference to the "Yakqui." According to Hough, the "Yakqui" will be used for the same purpose as the other two craft—patrolling the coast of Mexico and also serve the customs boarding officials at Mazatlan.

SHADES OF THE VIKINGS

Included in the many activities affected during the world war, are several which were almost obliterated. Perhaps none felt the influence with greater force than world exploration, which dropped off to a minimum. Those daring spirits from which the personnel of exploring parties are recruited, had more pressing and exciting business directly at hand, and until such time as those immediate requirements had been fulfilled, all else was of necessity relegated to some future period of time. Those venturesome individuals who were not directly engaged with the armed forces of either side, generally satisfied their desire for adventure in mine sweeping, blockade running, and sailing, or fishing in the dangerous waters of the North Sea. The element of uncertain life which lurked in the floating mines, submarines, and other hazards of the deep, appealed to the soul of the explorer, in as great force as the attainment of the North or South Pole, and furnished a considerable greater degree of excitement for that particular time.

Now that the passionate emotions of hostilities have become a matter of history, the thread of like again assumes an aspect of dullness to the vision of the adventurer; they can never be tempted to remain inactive, or to conform with the ordinary course of conventional or social life. The all-pervading restlessness of the vikings will not be suppressed, and once again courageous and adventurous eyes are turned from the sedentary existence of town or hamlet towards the [illegible] corners of the earth.

[illegible] has resulted in the formation of sixteen expeditions; some already on foot, others in process of planning. The British Antarctic expedition, headed by Commander John Lachlan Cope, formerly of the Royal Navy, is one of the most extensive.

It is financed to $750,000 and includes five ships, one hundred and twenty-five men, airplanes and a complete wireless outfit. The objective of this voyage is circumnavigation of the Antarctic Ocean, with a dash to the South Pole as an interesting diversion. The daring Norwegian, Captain Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole, was last heard from before the close of navigation, one hundred and seventy miles northwest of Nome in the Bering straits, where his staunch little vessel "Maud" was stuck in the ice-pack. He expects to be able to drift toward the North Pole when the Arctic winter breaks.

Captain Axel Landmark and Captain John Varney are, according to latest news, exploring the Kolyma River in Siberia. Their outfit consists of a fifty-foot power boat, while the chart upon which they depend for guidance is very primitive, and was made in 1878 by the Swedish explorer, Nordenskjold.

The Danish explorer, Knut Rasmussen, is preparing an expedition to cover a period of five years into Greenland, while another Dane, Lang Koch, is planning the exploration of North Greenland with the object of establishing Danish sovereignty in that territory.

In addition to the Frigid Zone exploring parties, there are four expeditions progressing in Africa, including the Mackie ethnological expedition to Central Africa, the main purpose of which is to study the Bahima, a pastoral tribe of Ankole, west of Uganda.

The British Natural History Museum have expeditions operating along the West Coast and the Jem Maria Mountains. An Italian company, under the Duke of Abruzzi, is engaged in endeavors to discover the source of the Webi Shebeli River in Abyssinia. Mr. T. A. Barns who discovered a race of pygmy savages on his last trip is now touring the Belgian Congo.

There are several minor exploring parties operating in South America, including the mysterious Amazon Valley. Also in Baffin Land and Novaya Zembya, China, Tibet, and the Islands of the Pacific.

Thus ever the Angel of unrest spreads his influence over the earth, inspiring the adventurous with the full quality of his spirit.

WHERE'S THE NORMALCY?

War is exactly what Sherman said it was and then some! The recent little unpleasantness seems to have raised "war" with normal standards in the original domain of Johnny Bull. Old-time reverence for the divinity of property is receiving an awful contradiction in these days of unemployment and hunger; and should this tendency of the working stiffs to help themselves, continue to expand, shock absorbers will be the order of the day amongst the plutocracy of the "tight little Isle." Evidence is not wanting that the ox which treadeth out the corn, refuses to be muzzled any longer, therefore, the party of ultra-expensive girth is acquiring wrinkles of worry, if not of paunch.

One of the reasons for this condition of mental anguish, which permeates the ranks of British "big business," is contained in the following consular report of recent date.

Commercial circles in Great Britain are much exercised because of the increasing pilferage of goods in transit. Accordingly a committee has been appointed by the London Chamber of Commerce, comprising representatives of merchants, manufacturers, cartage contractors, export packers, shipping and forwarding agents, and master lightermen and others, with a view to taking such steps as seem best suited to deal with the evil. The committee has also approached the British Home Office with a view to strengthening the police arrangements on and in the vicinity of the River Thames. The urgent necessity of universal action is illustrated in a letter which the committee addressed to the Home Office on December 1 and which pointed out, among other things, that:

Claims for theft and pilferage passed by Lloyd's Claims Bureau from September 27, 1919, to November 6, 1920, amounted to £574,154 [$2,794,120] in 59 weeks, an average of £9,731 [$47,355] per week. These are only the settlements by such Lloyd's underwriters as use the bureau, besides which there are large amounts paid by the insurance companies, and there are also the losses borne by merchants uninsured and the enormous claims paid by the shipowners. . . . The claims paid by one shipping line were at one time at the rate of $250,000 per annum.

We are at a loss to understand what tremendous force can have unbalanced the docility of our limejuice cousins. For the love of Mike! When are those birds going back to their state of normalcy? Don't they realize that Russia is the only country in which such disregard for the belongings of the plute is expected to exist, or has their sense of servility been smoked out of them altogether by the Kaiser's gas bombs? However, a remedy for this new malady must be adopted, and if these sleight-of-hand performers persist in the evil tenor of their way they will require a few inoculations of bacteria from our Supreme Court decisions. This might be deemed necessary if the westward course of the trouble is to be checked owing to the contagious nature of the disorder.

Manchester ranks as the second port in the United Kingdom in regard to the volume of oil imports, London being placed first. Within the port there are eight installations, totaling 59 oil tanks, with a holding capacity of 37,594,105 gallons. In connection with the oil trade of the port the Manchester Ship Canal Co. announces that in the near future there will be a dock completed in the lower section of the canal in which steamers with cargoes of petroleum spirit and other low-flash-point oils can safely be accommodated. It is also reported that this new oil depot will be utilized for the bunkering of oil-propelled vessels.

World is rushing toward bankruptcy, is opinion of Congressman Robert Luce of Massachusetts, a lifelong student of economics. National debts of the world, excluding Russia, have increased by $88,000,000,000 since the armistice, paper money of world has increased to the extent of $39,000,000,000 in the same period and that private loans by Americans to European countries total nearly $4,000,000,000 in addition to $10,000,000,000 which this government loaned to allies during war.

GRASPING AN OPPORTUNITY

It is a poor rule that will not work more than one way. Unemployment conditions on the Atlantic Coast as well as in other districts furnish at least one compensating feature. It is necessary, however, that timely and proper advantage be taken in order to derive benefit from the situation.

Owing to the fact that all the ports of our Atlantic seaboard are choked with idle ships, they are also teeming with idle seamen. Reliable information intimates that members of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association do not intend to permit the hours of their enforced idleness to be entirely wasted. They realize that circumstances have furnished an opportunity for education along trades union lines, to a larger number of seamen than could possibly be gathered together under normal conditions. The benefits of closer fraternity can not be overlooked as seamen during such periods as these become more fully acquainted with each other. The situation affords an opportunity for real constructive action, in which a greater percentage of the rank and file take part; therefore, a greater percentage of the same element are better versed in regards to actions taken and the chances of misunderstandings are considerably lessened. In large and enthusiastic meetings such as are now taking place on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, it is imperative that the wishes and desires of minorities be considered with all the toleration that can be practiced. The majority on a given question at a certain time is not always right. Changing external circumstances may require a sudden change of front, therefore, intense consideration of a particular subject in regular meetings, which might only be carried after emotional argument, cannot satisfy all; but every effort should be made to acquire the greatest degree of satisfaction to the largest number of members.

A rule or order of a union can be made pleasing, or displeasing, in accordance with the interests of members in the matter thereof. The general situation on the Atlantic bids fair to result in great advancemment for the organizations, fuller understanding amongst the members; the establishment of a well-defined policy ably supported, and a higher conception of the aims and objects for which the organized seamen of the world continue to strive.

WATCH THEM GROW

Whenever two forces meet in conflict there must inevitably be one certain spot, in either side, upon which the weight of opposition strikes hardest. This applies to every struggle, including wars of attrition.

In the efforts of American seamen to maintain their human and citizen rights, perhaps the most severe pressure has been exerted upon our comrades in the district of the Great Lakes.

Whatever opportunities for advancement of interests may have resulted from war activities in the other districts, they did not operate with equal effect in the regions of the Lakes.

Considering the fact that the Lake seamen are directly confronted by the most powerful and aggressive combination hostile to labor in the United States, it is not to be expected that this section would be able to advance with the rapidity of other districts, who have been more fortunately situated.

There is no reason for the Lake seamen to feel discouraged, or for others to believe that there is the slightest lack of energy or fault of method responsible for their conditions. The Lake seamen have always demonstrated their fighting ability and revealed the most earnest and intelligent leadership.

They never overlook an opportunity to strengthen their ranks, or advance the interests of seamen and labor in general. Judging from record of past performances and the spirit displayed under most adverse circumstances, we can confidently look forward to some lively and effective organization work being accomplished by all groups of the Lake seamen when the coming season opens.

DON'T BE A TRAMP

The story is going the rounds in New Orleans of a tramp who secured a position in a sugar mill there. After working for several days and getting his clothing and hair thoroughly dusted with powdered sugar, he quit his job and proceeded to light up on bootleg whiskey. When he became thoroughly saturated, the idea came to him to move on to another town. He located a box car, crawled in and was soon fast asleep. It was not long before the sugar attracted a vast number of flies which soon covered his clothes and face. In his sleep, he made feeble attempts to drive them off. Finally, a bee flew in and stung him on the nose, at which the tramp arose and said: "Now, look here, if one of you does that again, I am going to put you all off."

The American people have been stung very considerably of late by all sorts of fake get-rich-quick schemes, and it is time for us to awake and "put them all off." This would be a hard thing to do if there was only one place where a man could put his money. Fortunately, there are not only get-rich-quick schemes but investment opportunities that are thoroughly safe and profitable. Thousands of workers in America, who are too wise to get stung, are putting their spare cash every week into $1.00 Treasury Savings Stamps and thereby are laying up a store of independence for the future.

The subscription list of the JOURNAL continues to grow rapidly. Comrade John Clausen, agent for the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association at Galveston, Texas, is the latest to favor us with an order for a big increase. We feel assured there are others about to emulate the worthy example of Comrade Clausen, so send them in, boys.

The American merchant fleet was increased during the last fiscal year by 670 vessels of 3,416,000 gross tons. On June 30 the American shipping comprised 28,183 vessels of 16,324,024 gross tons. This compares favorably with 7,928,688 gross tons in 1914.

MOONEY CASE WON'T DOWN

"If ever there was a case where the law has failed to afford a remedy for its own gross misuse, it is that of Mooney," says the New York World, in discussing the confession of John McDonald, star witness for the Mooney prosecution.

"That he (Mooney) had a guilty part in the bomb outrage on preparedness day in 1916 was never credibly established. That the prosecution employed methods to justify his conviction at the time, dishonorable and corrupt, is shown in the sworn statements of men once in its service. Judges and assistant district attorneys connected with the case have since declared that on the evidence presented against him Mooney should not have been convicted.

"Yet nothing is done to rectify a wrong which strikes at the very foundation of the administration of justice."

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

THE SEAMEN'S MEETINGS

This has been an unusually full week among organized seamen in the port of New York.

Owing to the prevailing business depression and inevitable tying up of hundreds of oversea freight steamers, thousands of unemployed seamen are now on the beach.

The shipowners, with their ancient cunning have therefore thought it a favorable opportunity to reduce wages, and force an entering wedge through the wage clauses of the seamen's agreements. But they have been somewhat nonplussed by the cheerful and unbending attitude of the organized seamen who have long been preparing for a winter vacation, and feel that they can afford it after all their titanic exertions since the beginning of the world war. For more than five years our comrades have been in constant and strenuous service, therefore a respite is acceptable.

A revival of trade is confidently expected soon, and the organized seamen will work all the better for having enjoyed a rest.

The Seamen's Unions have been taking advantage of the opportunity presented to conduct an extensive campaign of education among our membership.

It is not often that such a large proportion of the members can be reached, and instructed under snch favorable conditions as exist today. The organized seamen are now in a receptive mood which results in closely packed and intensely interested meetings.

Tanker Disappears

It is believed that the American tank steamship "Hewitt," which left Sabine, Texas, about January 21st for Boston, will be listed in the fleet of mystery ships that have vanished from the surface of the sea leaving no trace. Radio inquiry sent broadcast has failed to reveal any news of the tanker which should have reached her destination in eight days.

The "Hewitt" carried a crew of forty-two men, signed on at Portland, Me., and was commanded by Captain H. J. Hansen.

Timely Reconsideration

The hasty action of the regular meeting of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association on January 31st in laying Comrade G. H. Brown as coast organizer and instructor on the score of economy, was very wisely reconsidered by the subsequent meeting held February 7. This action in rescinding the act of the previous meeting was taken after a complete survey of the economic and industrial situation all along the coast.

The result of this survey clearly showed that at no time in our history have the services of a good instructor been such a necessity.

With ships laid up, and thousands unemployed seamen all along the coast with nothing better to do than listen and think, and with the Shipowners' Association planning and actively contending for a deep cut in wages, not only after May 1st but if possible, now, the importance of instruction and encouragement to our members, in the present crisis cannot be overestimated.

Revising the Constitution

The committee appointed early last year by the Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association to revise its constitution, has at length been called together and has been in continuous session this week at New York.

The work of this important committee was deferred for months in the hope that the Twenty-fourth Convention of the I. S. U. of A. would be able to agree upon a common constitution suitable for the Sailors' Unions in all districts so as to avoid the necessity of transfers. But as this plan was for various reasons found impractcable, the committee has been called together in conference for the purpose indicated.

An entirely new constitution is an imperative necessitiy for the Sailors' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf. The present instrument is fundamentally a legacy of the old Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union, preamble and all, as revised by a committee of that organization in November, 1900. It has no more application to our present requirements than the laws of Wisby. It is a document of conflicting amendments, inserted from time to time during the past seven years to cover new exigencies as they arose, until now its cardinal provisions are almost impossible of interpretation even by the wisest of our sea lawyers and expert parliamentarians. It became necessary to modernize, simplify and clarify its provisions, so as to render them intelligible to all. Judging by the calibre of the committee now having the revision in hand, we feel assured that a workable and up-to-date constitution will be presented to the Association for its consideration and indorsement.

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

Seamen's Vocational Training

One of the prominent features of the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the International Seamen's Union of America was contained in the report of the Committee on Policies and Education.

When the President of the International Seamen's Union returned from Europe, and suggested consideration for vocational training, the matter received but little favor from the membership. The old-timers regarded the proposal as unnecessary, and the younger members considered that if they could get by, it would be sufficient for the purpose.

Actual Service Required

In former years, actual sea service was required in order to become a sailor, and the same holds true in the present day, notwithstanding our improvements in the methods of propulsion, and the time-honored science of sailing ship practice will always remain to a certain extent. Previously the long voyages in sailing vessels furnished ample opportunity for apprentice seamen to acquire the necessary skill to be classed as A. B.'s; but the steamships of today preclude such opportunities, and the apprentice must seek elsewhere for the instruction necessary to render himself efficient.

Unwarranted Complaints

A number of shipowners frequently complain of inefficient crews, but they make no attempt to remedy the evil, or seek the cause. In their efforts to obtain cheap crews they ignore the obvious fact that quality is inconsistent with cheapness. We have directed their attention at all times to the fact that the most efficient seaman is the most economical, and therefore the safest to be employed. Foreign competition can easiest be met, by the maintenance of a standard of efficiency in the crews of the American merchant marine that will be kept at the highest standard continually, thereby lessening the big item of expense as embodied in cost of repairs. To date, however, shipowners generally have pursued an impecunious policy of seeking the cheapest crews irrespective of skill.

Seamen Educate Themselves

In order to advance the interests of the American Merchant Marine and to save it from possible disaster it has now become necessary for the Seamen's Unions to take these matters in hand, and our graduates must be the most efficiently trained and best educated seamen in the world. Modern shipbuilding and rigging have gradually standardized, and the oldest and most experienced mariner will find something to learn as new methods apply.

The establishment of our own training quarters where work will be performed under supervision and guidance of experts of the modern school will result in our graduates carrying their skill and knowledge to sea with them and practicing the same on board ship. When this is accomplished, union seamen will have to be conceded the most skillful and dependable afloat, therefore the most economical. Shipowners will realize their interests will be best served by employment of these trained seamen, who will be capable of keeping the vessels in perfect shape in all departments; instead of the ships being laid up at frequent intervals for overhauling by expensive shore gangs, costly delay, or loss of charters. Further explanation is deemed superfluous and if readily put into effect in accordance with the program of the committee success is a foregone conclusion.

Legal Notes

In last week's issue of the SEAMEN'S JOURNAL we discussed the Hong Kong record in the "Sequoya" case, wherein thirteen Chinese seamen, shanghaied in New York for a month's advance, libeled the ships at Hong Kong for $22,000, claiming wages for the entire voyage, and transportation back to New York, on the ground that they had been engaged under false pretenses, and otherwise unfairly dealt with at the British Consulate at the Seamen's (?) Institute Building, both before and after signing.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Frederick

R. Graves, attorney for the Seamen's Unions at the hearing before the Commissioner, appointed by the British foreign office to take testimony in this case at New York, we have been privileged to examine the record of the first two days' proceedings.

The hearings were held at the British Consulate, 44 Whitehall street, beginning December 10, 1920.

From our examination of these voluminous documents, and laying aside detail and legal verbiage, we are firmly convinced that whatever else was done, the Chinese crew were signed in entire ignorance of certain clauses inserted in the Articles at Hong Kong where the voyage originated.

The Captain of the "Sequoya" acknowledges that he signed the men for 18 months "trading to and fro" between the United States and the Orient, because they had demurred at signing for two years as he had first proposed. Their demurrer was stated to him by the Chinese boarding master, George Wong, of 48 Mott street, from whom he engaged them, and the master modified the time they were signed for according to their request. A letter to this effect was dictated by the port captain of the Standard Oil Company, the real owners of the ships at the company's office, 26 Broadway, and given to Wong and the Chinese libellants have filed this letter in evidence with their attorneys in Hong Kong.

Both the captain and the consul's clerk admit that in so far as they know, none of the 14 men signed except No. 1 man (the bosin) understood any English. No. 1 man knew a little pidgin English, yet he was appointed interpreter; the boarding master who understands English almost perfectly was excluded from the office, therefore the reading of the Articles must have been a mere farce.

Moreover, the Vice-Consul did not even witness this farce, and testifies that he does not remember the incident, as he usually leaves all such unimportant matters to the honesty of his clerks.

Excluding bias or race prejudice against Oriental crews, we devoutly hope the crew of the "Sequoya" win their case. They deserve to win! They had the courage and intelligence to take up the fight against this abominable deception in their own land and against the sovereign power of the British Government.

To that extent their fight is our fight. If they win it will put a stop to a most pernicious practice in the method of signing Asiatic crews at British Consulates within the United States, to the great detriment and loss of the American Merchant Marine. And if they should lose, the practice will have been exploded anyway, and our British competitors will have to invent some other scheme with which to ensnare the heathen Chinese.

Mr. Silas B. Axtell, attorney at law, was present at the regular meeting of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association on February 7, 1920, and gave an interesting summary of the legal business of his office during the year just closed. This business relates exclusively to Seamen's claims and, according to Mr. Axtell's figures, involved an office expenditure of $45,000.

DAILY INFLUENCE OF ASTRONOMY

The following article contains excerpts from an address which has resulted in widespread comment throughout the country; which was recently delivered by Dr. W. W. Campbell, Director and Astronomer of the Lick Observatory of the University of California:

"Astronomy supplies the nations with accurate time, it provides accurate maps of the continents and islands, by it the navigator may locate his ship in the middle of the broad ocean within a mile of its true position, it fixes the boundary lines between nations, and determines the times of high and low tides, vital to mariners in entering many harbors.

"Astronomy has determined that the sun is so large, that if it were a hollow shell there could be poured into it more than a million earths on which we live, and there would still be much unoccupied space between the earth balls.

"If anything should intervene to cut off the sun's energy from the earth for one short month, the tropics would attain to a state of frigidity to which the south polar continent, as now observed, would be a rose garden in comparison.

"The coal deposits upon which we draw today for the running of trains, ships, factories and rolling mills, are but the solar energy of an earlier age, compressed, transformed and preserved for our comfort and power.

"It would take more than two billion earths placed side by side to form a continuous spherical shell around our sun at a distance equal to the earth's distance, and thus to receive the total output of solar heat. Therefore, less than one two-billionth part of that output falls upon the earth.

"How can the sun maintain the supply of energy for tens of millions of years, as it undoubtedly is doing? Practically, a knowledge of the origin of the sun's heat may be the key for locking up great quantities of it on summer days and unlocking it when and where needed.

"Mars is literally one of the earth's brothers and we should be sincerely interested in his welfare. If Venus always presents the same face to the sun, as has been declared, just as the moon always turns the same hemisphere to the earth, then one hemisphere of Venus undoubtedly remains intensely hot in perpetuity, and the other in perpetual darkness and excessively low temperature.

"It is probable that if our vision could penetrate to other stellar systems, lying in all directions from us, we should there find life in abundance, with degrees of intelligence and civilization from which we could learn much, and with which we could sympathize.

"The number of small foreign bodies which collide with our planet every day is very great; a conservative estimate is 20,000,000. Except for our beneficent atmosphere man would suffer many tragedies from the bombardment. There is reason to believe that the earth is growing larger very slowly, from these accretions, and this may have been the process by which the earth grew from a small nuclear beginning up to its present size.

"Rays of light sent out by the sun require a little more than eight minutes to reach the earth, traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles per second. Our sun and its family of planets is traveling through the great stellar system with a speed of twelve and a half miles per second, equivalent to four hundred million miles per year. The earth is certainly hundreds of millions of years in age. Our stellar system may be but one of hundreds of isolated stellar systems distributed through endless space. This is not an established fact, but the evidence seems to run in its favor."

BRITAIN SETS NEW RECORD

All records for the construction of merchant vessels were broken by the shipyards of Great Britain during 1920, when 618 vessels of 2,055,624 tons were completed. According to Lloyd's Register of Shipbuilding, the total of 1919 was exceeded by 435,182 tons, and the previous record figures of 1918 by 142,371 tons.

On the other hand, the figures given on the 1920 output of United States yards—509 vessels of 2,476,253 tons—show a decrease of 1,599,132 tons compared with 1919, this decrease accounting for more than 92 per cent. of the total reduction in tonnage launched abroad during 1920.

The world's output for 1920 was 1759 vessels of 5,861,666 tons, against 2483 vessels of 7,144,549 tons in 1919 and 1750 vessels of 3,332,882 tons in 1913.

A feature of the year has been the launching of 1,825,000 tons of vessels to be fitted with steam turbines, these figures representing one-third of the total world's output of steel steam tonnage.

The tonnage launched by Japan, Norway and Sweden during 1920 also shows a decrease, but the output of other countries increased in comparison to 1919.

WORKERS MUST BE FREE

"It is idle to expect wage earners to be efficient citizens unless our industries are organized so that they may play an increasingly responsible part in determining the conditions under which they earn their living," writes Henry R. Seager, professor of political economy, Columbia University, in a New York paper.

"Employers who give scope to the reasonable aspirations of their employes to have a voice through employe representation in controlling the conditions of employment are rendering an invaluable service to the whole community. They deserve to rank with our best teachers and most forward-looking statesmen. Employers, on the other hand, whose one thought in their relations with those whom they have in their employ is how they can keep them down, thwart their legitimate desire to organize and reduce them to the situation of helpless dependents on the employers' bounty, are undesirable citizens, and should be recognized as such by all men."

"Under all forms of government the ultimate power lies with the masses. It is not kings nor aristocracies, nor land owners nor capitalists, that anywhere really enslave the people. It is their own ignorance."—Henry George.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Railroad Workers Determined

Railroad labor is not going to be driven out on strike right away. The Railroad Labor Board has decided that there exists no emergency to justify, nor any law to permit, the setting aside of the wage award of last summer and the abrogation of the national agreement on shop conditions, entered into between the organized employes and the companies. The principle of collective bargaining has survived the grand assault ordered by the railroad executives under the leadership of Gen. W. W. Atterbury of the Pennsylvania.

Of course the companies will now bring on their formal claim for a revision of the wage award. That will mean weeks—perhaps months—of taking of testimony as to the changed level of commodity prices and of rents and other elements in the cost of living. Then, if the Board finds that the cost of living for the railroad workers has fallen to a serious extent, it may decide that the wages shall be cut.

That will not decide the question, however. The railroad workers may decide that they will not accept the assumption that they are entitled merely to a fodder wage. They may want to increase their standard of living by a few dollars a month, as measured in the cost of food and clothing and rent. They may decide that their present wages are low enough. Just now they are all saying just those things. Their officials reflect the same sentiment. They predict that "Our boys will go out in a rush, from one end of the country to the other," if the companies try, either with or without the sanction of the Board, to make them work for less dollars per month than they are now paid.

Wall Street stock-market gamblers, and coal operators and their lobbyists here, are considerably worried over the stubborn refusal of these railroad men to take rations and keep quiet. The big financial and industrial interests have fared so well, otherwise, in the closing weeks of this Congress, that they look upon organized labor in the railroad and one or two other basic industries as nothing less than crazy in its defiance of "economic law" laid down by these business barons. It is preposterous, they say, that labor should try to keep wages in the railroad industry, and in the coal industry, up in the mid-air of war times!

Congress Favors Profiteers

Business has fared well with the meat packer legislation. Republican National Chairman Hays has sent word to the House steering committee, according to current report, that there shall be no packer legislation. That measure is dead, unless the House leaders become frightened at the storm of protest now being raised by the organized farmers and by organized labor. It seldom gets frightened.

In the matter of the coal control bill, the profiteers have been fortunate in the draft of the Calder bill, which was so clearly subject to being used by hostile courts to enforce the nine workers that organized labor has fought some of its chief features. As organized labor did not promptly offer amendments which would make the bill safe from a trade union standpoint, the bill cannot get anywhere in this Congress, and the coal profiteers will be undisturbed for six months or a year longer, at least.

Then there is the handling of credit for the farmers and small manufacturers, which is sorely needed to restore the power to produce. Wall Street had profited greatly by the collapse of farm prices, and had relieved some of the biggest industrial concerns in the country of their stocks and bonds, before the country realized that credit had been artificially choked off. Congress was in danger of restoring a big volume of farm credit. But the business barons and their lobbies took action in Washington, and the farmers remain helpless, in the lock-step that is leading thousands of them to bankruptcy and foreclosure sales.

Future Prospects Uncertain

The outlook for the remainder of the year—the period after the new administration comes in—is obscure. Harding is trying to learn what he should think, down in Florida, from a motley crowd of millionaire railroad officials, bankers, steel and coal and shipping magnates, and second-rate politicians. He seems to have played safe by selecting Hughes for Secretary of State, and to have pleased the bankers and Judge Gary by promising the Treasury job to Andrew Mellon of Pittsburgh. This Mellon is discovered by the New York World to be one of the richest men in America, the fortune of his family being about $500,000,000. Their interests are in steel, coke, aluminum, waterpower, insurance companies, oil, and other basic industrials, and the capitalization of their companies is near $2,000,000,000. Besides, Mellon, with the estate of the late H. C. Frick, is the owner of the Overholt whisky distillery at Broad Ford, Pa.

This Overholt distillery is of more than passing interest in the formation of the Harding cabinet, because it involves some $18,000,000 worth of whisky in storage. The handling of withdrawal permits for this whisky by the Mellon National Bank in Pittsburgh is reported. In any case the Pennsylvania politicians believe that Mellon will appoint as Commissioner of Internal Revenue—to have in his hands the fate of this stock of whisky—one Harmon Kephart, State Treasurer and leader of the Penrose machine in the Connellsville region for many years past. Kephart's associations with Penrose are a guaranty that he will be no Puritan in handling Mellon's whisky investment. That fact has brought the anti-saloon forces of the country to assail the plan for appointment of Mellon. The fact that Mellon is one of the bitterest and hardest of the anti-labor magnates in the iron and steel district has had no weight at all.

If Mellon is rejected because of the prohibition sentiment, we may be sure that someone with equally bad industrial prejudices will be in the cabinet. John Hays Hammond, whom not even Taft dared select as head of a department, is mentioned as likely to be Secretary of the Interior, or Secretary of Commerce. Weeks of Massachusetts, who may be made Secretary of the Treasury in place of Mellon, was to have been Secretary of War. In either job he will be anti-labor, and the organized employes of the Government will have to face in his deparmtent a spiritual twin of Cal. Coolidge and Albert Sidney Burleson.

Politicians' Actions Doubted

For Secretary of Labor the favorite seems still to be John I. Nolan of San Francisco, backed by the demand of Senator Hiram Johnson. But this week a new candidate—Capt. Percy Tetlow, of Salem, O.—has been put in the field by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America. Tetlow has been an officer of the U. M. W. A. for 20 years. He served in the Ohio legislature two terms, was a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and is now statistician of the U. M. W. A. in Indianapolis headquarters. During the Great War he was captain of a machine gun company in France. He is described by the miners as a lifelong regular Republican, and as having served actively on State committees of that party in 1916 and 1900 in getting out the labor vote for Hughes and Harding.

Just what a regular Republican who was also a trade union official could do or say in a meeting of the sort of cabinet that is being picked for Harding, is difficult to guess. A former Bull Moose, like Nolan, could at least get some amusement from the fighting that would develop.

Opinions differ sharply upon the question as to the temper of the people at large toward these fossil politicians whom an anti-Wilson avalanche has landed in control of the Government for the next two or four years. From the Far West and from New England the reports are that the people are ready to take radical action if the new Congress does not curb the profiteers—especially the meat packers, the coal operators and dealers, the textile manufacturers and the shoe manufacturers and wholesalers. From the Middle States the reports are less positive; people seem to be drifting and ready to accept anything that may be handed out to them, so long as no further steps are taken leading toward a new war.

On that point—gradual disarmament and reduction of the army—all the politicians are agreed that the country has made up its mind. The voters are tired of paying for wars, past and future. They want to get rid of the army and reduce the navy, by agreement with the big powers abroad.

The President got just one vote in the Senate to uphold his veto of the reduction of the army from 280,000 to 175,000 men. That is the most severe rebuke ever given any President on any question by the Senate.

It is possible that public opinion against the profiteers and the anti-labor conspirators will presently be brought home to the politicians in quite as definite a way. If it is, then we shall see the politicians scrambling to enact bills which pretend, at least, to bring the profiteers under control and safeguard the rights of the organized labor movement.

But that is in the future, and highly uncertain.

A home built in 1683 of heavy oak timbers with a field stone foundation is still in excellent condition in Lopsfield, Massachusetts. It has been taken over by an historical society.

demand of contracting painters, who asked that rates be cut from 90 cents an hour to 75 cents, was given a hot reception by House Painters' union No. 634.

The unionists declined, and in a public statement told the reason why. The employers were notified that "they are not dealing with a group of first-grade school children," and that if the union concludes to go into the contracting business "the fur will fly."

Heartless Coal Owners

The heartlessness of coal owners in the West Virginia section is shown in a statement issued by them in which they assail striking miners who have been evicted from company houses and are forced to live in tents with their wives and children against the snow-covered mountains.

The coal owners declare that the miners would rather live in this condition than work.

against that, but if experience would prove that it were a good thing to take that form of organization for a while, any way, until certain acute problems had been solved, I might be willing to run a chance, but experience all points the other way.

In economic organizations, in political organizations, in religious organizations, in social organizations, the whole history of the world proves, if it proves anything, that the greater degree of freedom that you give to men, the greater results you obtain, if you recognize that it is freedom that you stand for. Of course, if you haven't got that thought in your mind, and you think that it is merely a question of juggling for control, one seeking for power over the other, one seeking to control the other, then you don't get anywhere. Very often that spirit enters our councils, but if you seek as you ought to seek, in a spirit of equality between men, with a desire to find out what it is the other fellow has on his mind, how he feels about his peculiar problems, and to present your problems to him with the idea of establishing understanding and good will between you, that will enable you to move on together; then you do get results.

I have been one of those who for some years have stood for a greater unification and solidification in the International Seamen's Union, not through the agency of a growing centralized power, but through the establishment of a greater degree of understanding and good will among the officers and members of the organization. Power won't make us go together when it is used in a way that we feel is improper; then we rebel against it; power in itself is suspicious and arouses suspicion in us. It never works over a long period of time anywhere. But good will and understanding does work, and when you get it on that basis you are safe and you can go through with it. That does not arouse suspicion, there is no distrust fostered by that, but rather good feeling and comradeship. Then you don't care about rules, you go shoulder to shoulder, one with the other, taking your chances more willingly, standing together more solidly by far than if there stood over you some one with a club, and said: "Here, you come together or your heads will be broken." And this theory of centralization is just that—a club over the membership, the District officers and every one else concerned.

Of course, that is not the feeling of those who presented this resolution. They have the thought of good will, that is their purpose, but not having gone into the problems of the past and not having seen how these things have worked out, they seek the general military form of organization, a very simple form, everybody get together under one head and by one general order. That is military, pure and simple, but it does not work anywhere successfully outside of military operations, and it only works there because of the tremendous power of instant punishment placed in the hands of leaders of armies and navies. There is no government anywhere that uses that kind of system that any man will stand up and say it is a good government.

What is it we call a good government? That which gives the greatest degree of power and recognition to its people, the right of free locomotion, etc. That is recognized on all sides, and we apply it to all forms of organization as the measures by which we determine the value of human society. But some of us, because of quibblings and misunderstandings arising between ourselves, say: "Well, the thing to do is to get together in one organization; then we can get them to pull together and we won't have this trouble." I say, Mr. Chairman, we have tried that and have had worse trouble by far. Under this system, wherever organizations have become firmly established for a period of years, at first there was misunderstandings and all of that, but that gradually disappeared, and with it disappeared the necessity of hard and fast rules. They got together, closer and closer, until now one does not think of acting without another.

I think that instead of adopting resolutions of this kind—and I am in accord with the committee's report—this convention ought to consider some way of more effectively working towards the establishment of a better understanding of our international movement, a higher degree of good will and co-operation between the various units of the organization. I think we have been tremendously weak in one respect in that our International Union, between conventions, has limited its direct representation to a couple of men, and most of the time in our history, those men have been on part time only. I notice in the report of the Secretary-Treasurer and the report of the Committee on Audit that our International salary list is less than what many single officers, Presidents or Secretaries of such organizations as State Federations of Labor are paid in this country. The cause is that it is part time work.

I think we have arrived at the stage where such questions as come up in this resolution ought to be given mighty serious consideration. If we continue as we are now, with the tremendously large organization we now have, there will be good cause and strong argument as against what we do now for such resolutions as have been presented to us. We have got to go further along the route of establishing good will and co-operation on a free basis, or we will have to accept some other system. If not, we will ultimately find division within our ranks. I think it means simply extending the policy we have already adopted, carrying it a little further, providing the means whereby an international understanding can be kept before the membership generally throughout the year.

I do not speak in a spirit of criticism, Mr. Chairman, and I don't want to be understood in that sense. It is not that the officers have failed in any respect; if there be any failure, surely I am as responsible as any one, because I hold that every member of the International Executive Board has as great a duty in reference to the international movement as any other member. But there hasn't been the opportunity in the past. The opportunity is now here, the organization that we have all longed for is here, well financed, great in numbers, the right kind of spirit being shown, quibbling and quarreling referred to less in this convention than any other I have ever attended. The time is here when we can do these things, and I hope there will come before this convention from one of the committees something dealing with that question.

The remedy is the establishment of good will, of good feeling, of co-operation, of a general understanding, a general trust, the weeding out of suspicion. That is what you rely upon in your strikes, when your boys go out on the picket line and take their chances. It is not power that holds them there, it is not the rule of the organization that keeps them there, it is not fear that keeps them there, it is not even the knowledge that there are a whole lot of men willing to help them, but it is good will and understanding of the cause that makes a fellow go out and take chances, even when he finds his organization going down and dwindling.

Let us devote our attention towards arousing that complete understanding of the purposes and objects of our international movement, arousing and understanding in the case of the sailor, the fireman and the cook, an understanding with reference to the other branches of the trade. When we get that we will pull together, and until we do get together there isn't any chain ever forged that will ever pull us together. Understanding, good will, co-operation and a lack of suspicion and distrust is the thing we have got to have and the thing to which the International Union should now direct its attention.

We can proceed to do that without the revision of the Constitution, without the establishment of new rules. The machinery for it is here now, we are ready and can go ahead, and from what I have seen and heard among the delegates, I think we are all of the same mind. I hope there will come some general proposition that will show us a way out, whereby our activities in the international sense can be extended and a better understanding reached in that way.

Delegate Ellison, in supporting the report of the committee, stated that while he was an ardent advocate of solidarity and unity, as a means of avoiding jurisdictional disputes, he did not believe the adoption of the resolution would work out to the best interests of the various divisions of the organization. The end.

Inasmuch as the record of proceedings will shortly be obtainable as usual in book form, this concludes the Journal's summary.

Labor News

Wages of 6,000 metal trade workers in New Orleans will be reduced 10 per cent. March 15, according to Thomas Killeen, chairman of the adjustment committee of the employers. No question of unionism or open shop was involved, it was stated.

Every resource at the command of the International Ladies' Garment Workers union will be thrown into the fight against re-establishment in the Eastern States of the piecework system. The desire of some employers to re-introduce the sweat shops which are the creatures of this system, will be contested to the limit. Assessments have been levied by the union to carry on the fight for living conditions to the workers.

Fur manufacturers of St. Paul, Minn., have signed a union shop agreement with their organized employes which calls for the 44-hour week, no piece work and minimum weekly rates that range from $36 to $55 for cutters and matchers and $34 to $39 for nailers. No worker shall be discharged on account of union activities outside of working hours and overtime shall be paid for at the rate of time and one-half.
